On the 19th of January of this year the House of Representatives passed the Lever agricultural extension bill. When this bill becomes fully operative each State will receive $10,000 a year from the Nation, and in addition the sum of $3,000,000 yearly will be allotted among the several States in the proportion which their rural population bears to the total rural population of the United States as determined by the next preceding Federal census. So far as Massachusetts is concerned there is a "joker" concealed in this language: The Census Bureau defines as "urban population" that which resides "in cities and other incorporated places of 2,500 inhabitants or more, including the New England towns of that population." Only the portion of the population which is not "urban" under this definition is to be treated as "rural," and hence is legally permitted to receive assistance under this bill. We all know that in New England there are many towns of which the population is almost wholly given over to agriculture or other rural pursuits, and yet which have a population, taking the town as a unit, of well over 2,500 people. Take the fifth district of Massachusetts, which I represent. The following towns, Andover, Methuen, Ayer, Billerica, Chelmsford, Concord, Dracut, Hudson, Maynard, Pepperell, Reading, Tewkesbury, and Westford, as well as the cities of Lowell and Woburn, all have a population of more than 2,500, and hence, although in very large measure "rural" in any true sense of that word, are absolutely excluded in the computation prescribed by the bill. Indeed, out of the 209,000 people in the fifth district, 189,000, or over 90 per cent, are so excluded.

The table prepared by the authors of the bill shows that of the $3,000,000 less than one-half of 1 per cent, or $14,700, will go to Massachusetts. Yet probably Massachusetts will contribute, through income tax, customs, and internal revenues, from $150,000 to $200,000 of the total $3,000,000. In other words, this provision of the bill is actually costing Massachusetts somewhere between $135,000 and $185,000. We like to be philanthropic and charitable, but can it be expected that we shall be especially enthusiastic over such legislation as this?

But 7 per cent of the total population of Massachusetts is "rural" under the arbitrary definition adopted by the census; but 3 per cent of Rhode Island is thus "rural," and but 10 per cent of Connecticut. Yet the Southern States range from 70 to 88 per cent "rural," and grow fat accordingly under this bill. South Carolina, the home of Mr. Lever, the author of the bill, for example, has a "rural" population of 85 per cent. It is not surprising that he is cordial about the proposed plan.

There is a further argument, so far as Massachusetts and the fifth district of Massachusetts are concerned, against the Lever bill. Its avowed purpose is the desirable one of "diffusing among the people of the United States useful and practical information on subjects relating to agriculture and home economics." This is, of course, laudable; but there are also large industrial interests in Massachusetts which are not connected with farms but yet which are in need of instruction in domestic economy. Massachusetts has a very large mill population, where the need of domestic economy in managing the home is acute. Yet there is absolutely no provision for these people in the Lever bill. Why should it not be so applied as to do justice to all classes in the community? Even the 10 per cent of the fifth district people who live in towns within the purview of the bill may largely, as individuals, find themselves outside its scope because not engaged in the sort of occupation which entitles them to apply; and, on the other hand, very many people making up the 90 per cent excluded ought, except on this arbitrary distinction, to be welcomed and aided among the first.

It is perhaps to be expected that the older, more densely populated and wealthier States should contribute to the Lever bill more than they receive; but it does seem as if the discrepancy in this particular case was out of all reason and, being in the first place founded upon an absurd premise, ought not to be tolerated.

VI. RURAL POST ROADS.

House bill 11686, which passed the House to-day, carries a provision for the expenditure for rural post roads of $25,000,000 a year. One-half of this amount is distributed among the several States in the proportion which the total number of miles of rural post roads in use in each State bears to the total number in all the States. It is a pork-barrel measure of the most extreme kind, with the South the distributor and consumer of the pork.

We saw that in the case of the agricultural extension bill. Massachusetts, contributing 6 or 7 per cent of the revenues of the United States, is to receive back less than one-half of 1 per cent. Under this bill it will receive two-thirds of 1 per cent, or $78,000, out of the twelve and one-half million dollars, but will turn into the Treasury nearly a million dollars for the fund. No one claims that Massachusetts roads are what they should be, but everyone knows that they are vastly better than in most parts of the country. Furthermore, while, of course, road improving will properly be one of our great tasks of the future, yet it is equally true that the road making of Massachusetts is largely a thing of the past, while in the States of the South it is largely a thing of the future. And yet Massachusetts is to pay its own way and that of some of the other States as well. Massachusetts, which has tried throughout its history to do its full duty in connection with roads, is for its pains to have to bear a huge share of the burden of the States which have been less public spirited in this respect. Under this bill, for example, out of the twelve and one-half million dollars Alabama gets $286,000; Georgia, $415,000; Virginia, $308,000; Tennessee, $407,000; South Carolina, $207,000; Oklahoma, $346,000; North Carolina, $358,000; Missouri, $568,000; Mississippi, $227,000; Kentucky, $270,000; Texas, $593,000, and so forth.

The figures which I have cited are taken from the report which accompanied the introduction of the bill into the House. I am not entirely certain that as a result of some of the amendments offered during the debate the figures as given will not be somewhat altered, but I am entirely clear that the proportion will be maintained, and that, therefore, the figures as shown fairly represent the general effect of the bill as it leaves the House and goes to the Senate.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ROGERS. For a question.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does the gentleman in his figures take into consideration all those vast sums of money that the United States, or that Congress, has been, by means of the tariff, legislating into the pockets of New England?

Mr. ROGERS. The gentleman has just come into the Hall?

Mr. McKELLAR. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. I have attempted to cover that suggestion in the early part of my remarks. Of course, Massachusetts is an older State, and because of its age has necessarily received more in some respects than the newer States; but I have tried to show—and I will refer the gentleman from Tennessee to the early part of my remarks—that it has not in any aspect received the proportion of appropriations in the past which were rightfully its own.

Mr. McKELLAR. Has the gentleman prepared any figures showing the amount that has been legislated into the pockets of the people of Massachusetts by means of the tariff legislation in the last 40 years?

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman knows that sort of a computation could not be obtained from any books or derived from any source whatever. Massachusetts has undoubtedly prospered under Republican rule. Is that anything to be ashamed of? We have, moreover, always been willing and eager to share that prosperity with the gentleman's own State of Tennessee and with every other State. All we ask to-day is that our generosity of the past shall not be wholly forgotten.

Some people seem to think that there is a kind of magic in a Federal appropriation; that it, with a Midas-like touch, creates the sum appropriated. The fact is that every cent must come out of our pockets, through direct or indirect taxation; and, as I have reiterated, the pockets of Massachusetts are emptied faster in proportion than any theory of reason or logic can defend.

THE EXPLANATION.

The question has occasionally been asked me, Why does the South so dominate the counsels of the Democratic Party in Congress? Is it not a fact that the 15 Southern States have but 132 Members in the House of Representatives as against 167 Members contributed by the northern and western Democracy?

The explanation is simple. Long service in the House means chairmanships, and chairmanships mean a power out of all proportion to the numerical strength of those wielding it. There are 58 committees in the House of Representatives. Of these 26 may be disregarded for our purpose as not especially important along legislative lines. Of the 32 remaining chairmanships—all of important committees—31 are held by Representatives from the following Southern States: Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Florida, Alabama, Oklahoma, Texas, Arkansas, Tennessee, Missouri, and Kentucky. The only exception is Mr. FITZGERALD, of New York, chairman of the Committee on Appropriations. These 12 Southern States represent but 15 per cent of the developed resources of the United States, but 23 per cent of the area, but 28 per cent of the population, and but 28 per cent of the membership of the House; yet these 31 men have a power of enacting or of preventing legislation which is almost supreme and which it is difficult to overemphasize.

Mr. McKELLAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. ROGERS. Very briefly.

Mr. McKELLAR. Does not the gentleman think that if Massachusetts had been doing her duty by sending Democratic Congressmen here for the same period of time that the South has been she would have fared just as well?

Mr. ROGERS. I recognize that from the standpoint of every Member who is seated in the House at the present time the argument is that he ought to be returned again and again, whether from the North or the South, whether of the Republican or the Democratic persuasion.

Mr. Chairman, how did these 32 men gain their appointment as chairmen? Was it by reason of signal ability or of preeminent public service in Congress or elsewhere? Not at all. Their elevation is almost wholly due to the fact that they were senior in point of service. Of the 32 men, one has served 12 terms in Congress, two have served 10 terms, seven have served 9 terms, four have served 8 terms, five have served 7 terms, three have served 6 terms, two have served 5 terms, five have served 4 terms, and three have served 3 terms, making a total of 219 terms, or an average of about 7 terms per man. Perhaps I may add in passing that 8 of the other 26 chairmen of the committees which I have designated as minor are also southerners.

The 145 Members of Congress from the 15 Southern States have served an average of 3.13 terms prior to the Sixty-third Congress; the 205 Representatives from the Northeastern States of the Union have served an average of 1.38 terms prior to the Sixty-third Congress. Thus the southern Members have served almost two and one-half times as long, on an average, as the men from the Northeastern States. As I indicated at the outset, this fact is responsible for chairmanships, and chairmanships are largely responsible for the power wielded by the South. Thus, of the 132 southern Democrats, 40, or about 30 per cent, are chairmen of committees, while of the 167 northern and western Democrats but 18, or a little over 10 per cent, are chairmen of committees. The Philadelphia North American, perhaps the leading Progressive Party organ of the United States, referring in a general way to the conditions here outlined, said on January 21 last:

> Since the issue is put before us, it may be well to state the reasons why we do not favor the election of Democratic candidates to Congress.
> With only here and there an exception, the representatives of that party differ from us respecting vital economic policies. We reject their view of the tariff; we believe in true protection; they do not, but advocate a tariff for revenue only, or, in many cases, something more akin to free trade.
> We dissent from their position upon the control of money and credit; they are for lodging that control in the hands of the bankers; we hold that it should be a public matter—that the power is one which should never be surrendered to private interests.
> We believe in the "new nationalism," as against their worn-out doctrine of State rights. We believe in the sovereignty of the Nation as a whole respecting all matters essentially of national concern; they believe in the sovereignty of the several States—a doctrine which has done much to make impotent public control of far-reaching evils, and to create "twilight zones" wherein powerful interests have operated with impunity against the public interest.
> For these reasons we look with apprehension upon the rapid concentration of the control of the governmental machinery in the hands of the southern Democracy. We believe, further, that they are actuated by patriotic motives, while many of their northern colleagues are but soldiers of fortune. But on political and economic questions they hold views and strong convictions diametrically opposed to those which we share, and perilous, we believe, to the interests of the Nation.
> They are, many of them, the sons and grandsons of the old aristocratic rulers of the South; they have inherited, and sincerely hold, a sympathetic attitude toward plutocracy and special privilege.
> Readers of this paper know better than to suspect us, in this, of sectional prejudice. We are not discussing the war, but the economic issues which caused it. That conflict was the result of adherence to principles economically wrong, yet still exhibited by potent leaders of the South. It is for this reason that we regard with genuine alarm the possibility of this Government's passing into complete control of these men, however pure in motive and honest in conviction they may be.
> Anyone who imagines that we express a far-fetched view should consider the evidences that it is widely shared throughout the Nation, even though it is seldom formulated in words. Surely it is significant that all political writers and competent observers agree on one point:

The Democratic Party is not growing; during the first year of a triumphant Democratic administration the party is, if anything, losing in strength. The party is not attracting the recruits that might have been expected to flock to its standard. Every by-election emphasizes this condition.

The reason for it is that the people of this Nation are progressive and that they are distrustful of the growing domination of the Democratic Party by its southern leaders, who, able as they are, hold a political and economic philosophy which has not changed for 50 years and is completely at variance with the spirit of the times.

It must not be overlooked that the southern conception of the obligations resting upon the voters and upon the candidates for and holders of public office is materially and strikingly different from that entertained in the North. For example, in South Carolina it is provided that "the managers at the primary election shall require every voter in a Democratic primary election to pledge himself to abide the results of the primary and to support the nominees of the party, and to take the following oath and pledge, namely, 'I do solemnly * * * pledge myself to support the nominees of this primary.'" The result of this provision obviously is that every voter in a South Carolina Democratic primary, which is the only primary held in the State, even including the unsuccessful candidates, is shackled beyond hope of escape to the successful nominee; is bound to support such nominee, and can not properly seek even to contest a nomination improperly gained. I need not dwell upon the difference between this point of view and that of Massachusetts, where the fullest independence of thought and action is permitted—yes, even encouraged—both by law and by custom. And this is not all. Every South Carolina candidate for the United States Senate or for the United States House of Representatives is legally obligated to take the following additional pledge: "I will support the political principles and policies of the Democratic Party during the term of office for which I may be elected, and work in accord with my Democratic associates in Congress on all party questions." We Members of this House, before taking our seats, have each taken the following oath: "I do solemnly swear that I will support and defend the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, foreign and domestic; that I will bear true faith and allegiance to the same; that I take this obligation freely, without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion; and that I will well and faithfully discharge the duties of the office on which I am about to enter." Yet the South Carolinian oath squarely and unblushingly puts party above country. If the two obligations conflict, which will the South Carolinian in Congress choose to break?—for choose he must. Can it be truly said that in taking the required oath in this House April 7 last the South Carolinian Members did so "without any mental reservation or purpose of evasion"?

While I am upon this subject perhaps I may be pardoned for a brief digression while I refer to another provision of South Carolina law which would be amusing if it were not tragic. Every negro offering to vote in the primary must, besides fulfilling all other requirements imposed upon the whites, produce written certificates of 10 reputable white Democratic voters "who shall swear that they know of their own knowledge that the applicant or voter voted for Gen. Hampton in 1876, and has voted the Democratic ticket continuously since." O glorious Constitution of the United States, which decrees that the right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude!

Such is the condition which confronts us. As I have more than once pointed out, it is even less pleasant for Democratic Members of Congress representing the Northern States than for us Republican Members. For they are tied hand and foot by caucus action dictated by the southerners who control their party. The northern Members of Congress of the Democratic faith are, I believe, as patriotic as the Republican Members, and yet through party exigency they are repeatedly forced to surrender their preferences, to vote against their convictions, and to swallow medicine which they know will be detrimental to the best interests of those they serve. This is a time of keen striving for business supremacy. We can not perhaps criticize the southern Representatives for seeking to gain the lion's share for their people. But on what ground, conditions being as they are, can we of the North, either from the standpoint of conscience or of good sense, give away our birthright and surrender to others the things we most value? I repeat that I am not seeking to raise any issue of sectionalism, but I also declare with all emphasis that every dictate of prudence, of fairness, and of sound patriotism demands that we be accorded what is rightfully our own. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12579, the Indian appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

INTERNATIONAL COMMISSION OF PHYTOPATHOLOGY.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to consider at the present time House joint resolution 211, authorizing the President to accept an invitation to participate in an International Commission of Phytopathology.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I hope the gentleman will not call that up until there are more Members present.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I will say to the gentleman that the resolution authorizes the President to accept an invitation to appoint a delegate to this commission, which meets on the 24th of February, 1914, in the city of Rome. Unless the resolution goes through Congress this week, the delegate could not get to Rome by the time the commission met. It is a matter that the Department of Agriculture considers of very great importance with reference to the shipment of plants to this country, many plants being shipped here that have diseases. The President and the Secretary of State and the Secretary of Agriculture have all written letters asking this authority be given the President, and I can not see that there is any serious objection to it. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] does not object, I do not think anybody else will, even if there be a full House present.

Mr. MANN. I do not know. I have no doubt that this is an emergency matter and that the Speaker will treat it as such, but the gentleman will see that from the number of Members here to-night that no one expected that this would be called up.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. This is a House resolution, and it has to go through the Senate. I was visited to-day by some gentlemen from the Agriculture Department, and they thought unless it got through to-day it would not be likely to get through the Senate this week. Unless it gets through Congress this week they could not reach Rome until after the meeting of the commission.

Mr. MANN. That is probably true, and yet that is not our fault. It is only recently they have called this matter to the attention of Congress.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. That is very true; but I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. MANN. Well, I will have to object to-night.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. That ends it.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. EDWARDS, for five days, on account of death in his family.

To Mr. GRAY, for three days, on account of illness.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 52 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Wednesday, February 11, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the assistant clerk of the Court of Claims, transmitting findings of fact and conclusions in the case of Charles A. Varnum v. the United States (H. Doc. No. 727), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Claims, and ordered to be printed.

REPORT OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. CLARK of Florida, from the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 3988) for the purchase of a building and lot as a mine-rescue station at McAlester, Okla., reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 244), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. HENSLEY: A bill (H. R. 13168) to prohibit the importation and entry of goods, wares, and merchandise made in

By Mr. RAINEY: A bill (H. R. 13175) to purchase and erect in the city of Washington the group of statuary known as The Indian Buffalo Hunt; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. CARR: A bill (H. R. 13176) to provide for improving the exterior of the Frankford Arsenal, Philadelphia; to the Committee on Appropriations.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13177) appropriating $77,000 for improvements at the Frankford Arsenal, Philadelphia, Pa.; to the Committee on Appropriations.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13178) to provide for the acquirement of about 25 acres of land adjoining the Frankford Arsenal, Philadelphia, including the right of way owned in fee simple by the railroad crossing this land, etc.; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland: A bill (H. R. 13179) to promote efficiency of instruction at the Naval Academy by providing for the systematic appointment and compensation of professors and instructors on the teaching staff; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

By Mr. HAWLEY: A bill (H. R. 13180) to amend the act of March 4, 1913 (37 U. S. Stats., p. 872), so as to provide that in the construction of the public building at Roseburg, Oreg., provision shall be made for the accommodation therein of the United States post office, land office, forest service, weather bureau, and Indian agent; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. THACHER: A bill (H. R. 13181) authorizing the sale of the lighthouse reservation at Scituate, Mass.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. SMITH of Idaho: A bill (H. R. 13182) making an appropriation for the construction of a highway through the Targhee National Forest from Warm River, Idaho, to Yellowstone, on the edge of the Yellowstone National Park; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. MONDELL: A bill (H. R. 13183) providing for the payment to Fremont County, Wyo., in lieu of taxes, of certain sums received on coal leases; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. GLASS (by request): A bill (H. R. 13184) to provide a new method of collecting revenue from tobacco, etc.; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. NEELY of West Virginia: A bill (H. R. 13185) to provide for the erection of a public building at Weston, W. Va.; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

By Mr. MURRAY of Massachusetts: A memorial requesting the Secretary of the Navy to award the contract for the construction of a supply ship to the Charlestown Navy Yard; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ASHBROOK: A bill (H. R. 13186) granting an increase of pension to John H. Blessing; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13187) granting an increase of pension to George S. Smith; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BROWN of West Virginia: A bill (H. R. 13188) for the relief of Jessie W. Graham, sole heir of Jesse Graham, deceased; to the Committee on War Claims.

By Mr. BROWNE of Wisconsin: A bill (H. R. 13189) granting an increase of pension to Didama Colby; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. BURNETT: A bill (H. R. 13190) granting an increase of pension to William P. Gwin; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CANTRILL: A bill (H. R. 13191) granting an increase of pension to Mrs. Lucien Young; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. GERRY: A bill (H. R. 13192) granting an increase of pension to Mary E. Harris; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13193) granting an increase of pension to Frederick D. Thomas; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13194) for the relief of Roy S. Shepard; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13195) to remove the charge of desertion now existing on the records of the War Department against William E. Smith; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois: A bill (H. R. 13196) granting an increase of pension to Thomas F. Stevens; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HUGHES of West Virginia: A bill (H. R. 13197) granting an increase of pension to John P. Hinkel; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. MONDELL: A bill (H. R. 13198) for the relief of Bybee & Beard, of Lander, Wyo.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. REILLY of Wisconsin: A bill (H. R. 13199) granting a pension to John H. Wynn; to the Committee on Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13200) granting an increase of pension to Alfred F. Stier; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. ROTHERMEL: A bill (H. R. 13201) granting an increase of pension to George W. Rank; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SELLS: A bill (H. R. 13202) granting a pension to Thomas Sloan; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13203) granting an increase of pension to Samuel F. Stanley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13204) granting an increase of pension to Cephas S. Stover; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13205) authorizing the Secretary of War to donate condemned cannon and cannon balls; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SHACKLEFORD: A bill (H. R. 13206) granting a pension to William P. Reed; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13207) granting a pension to Joseph Reynolds; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. STEENERSON: A bill (H. R. 13208) for the relief of W. H. Neal; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SUTHERLAND: A bill (H. R. 13209) granting an increase of pension to John Right; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. UNDERHILL: A bill (H. R. 13210) granting a pension to Charlotte R. Thornton; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13211) granting a pension to Mary H. De Waine; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13212) granting a pension to Susan M. Perry; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13213) granting a pension to Daniel Updike; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13214) granting an increase of pension to Albert H. Shears; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13215) granting an increase of pension to James D. Gload; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. WILLIAMS: A bill (H. R. 13216) granting an increase of pension to Amos Baccus; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 13217) granting a pension to Julia A. Doolan; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. CURRY: A bill (H. R. 13218) granting a pension to Joseph H. Ransom; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

By the SPEAKER (by request): Petition of certain citizens of Missouri, protesting against the "One hundred years of peace celebration"; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

Also (by request), petition of the General Society of Mayflower Descendants, favoring "One hundred years of peace celebration"; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. AINEY: Petition of the Grange National Bank, of Troy, Pa., favoring amendment to income-tax law; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

Also, petition of citizens of Bradford and Wayne Counties, Pa., favoring pure fabric and leather bill; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. ASHBROOK: Petitions of E. L. Lord and 3 other citizens of Newark, Ohio, protesting against national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

Also, memorial of Seventh-day Adventist Church, of Killbuck, Ohio, favoring national prohibition; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, February 11, 1914.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, Thou dost not separate Thyself from us, but Thou dost shepherd us with an infinite tenderness and compassion. Thou dost lead us into the fullest achievements of life, the largest and most abundant provision for life. So close is God to man that, though he walk through the valley of the shadow of death, he shall fear no evil, because Thou art with us and Thou dost comfort us. Thou dost bring us at last into the fuller revelations of life that Thou hast made known unto men in Him who came as the only begotten Son of a Father full of grace and truth. To-day let His blessing rest upon the mind and heart of these Thy servants. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

DISPOSITION OF USELESS PAPERS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair lays before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Treasury transmitting, pursuant to law, schedules and lists of papers, documents, and so forth, on the files of the department which are not needed in the transaction of public business and having no permanent value or historical interest. The communication and accompanying papers will be referred to the Joint Select Committee on the Disposition of Useless Papers in the Executive Departments, and the Chair appoints the Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE] members of the committee on the part of the Senate. The Secretary will notify the House of Representatives of the appointment thereof.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 11686) to provide that the United States shall in certain cases aid the States and the civil subdivisions thereof in the construction and maintenance of rural post roads, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House had agreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 8667) to promote the efficiency of the Naval Militia, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

The message further announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. R. 8667) to promote the efficiency of the Naval Militia, and for other purposes, and it was thereupon signed by the Vice President.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. OLIVER. I have received telegrams in the nature of petitions from various patriotic fraternities in the State of Pennsylvania, requesting favorable action on the so-called immigration bill. I ask that one of the telegrams may be read and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read as requested.

The telegram was read and referred to the Committee on Immigration, as follows:

[Telegram.]

PITTSBURGH, PA., February 10, 1914.

Hon. GEORGE T. OLIVER,
Washington, D. C.

HONORABLE SIR: The Federation of American Patriotic Fraternities of Allegheny County, Pa., is a body consisting of representatives from 188 lodges, who are authorized to take action in behalf of said lodges, which lodges represent more than 30 per cent of the voting population of Allegheny County. By unanimous resolution, we urge your every effort to secure the passage of bill H. R. 6060, commonly known as the immigration bill, in the form passed by the House of Representatives, without alteration, and that you request the printing of this telegram in the RECORD.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. SHIELDS submitted two amendments intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus claims bill, which were referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

TEXAS STATE CLAIMS.

Mr. SHEPPARD. For my colleague, Mr. CULBERSON, I submit an amendment intended to be proposed to the general deficiency appropriation bill, which I ask may be read and referred to the appropriate committee.

There being no objection, the amendment was read and referred to the Committee on Appropriations, as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. SHEPPARD (for Mr. CULBERSON) to the bill (H. R. ——) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year 1914 and for prior years, and for other purposes, viz, add the following:

"To reimburse the State of Texas in full payment of all claims of any nature whatever on account of expenses incurred by that State prior to February 9, 1861, the payment of which was provided for in appropriation acts enacted by the Legislature of the State of Texas, and approved on February 13, 1858, February 3, 1860, and February 8, 1861, respectively, for the pay and maintenance of State volunteers or rangers called into service by authority of the governor of Texas in defense of the Texas frontier against Mexican marauders and Indian depredators, for which reimbursement has not been made out of the Treasury of the United States, as ascertained under the act of Congress approved March 3, 1905, and certified in House Document No. 551, Sixty-second Congress, second session, $217,693.39."

Mr. SHEPPARD. In connection with the amendment I submit a statement prepared by Mr. A. J. Clopton, assistant clerk of the Judiciary Committee, of which Senator CULBERSON is chairman. I ask that the statement be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Appropriations to accompany the amendment.

There being no objection, the statement was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STATEMENT AS TO ADDITIONAL CLAIM OF THE STATE OF TEXAS FOR REIMBURSEMENT OF MONEYS EXPENDED IN FRONTIER DEFENSE PRIOR TO FEBRUARY 9, 1861.

Senator CULBERSON presented the matter of the additional claim of the State of Texas for reimbursement of moneys expended in frontier defense to the Senate July 17, 1911. (S. Doc. 67, 62d Cong., 1st sess.)

The Adjutant General of the United States Army, acting under Mr. CULBERSON'S former resolution of February 1, 1905, investigated the claim so presented, and on February 17, 1912, the Secretary of War transmitted a report to the House of Representatives, showing that, exclusive of interest, the claim of the State for which it had not been reimbursed aggregated $198,628.80; and with interest, which the Adjutant General stated should probably be allowed, as the State had paid 10 per cent interest for varying periods on the debt, it was $217,693.39. (H. Doc. 551, 62d Cong., 2d sess., p. 7.)

Mr. CULBERSON accordingly prepared an amendment to the general deficiency appropriation bill (62d Cong., 2d sess.) calling for an appropriation of the latter and larger amount stated by The Adjutant General, and this amount was added to the bill by the Senate Committee on Appropriations and passed by the Senate, but was rejected, together with several other State claims, by the House conferees, after a prolonged conference lasting many hours (Aug. 22 to 26, 1912).

In view of the fact that the Senate has heretofore agreed to the larger amount and The Adjutant General of the Army was of the opinion that it should be allowed, it is suggested that that amount should now be asked. The amendment is accordingly prepared in that view.

It will be noticed that the final date of expense incurred by the State for which reimbursement is asked is fixed at February 9, 1861, although a few of the items aggregating only a small amount are shown not to have been paid until subsequent thereto. (H. Doc. 551, pp. 56–60.) It is apparent, however, that all these items accrued before that date. This date is fixed since the secession convention of Texas sent delegates to the Confederate Congress, February 11, 1861, and about the same date the Texans captured and paroled some of the Federal troops then stationed in the State, although the ordinance of secession was not ratified by vote of the people until February 23, 1861. The amount involved in the interim, February 9 to March 4, is so small, however, that it was thought safe to fix a final limit, i. e., February 9, 1861, about which there could be no cavil.

HEARINGS BEFORE COMMITTEE ON MINES AND MINING.

Mr. WALSH submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 270), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Committee on Mines and Mining or any subcommittee thereof be, and the same is hereby, authorized to employ a stenographer from time to time as may be necessary to report such hearings as may be had on bills or other matters pending before said committee, and to have the hearings, bills, and such papers and documents as may be deemed necessary printed for the use of the committee, and that such stenographer be paid out of the contingent fund of the Senate.

THE PREFERENTIAL BALLOT.

Mr. HOLLIS. I ask leave to have printed as a Senate document an address on the preferential ballot, delivered in Washington in December last by Lewis Jerome Johnson, professor of civil engineering in Harvard University. I assume that under the rule it will have to be referred to the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER BRIDGE, HANNIBAL, MO.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the bill (S. 3625) to authorize the Missouri, Kansas & Texas Railway Co. to construct a bridge across the Mississippi River near the city of Hannibal, in the State of Missouri, returned to the Senate in compliance wtih its request.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move to reconsider the votes by which the bill was ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. SIMMONS. I move that the bill be postponed indefinitely.

The motion was agreed to.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

H. R. 11686. An act to provide that the United States shall in certain cases aid the States and the civil subdivisions thereof in the construction and maintenance of rural post roads, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

GEORGE W. HOYT.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed and the calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. WARREN. I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (S. 54) for the relief of George W. Hoyt. It is a very short bill.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Postmaster General to credit the accounts of George W. Hoyt, postmaster at Cheyenne, Wyo., in the sum of $11,236, due to the United States on account of money-order funds embezzled by Joseph Kingman, late assistant postmaster at Cheyenne, Wyo., in the year 1911.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Let me ask the Senator from Wyoming to give a brief statement as to the bill.

Mr. WARREN. The bill is one that passed the Senate in the last Congress but reached the House too late for consideration. It is a matter for which the Post Office Department has not asked a settlement, but the postmaster has gone out of office and desires to have the account closed.

It has had the consideration twice of the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads, once in the last Congress and once in the present Congress, and I think the committee was unanimous in reporting it favorably. It is a case where relief should be extended. The assistant postmaster was a civil-service man whom the postmaster found there in office when he himself was appointed and whom the department asked him to keep in place. He seems to have become obsessed years afterwards. The peculations covered the receipts of only a few days and were accomplished by holding out money and making altered and belated reports. The postmaster discovered that something was wrong and immediately asked the department to examine into it, which it did through an inspector. There was a shortage of something like $23,000. The postmaster immediately took over the property that the man had, and has disposed of it and paid the claim down to the amount proposed in the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Let me inquire, Was not the assistant under a bond?

Mr. WARREN. He was, but his bond was insufficient. It was a small bond. The business of the office had, of course, greatly enlarged during a few years. I may say that he was duly prosecuted, was sentenced and has served his term, and is now, I believe, out on parole and in charge of his brothers-in-law.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FISH-CULTURAL STATION ON LONG ISLAND, N. Y.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I ask unanimous consent for the consideration of the bill (S. 2811) to establish a fish-cultural station on Long Island, in the State of New York. I make this request in the interest of the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN]. It is similar to a bill which was passed yesterday.

Mr. SMOOT. I am not going to object to the consideration of this bill, but after its passage I shall ask for the regular order.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That will be all right. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Fisheries with an amendment, to add at the end the following proviso:

Provided, That before any final steps shall have been taken for the construction of a fish-cultural station in accordance with this act, the State of New York, through appropriate legislative action, shall accord to the United States Commissioner of Fisheries and his duly authorized agents the right to conduct fish hatching and all operations connected therewith in any manner and at any time that may by them be considered necessary and proper, any fishery laws of the State to the contrary notwithstanding: And provided further, That the operations of said hatchery may be suspended by the Secretary of Commerce whenever, in his judgment, the laws and regulations affecting the fishes cultivated are allowed to remain so inadequate as to impair the efficiency of said hatchery.

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the establishment of a fish-cultural station on Long Island, in the State of New York, including the purchase of site, construction of building, and equipment, at some suitable point to be selected by the Secretary of Commerce: Provided, That before any final steps shall have been taken for the construction of a fish-cultural station in accordance with this act—

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

Mr. SMOOT. Regular order, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The calendar, under Rule VIII, is in order.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 1) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, extending the right of suffrage to women, was announced as first in order.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, a number of Senators on both sides of the Chamber have signified a desire to speak on this joint resolution. In view of such statements, manifestly I can not urge the consideration of the joint resolution at this time. I therefore ask that it may go over, in order that Senators may have an opportunity to deliver their addresses on the subject.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution goes over.

LEGISLATIVE REFERENCE BUREAU.

The bill (S. 1240) to establish the legislative reference bureau of the Library of Congress was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

MEDAWAKANTON AND WAHPAKOOTA (SANTEE) SIOUX INDIANS.

The bill (S. 1760) for the restoration of annuities to the Medawakanton and Wahpakoota (Santee) Sioux Indians, declared forfeited by the act of February 16, 1863, was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

JURISDICTION OF LANDS IN GLACIER NATIONAL PARK.

The bill (S. 654) to accept the cession by the State of Montana of exclusive jurisdiction over the lands embraced within the Glacier National Park, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I have several amendments to offer to this bill, two that are of substance, to which I shall advert, and the others are perhaps verbal in character.

On page 4 of the bill are provisions which make the violation of any rule or regulation which may be established by the Secretary of the Interior for the government of the park a criminal offense, and they impose as penalty a fine of not more than $500 or imprisonment not exceeding two years, or both, and the costs of the proceedings. A commissioner is to be appointed under the provisions of this proposed act to try all violations of any rules or regulations, of course limited by such jurisdiction as he can exercise; any other offenses, over which he can not exercise jurisdiction, are to be tried in the United States District Court for the District of Montana. So it is with reference to any violations of law whatever. All violations that fall within his jurisdiction are tried by him, and any other violations of the law, that do not fall within his jurisdiction, are tried before the United States court.

Now, you will observe that this proposed act imposes a penalty which may be as much as imprisonment in the State prison for a period of two years for violations of rules established for the government of the park. A commissioner thus appointed does not constitute a court within the meaning of the Constitution of the United States; no jury can be impaneled as a part of the machinery of his court; and yet, Mr. President, you will observe that the mere violation of the rules that are laid down for the government of the park, outside of transgressions of the statutory law, may be punished by imprisonment for a period of two years. That characterizes them as felonies, and accordingly the commissioner could exercise no jurisdiction whatever; he would have nothing whatever to try, except petty offenses against the State law, which are by the provisions of the bill made punishable. Accordingly, if the commissioner is to exercise any jurisdiction whatever, you must very materially reduce the penalty that is to be inflicted under the provisions of the bill, so that he shall exercise jurisdiction.

The fifth amendment to the Constitution provides that:

No person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime unless on a presentment or indictment of a grand jury.

Likewise the sixth amendment guarantees to anyone thus accused the right of trial by jury. The question as to whether it is within the power of the Federal Government to constitute any kind of a tribunal before which any person may be brought to trial without having the issues of facts submitted to a jury is one involved in considerable obscurity. The Supreme Court of the United States has held that it is within the power of Congress to create the office of judge of the municipal court of the District of Columbia, who shall exercise jurisdiction over petty cases, civil and criminal, which cases may be tried in his court without the interposition of a jury. Just exactly how far Congress may go in thus vesting jurisdiction in these inferior tribunals is not very settled by the authorities; but it is clearly established that these tribunals have no jurisdiction whatever to try felonies; and, by statutory definition, any offense the penalty for which is imprisonment for a longer period than one year constitutes a felony.

Accordingly, Mr. President, it will become essential, in order to vest this officer with any jurisdiction at all, to reduce the penalty very materially. I may say in this connection that the bill follows in this respect the act providing for the government, for instance, of the Yellowstone National Park, but in the administration of the laws there they have found exactly the same difficulty, and the superintendent of that park has invited the attention of the department to the condition of the law and has suggested a reduction in the penalty prescribed, in order that petty violations of the rules for the government of the park may be tried before the commissioner and not be relegated for trial to the district court, where the expense of having it first heard before a grand jury and then afterwards before a petit jury may be considerable.

Then, Mr. President, a second objection is this: You will observe that under the provisions of section 4 the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to make rules and regulations, and a violation of any rule or regulation made "with reference to the management and care of the park or for the protection of the property therein, for the preservation from injury or spoliation of timber, mineral deposits, other than those legally located prior to the passage of the act of May 11, 1910 (36 Stats., p. 354), natural curiosities, or wonderful objects within said park, or for the protection of the animals, birds, or fish in the park," makes the offender liable, under the terms of the bill, without the amendment, to a fine of not more than $1,000 or to imprisonment for not more than two years.

Section 6 provides "that any person who shall, within the said above-mentioned park, commit any damage, injury, or spoliation to or upon any building, fence, hedge, gate, guidepost, tree, wood," and so forth, shall be held to be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction shall be subject to a fine of not more than $500 or to imprisonment for not more than 12 months, or both, in the discretion of the court.

The provisions of section 6 are entirely inconsistent with and repugnant to the provisions of section 4, and there is no reason at all why there should be any difference. You will observe that if a rule is made by the Secretary of the Interior for the government of the park for the preservation of the objects of natural beauty and that rule is violated, the offender is punishable by imprisonment for not more than two years; but, according to the provisions of section 6, if he does destroy any of the things he is made punishable by imprisonment not to exceed 12 months. I do not know of any reason why there should be any distinction there at all and why one penal provision should not be made applicable to all offenses which are calculated to destroy the beauty of the park.

I intend, therefore, to propose an amendment by which the two sections shall be thrown into one and one penalty shall be imposed for either a violation of the rules or for the actual vandalism which operates as a violation of the rules, and I propose to make the penalty with respect to all of those matters so low that it will fall within the jurisdiction of the commissioner and that the offenders may be brought before him and tried and punished if found guilty.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I entirely agree with the criticism which the Senator from Montana has made, but I want to direct his attention to this phase of the bill. The provision in section 4 is:

> That the Secretary of the Interior shall make and publish such rules and regulations as he may deem necessary and proper for the management and care of the park and for the protection of the property therein—

And so on. There is a further provision that any person found guilty of violating any rule or regulation which may be promulgated by the Secretary of the Interior with reference to the management and care of the park shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be punished as provided.

I know there has been great contrariety of opinion with reference to the authority of Congress to devolve upon an administrative officer the power to make rules and regulations which will be given the force of a criminal statute. I do not know whether or not the Supreme Court has finally passed upon the question.

Mr. WALSH. I think the Senator will find that it has.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. But it seems to me, independent of any decision, that it is for Congress to legislate, to declare what acts shall constitute a criminal offense, and to fix the punishment; and that when Congress directs an administrative officer by regulation in effect to enact a criminal statute, that is going beyond the authority of Congress and is an attempt to delegate legislative power to an administrative officer. As I have said, I am not familiar with any decision of the Supreme Court upon that subject. I know that the question has been up from time to time in connection with regulations made for the government of the forest reserves, the herding of sheep and cattle, the cutting of timber, and so on, and there has been, as I recall, a difference of opinion with reference to the validity of a statute which will authorize such regulations to be made, and giving them the force of a criminal statute. Now, what is the Senator's view of the power of Congress in that respect?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I am very sure the question has been determined by the Supreme Court within the last two years; and the forest-reserve statute which authorizes the Secretary of Agriculture to make rules and regulations and provides that violations of those rules and regulations shall constitute a criminal offense has been sustained by the Supreme Court of the United States. It was so held in the case of United States against Devastergines—my recollection is that that is the title of the case—but that is not the case that went to the Supreme Court. It involved the same principle that was contended for, however, in the case to which I have adverted. I am very sure it has been justified; so, although I was myself disposed to doubt the power of Congress, I am obliged to yield to the view taken of the matter by the Supreme Court of the United States.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think it presents a very nice question. I know that the line is sometimes a very narrow one. Here, of course, we are dealing with the property of the United States. I would have no doubt whatever that Congress could not devolve upon an administrative officer of the Government the power to make regulations governing the conduct of a citizen generally that would have the force of a criminal statute; but whether, in dealing with the property of the United States, Congress may not authorize the administrative custodian of the property to make rules and regulations for the government of the property and then annex punishment to a violation of the rules, presents a rather different question, and rather a nice question.

Mr. WALSH. I feel very sure that upon investigation of the recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States the Senator will find that that has been removed from the realm of debate. I shall be very glad to call his attention to the case.

I am, accordingly, proposing now just one other matter. I invite the attention of Senators interested to the provisions of the sentence found at the bottom of page 3, line 23:

> Any person or persons, or stage or express company, or railway company receiving for transportation any of said animals, birds, or fish so killed, caught, or taken shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor, and shall be fined for every such offense not exceeding $300.

That is to say, any animals, birds, or fish killed or caught or taken in the park. It is very proper to involve the transportation companies in the penalties that are imposed for killing these animals; but obviously the transportation company ought not to be made answerable unless it receives the carcasses with knowledge that they were killed within the park.

For instance, you will understand that the Great Northern Railroad right of way is the southern boundary of the park. The territory immediately to the south of the railroad is practically the same kind of country as that immediately to the north of it, and it is all a most wonderful game country. A man comes in with the carcass of a deer and delivers it to the railroad company. They have no means of knowing whether it was killed within the park or killed without the park; and we ought not to thrust upon the railroad company the duty of determining at its peril whether it was killed within or without the park. So I believe railroad companies or any transportation company, for that matter—because the stage lines run in there as well—ought not to be held answerable unless they receive game knowing it to have been killed within the park.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. What would be the view of the Senator as to how far their knowledge should extend, and how they should acquire it? It occurs to me that this property, so received, should be considered somewhat, at least, in the light of stolen property—property acquired contrary to law.

Mr. WALSH. So it is.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. You would require a receiver of stolen property to ascertain, at some degree of peril to himself, at least, whether or not the property was stolen. Otherwise I do not see how the law can be enforced.

Mr. WALSH. The illustration used by the Senator is very apt, indeed. Of course you would not try to hold a transportation company liable for transporting stolen property unless it knew or had some reason to believe it was stolen.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. No; surely not.

Mr. WALSH. So I propose to cut out the word "receiving," at the end of line 24, page 3, and the beginning of line 25, and to insert in lieu thereof the following words:

> Who knows or has reason to believe that they were taken or killed contrary to the provisions of this act, and who receives.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3 of the bill, lines 24 and 25, it is proposed to strike out the word "receiving" and in lieu thereof to insert:

> Who knows or has reason to believe that they were taken or killed contrary to the provisions of this act, and who receives.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Then, Mr. President, I see no reason why any distinction should be made in the penalty. If the transportation company knows or has reason to believe that the game was taken or killed contrary to the provisions of the act, it ought to suffer exactly the same penalties as the man does who actually killed or took the game.

Accordingly I move to amend by striking out the words "shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor and shall be fined for every such offense not exceeding $300. Any person found guilty of violating any of the," appearing in lines 1, 2, 3, and 4, on page 4, and to substitute therefor the words "or who shall violate any other," and to strike out the "s" in the word "provisions," so that, if amended, it will read:

> Any person or persons, or stage or express company, or railway company, who knows or has reason to believe that they were taken or killed contrary to the provisions of this act, and who receives for transportation any of said animals, birds, or fish so killed, caught, or taken, or who shall violate any other provision of this act or any rule or regulation—

And so forth.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Then, Mr. President, I move to strike out all of section 6 and to insert in lieu thereof——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. What does the Senator do with the remainder of section 4? Has that been stricken out?

Mr. WALSH. I am going to insert something in section 4 in lieu of section 6.

I move now to strike out all of section 6, and in lieu thereof to insert, after the word "park," in line 13, on page 4, the following:

> or who shall, within said park, commit any damage, injury, or spoliation to or upon any building, fence, hedge, gate, guidepost, tree, wood, underwood, timber, garden, crops, vegetables, plants, land, springs, mineral deposits other than those legally located as aforesaid, natural curiosities, or other matter or thing growing or being thereon, or situated therein.

That is to say, I am transferring the end of section 6 over into section 4, so that section 4 will make criminal the doing of these acts, and will likewise make criminal the violation of any rule or regulation intended to prevent the doing of these acts.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out all of section 6 and, on page 4, line 13, after the word "park," to insert the following words:

Or who shall within said park commit any damage, injury, or spoliation to or upon any building, fence, hedge, gate, guidepost, tree, wood, underwood, timber, garden, crops, vegetables, plants, land, springs, mineral deposits other than those legally located, as aforesaid, natural curiosities, or other matter or thing growing or being thereon, or situated therein.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. I now move to strike out, in line 15, on page 4, the figures "$1,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$500."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, line 15, it is proposed to strike out "$1,000" and to insert in lieu thereof "$500."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. In the same line I move to strike out the words "two years" and to insert in lieu thereof "six months."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 4, line 15, it is proposed to strike out "two years" and in lieu thereof to insert "six months."

Mr. WALSH. I am not entirely satisfied that you can confer upon a commissioner appointed as provided in this act jurisdiction to imprison for so long a period as six months without trial by jury, but I am satisfied that that is at least the limit to which jurisdiction can be imposed upon him. I should like very much to hear the views of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] with respect to that matter, because it is eminently desirable that a real jurisdiction should be vested in this officer.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, there is a provision farther along, as I understand, allowing in all cases an appeal from the decision of the commissioner to the United States district court for the district of Montana, in which court there would be, of course, a right of trial by jury. I venture the opinion with some hesitation, but it seems to me that that would come within the rule that has been laid down by the Supreme Court in the Hof case (174 U. S.), where it was held that it was sufficient to meet the provision of the Constitution guaranteeing the right of trial by jury if provision was made for a jury in the appellate court, or if provision was made so that an appeal could be had to an appellate court in which a jury would be allowed.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is still in Committee of the Whole, and subject to further amendment.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, a verbal amendment. In view of the change in section 8, there should be a change in the language on page 6, lines 21 and 22. The reference to section 6 of this act should be stricken out, I suppose.

Mr. WALSH. The amendment should be to substitute "four" for "six." Just a minute, however.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I think that does not refer to the ordinary crime or misdemeanor. I think the substitution of the word "four" for "six" would remedy that.

Mr. WALSH. I think so.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 6, line 22, after the word "section," it is proposed to strike out the word "six" and in lieu thereof to insert the word "four."

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The sections will be renumbered in accordance with the amendments made. If there be no further amendments to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and read the third time.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I wish to call the attention of the Senator from Montana to one other phase of this matter of the jurisdiction of the commissioner.

The Constitution vests the judicial power of the United States in the Supreme Court and such inferior courts as Congress may from time to time ordain and establish. I think it has been held that a commissioner of a circuit court or district court of the United States does not possess any part of the judicial power of the United States. He exercises judicial functions, but he does not exercise any part of the judicial power, and ordinarily his authority is limited to taking bail, to conducting preliminary examinations, and either discharging or binding over the accused person to await the action of the grand jury, and matters of that character. Now, query: Whether or not, that being so, we can confer upon such an officer the power to try and adjudge the guilt or innocence of any person, that being obviously an exercise of judicial power. I am not certain about it, but I suggest it for the consideration of the Senator.

Mr. WALSH. I will say, for the information of the Senator from Utah, that that subject has had my consideration. The Senator has in mind, of course, the office of a circuit court commissioner.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. This officer has a similar designation, but the two officers are essentially different. It has been held by the Supreme Court, at least by a long line of cases in the circuit courts and the circuit courts of appeals, that a portion of the judicial power can not be vested in a court commission, that all the power that can be vested in it is such as has been suggested by the Senator from Utah.

The office here created approximates very much more closely, however, to that of judicial offices created to exercise jurisdiction in places within the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States, as, for instance, the District of Columbia. If the question arose in connection with powers that might be exercised by a justice of the peace or a municipal judge of the District of Columbia, I would myself have said that he exercises a part of the judicial power of the Federal Government. I would myself have said that no one could be tried in his court or any other court for any felony at least, and perhaps for any crimes triable by a jury at common law without the interposition of a jury, and that you really could invest no judicial power in such an officer as that.

It will be observed that the officer appointed in this case is not appointed by the President of the United States; he is not confirmed by the Senate; while the Constitution of the United States provides that all judges of the courts shall be appointed by the President and confirmed by the Senate. It does not fall apparently within that power, but the Supreme Court has held that you can not do that; that in courts over which the Government of the United States exercises exclusive jurisdiction you can constitute inferior tribunals vested with power to finally try and determine petty civil and criminal cases; that that was the practice at the common law; and that the Constitution must be read in view of that established practice in England, where these petty cases were tried before inferior tribunals, and not having a jury as a part of the machinery of the court.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The Senator thinks, then, that this commissioner is really an inferior court within the meaning of the Constitution?

Mr. WALSH. I should say so, but I find it a little difficult to harmonize that view with, I think, at least three decisions of the Supreme Court on the officers to whom I referred.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the bill pass?

The bill was passed.

NANNIE P. DIGGS.

Mr. REED. I ask unanimous consent to call up Senate resolution 253. I do not think it will require any discussion at all. It is simply a resolution to pay to the widow of an employee the usual sum.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution, which had been reported from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses with an amendment, in the name "Anna Diggs," to strike out "Anna" and insert "Nannie P.," so as to make the resolution read:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay to Nannie P. Diggs, widow of the late John H. Diggs, a mail carrier in the Senate post office, out of the miscellaneous-items fund of the Senate, a sum equal to six months' salary at the rate he was receiving by law at the time of his death; said sum to be considered as including funeral expenses and all other allowances.

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution as amended was agreed to.

FORT ASSINNIBOINE MILITARY RESERVATION LANDS.

The bill (S. 655) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to survey the lands of the abandoned Fort Assinniboine Military Reservation and open the same to settlement was announced as next in order.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to say, with respect to this bill, that the Department of the Interior is considering the advisability of suggesting some amendments to it. I called up the department this morning and they have not yet determined what recommendation they will wish to make. I accordingly ask that the bill may go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

RESERVATION OF PUBLIC LANDS.

The bill (S. 657) to authorize the reservation of public lands for country parks and community centers within reclamation projects, and for other purposes, was read.

Mr. GALLINGER. I ask that the bill may go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

Mr. MYERS. May I ask the Senator from New Hampshire to hear me for a moment?

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I asked that the bill might go over for the purpose of looking into the matter. Perhaps if the Senator will make a statement it may satisfy me that the bill should be acted upon. It looks to me as though it was a pretty comprehensive scheme.

Mr. MYERS. Of course, if the Senator wants a day or two in which to look into it, I am always glad as far as I can to coincide with such a request. The bill is such a simple little bill I thought a word of explanation might satisfy the Senator without taking further time.

Mr. GALLINGER. Instead of being a simple little bill it seems to me as though it might be a very large bill, and that these reservations might be of any extent. I did not notice that there was any restriction as to the amount of land that could be taken for the purpose of establishing parks and playgrounds in irrigation districts.

Mr. MYERS. On page 1, lines 7 and 8, the Senator will see that there is an amendment proposed by the committee which says "not exceeding 20 acres in any one township." I do not see anything complicated about the bill.

Mr. GALLINGER. That is a proposed amendment with which I was not familiar. I had not examined the bill.

Mr. MYERS. It is printed in italics.

Mr. GALLINGER. I simply listened to the reading of the bill. I did not know that there was an amendment reported.

Mr. MYERS. It is very carefully limited, I think, and it has been reported favorably twice by the Committee on Public Lands. I think the wording is simple. I do not see anything complicated or abstruse about it.

The object is simply within the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior to let people who settle on these reclamation projects in the West have a very small tract not exceeding 20 acres in any one township set aside as a community center where they can have Fourth of July celebrations, picnics, barbecues, and meetings for community purposes and social purposes, cultivating acquaintance with each other and patriotism and the improvement of the civic status of the community. I think, with the amendment which is suggested by the committee, the Senator will see that the bill is limited to a very small acreage, and it is in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator why we should not have these playgrounds and community centers in every township of the United States as well as in townships where we have reclamation projects?

Mr. MYERS. We ought to have them, Mr. President, but the United States does not control the land in the townships of New Hampshire, Massachusetts, or Missouri. All the public lands are gone in those States.

Mr. GALLINGER. If the United States, which does own this land, assigns it for this purpose, why might not the United States purchase land in other parts of the country to enable the people to have social meetings and picnics where they are now isolated?

Mr. MYERS. The land would have to be purchased at a very high price, and I do not know of any authority in Congress to make such a purchase. This is simply reserving a small piece of land before it is disposed of by the United States.

Mr. GALLINGER. Mr. President, I will content myself by saying that if the Senators from the Western States think it is a desirable disposition to make of the public lands, I will not object. I think the scheme is utterly chimerical and will come to very little.

I will say to the Senator that had I observed that there was a restriction as to the number of acres in each township I very likely would not have made an objection at all, but I heard simply the original bill read and observed that there was not any restriction in the original bill and that they might have taken a hundred acres or 500 acres or any number of acres that the Secretary of the Interior in his wisdom or unwisdom might have determined.

Now, Mr. President, as I said a moment ago, if the Senators representing the Western States think this is good legislation I certainly will withdraw my suggestion that the bill should go over and will let it be acted upon.

Mr. MYERS. The Senator having observed the restriction in the bill now has really no objection to it.

Mr. GALLINGER. I withdraw my suggestion that the bill should go over if it is agreeable to Senators from the western section of the country. We New Englanders rarely ever interfere with anything that the great West wants, and I should be unwilling to be a stumblingblock in the way of anything that would aid those people in having a good time.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from New Hampshire will give us the evidence of his esteemed appreciation of the people of the West by voting for the measure.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not intend to object to the bill, and for the reason that I presumed the Secretary of the Interior can be safely intrusted to reserve whatever park ground is necessary; but of all things which I supposed the West did not need it was great parks. One-third of my State now is a park, practically. While I presume this will not be refused, I do not see the necessity of reserving more ground in the agricultural regions for park purposes when we have a vast amount of territory out there which can be utilized in no other way than for park purposes.

I have never yet observed one of these irrigation projects in which there were not many acres of land which were not to be utilized for agricultural purposes and that were only fit for this purpose, which would never be occupied by anyone. If this is going to take out more agricultural land, and is not limited to that kind of land which is nonagricultural, I think it is a very bad precedent.

We are creating parks all through the West—hunting grounds and those things which are of no particular benefit to the country. I presume our eastern friends will come with their hunting hounds in after years to chase the festive hare. Of course if there were no parks, if there were no opportunities to create parks otherwise, it would be a very wise thing to have them to a limited extent and in proper places. That is true in the settled communities, and so forth. I had not supposed there was any necessity for creating parks out of the agricultural land of the West.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I am really surprised at the attitude of the Senator from Idaho in decrying the extent to which parking is carried in the West, because only a short time ago there was a measure before the Senate, known as the Hetch Hetchy bill, to take a few acres—4 or 5 acres, I believe—out of the Yosemite National Park in California for a more useful and substantial purpose, and the Senator from Idaho at that time very eloquently and powerfully portrayed the need of that park for park purposes and decried as almost a crime the taking of it away from that use and despoiling it.

I will just say to the Senator from Idaho that I do not believe when he understands the bill he will seriously oppose it. The demand for this bill, the request for it originally, came from the people. Settlers under the Tongue River irrigation project in Montana, new settlers gathered from all over the United States, unacquainted with each other, settling up a new country, conceived the idea that they would like to have a meeting place to meet each other occasionally, where they could have picnics and addresses and farm institutes and different things in the summer time. They thought it would add to their comfort and their edification and their elevation. Certainly the very trivial quantity of land to which it is limited can not do any harm. If the people under these projects want this little protection and favor from the Government, I do not believe that it will do anybody harm. It is no grand scheme of spoliation or withdrawal. We have withdrawn thousands of thousands of arable acres from the public domain. It is a very small matter, and I believe the object these people have in asking for it is worth more to them and to the people of the country than the little tract of land necessary to be used.

I will say to the Senator that the bill was considered by the subcommittee of the Committee on Public Lands, composed of western Senators; they joined in recommending it, the committee recommended it, and I think there is some merit in it.

Mr. BORAH. I see the bill is not limited to Montana in its operation. Of course, if Montana wants more parks, I should not want to object.

Mr. MYERS. Will the Senator permit me to make a suggestion at this time? The bill originally drawn and introduced by me was confined to Montana, but the Department of the Interior objected to that provision and said it should be general. They sent to the Committee on Public Lands a recommendation that the provision limiting it to Montana be stricken out and that it be made general, and that was done on the suggestion of the Department of the Interior.

Mr. BORAH. Was that the suggestion of the present Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. MYERS. No; it was the former Secretary.

Mr. BORAH. I am not surprised that prior Secretaries of the Interior have favored making parks out of agricultural lands.

Mr. MYERS. The bill was originally introduced in the Sixty-second Congress, and that suggestion came from the then Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. BORAH. We have had Secretaries of the Interior in the past few years who would have created parks of the country west of the Mississippi. If they had had an opportunity, they would have included the whole country in parks.

Mr. MYERS. I know, Mr. President; but this bill does not carry out that spirit.

Mr. BORAH. No; perhaps not. But I wish to say to the Senator, in order that he may not be misled as to the facts, that the Senator from Idaho did not object to the Hetch Hetchy proposition so much upon the ground of protecting a park, but for the reason that it was doing what, in my judgment, this bill is doing—withdrawing a little more of the agricultural lands of the West from actual use; that is to say, it was destroying certain agricultural portions of California. That was my prime objection to that bill. I want to protect the agricultural lands of the West and dedicate it all—every acre—to the use of the home builder.

Mr. MYERS. If the Senator will pardon me, that is a mere pleasantry. I do not want to get this bill complicated with the Hetch Hetchy bill.

Mr. BORAH. No; I should not think the Senator would. Mr. President, I only express regret that the Senator from Montana did not pursue his original proposition and confine this bill to Montana.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I can voice the same regret that this bill is not confined to Montana. I am perfectly willing to vote for any park that the people of the State want. If they want playgrounds in agricultural lands, I shall favor it; but we have had a little experience, Mr. President. A little over a year ago in New Mexico, without consultation with the Senators or the Representative from that State, 280,000 acres of land were withdrawn by proclamation on the recommendation of the Secretary of the Interior; and 270,000 acres out of the 280,000 acres were turned over to a private individual, without the payment of one cent to the Government or to the State, to enable him to run a cattle ranch.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it now appears to me that possibly this bill has a merit in it that had not before occurred to me, and that is that it is an enlargement of the Chautauqua opportunities of this country and gives an opportunity for Chautauqua meetings, lectures, and so forth. If so, I should not want to object to it. [Laughter.]

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, as a number of the associates of the Senator from Idaho on the other side of the Chamber are engaged a large part of their time in Chautauqua work, I agree with the Senator that he should not object to the bill.

Mr. FALL. Mr. President, I do not know to just which Senator on this side of the Chamber the Senator from Montana has reference. I have not heard recently of the Senator who has just spoken being engaged in lecturing on the Chautauqua platform. My services have not been sought in that capacity, I can certify, and if they were, Mr. President, I would not be willing to have the few remaining acres of agricultural land in my State set aside that I might entertain an audience thereupon, even if that were the only opportunity which I might ever have to engage in lecturing either for or without compensation upon the Chautauqua circuit.

But, Mr. President, I am opposed to this general policy. It is going to result in this, in so far as we are concerned, that I shall be compelled, I think, within the course of a year or two at any rate, to ask that New Mexico be created a national park. If the lands of New Mexico are to be taken from the settlers; if they are to be reserved by Executive order or by order of the Secretary of the Interior; if that country which remains undeveloped is to be fenced in by the Government so that it can not be used for local taxation for the support of municipal governments and for the support of the State government, why, then, Mr. President, we shall either be compelled to ask to be included within an Indian reservation or a national park or be created into a national monument. [Laughter.] If this policy is continued we shall not be able to support ourselves, and if the Government is going to take our property, or the property to which we think we are entitled, then necessarily the Government must assume the responsibility and we shall have to be included in the appropriations for the Interior Department hereafter, so that the salaries of our State officials and those of our county officials may be paid.

Undoubtedly they have sufficient agricultural land in the magnificent State represented in part by the Senator who is proposing this bill to devote possibly a few thousand or a few million acres to Chautauqua purposes or, as the Senator has said, to barbecues and the eating of meat thereon. Mr. President, we have not had so far much time in New Mexico, I am sorry to say, to gather together and enjoy picnics, Chautauqua lectures, and Fourth of July speeches; we do occasionally have a Chautauqua there; in fact, we do every year, I think, but we pay for it ourselves, and we hold such meetings upon lands which we have wrested finally from the United States Government at the peril of our liberty; for to-day, while we, without hesitation, vote lands back to the Government to be perpetually reserved, any man in undertaking to make a homestead upon the public domain, either under the homestead act or under the desert-land act, lays himself liable to prosecution and to the penitentiary. The special agents who have charge of those little reserves of the public lands generally pursue every homesteader; every man who undertakes to make a patent and final proof upon a homestead entry is pursued by some special agent of the department, because such agents think that they want such lands for Chautauqua exercises or for Swiss yodlers or for picnic purposes or for some similar purpose.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Or for forest range headquarters.

Mr. FALL. Or for forest range headquarters, as is suggested by the Senator from Arizona, who is as thoroughly familiar with this abuse as am I.

But, Mr. President, so far as New Mexico is concerned, we want no reserves in New Mexico. We simply ask an opportunity to work out our own salvation. We are here under an enabling act and constitutional provisions such as were never forced upon any other State coming into this Union. We were not allowed, nor was Arizona, to come in on an equality with the other States of the Union, because of the so-called conservation policy of this Government as carried out by former administrations. I do not believe that the present Secretary of the Interior, if asked to report upon this bill, would report favorably upon it. I have confidence enough in his good judgment or his knowledge of conditions, I think, to speak for him, while not authorized to do so, upon this subject.

As has been said by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], I am not surprised that a former Secretary of the Interior reported favorably upon this bill, or asked that it be made general, because he is the same Secretary of the Interior who recommended to the President of the United States that he should withdraw, as I have said, 280,000 acres of land in New Mexico, 10,000 acres of which were by order set aside and fenced up—nothing done to it except simply to be fenced up—for the purpose of ascertaining what character of grasses would best grow upon those 10,000 acres; and by a contract made with the department the remaining 270,000 acres were turned over in perpetuity to an individual in New Mexico, without one dollar being received by the Government or without a contract upon his part that he was to perform any work or do anything whatsoever in consideration. He has those 270,000 acres perpetually to himself as a cattle ranch.

Mr. MYERS. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. FALL. Yes, sir; with pleasure.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I will say to the Senator that this bill was introduced on April 9, 1913; that it was recommended favorably with amendments by the present Secretary of the Interior; and I think the report is signed by the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, who is from the State of the Senator who is speaking.

Mr. FALL. I have always had very great confidence in the Secretary of the Interior, and I have known the Assistant Secretary of the Interior for many years. We know how reports come from the offices of the Interior Department as well as from the other departments of the Government; that they are frequently pro forma reports, made by some clerk; and I am sorry to say that there yet remain in the office of the Secretary of the Interior many of the clerks who have been there for years, who have been inoculated with certain ideas, which I do not believe are entertained, to that extent at least, by the present incumbent of the office of Secretary of the Interior. If it is true that this is his policy or that of the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, then I may say that I have lost in a great measure the confidence which heretofore I have reposed in the ability, at least, and the knowledge of affairs in the West which I had supposed was held by those officials.

Mr. President, if this bill is indorsed by the Secretary of the Interior and by the Assistant Secretary of the Interior, for both of whom I have heretofore, at least, had great respect and admiration, nevertheless it does not change my opinion, nor does it in my mind affect the policy which I propose to pursue without respect, if necessary, to the present incumbent of that high office or to any former incumbent of that office. I am perfectly willing, Mr. President, to go just as far as any Senator here or any man in the United States in the proper conservation of the natural resources which should be conserved for future generations, but I am not going to the extent of voting for anything of this kind which will tend to restrict the use by the people of the public domain belonging to them.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Connecticut?

Mr. FALL. Certainly.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I was interested in the statement of the Senator as to some Secretary of the Interior turning over to an individual 270,000 acres of land in perpetuity, for which the "turnee" paid not a dollar, as the Senator has said. I want the Senator to explain that further and tell us when it was done and who was then the Secretary. The Senator can not mean that a patent was issued to the gentleman?

Mr. FALL. No.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Did he pay anything for the privilege of occupying this land?

Mr. FALL. Nothing whatsoever.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Will the Senator expand that and tell us the circumstances of the transaction?

Mr. FALL. I will with pleasure outline the matter a little more fully, and at a later date, if opportunity offers itself, I will be glad to present the official records up to a certain point.

The Secretary of the Interior himself did not enter into the contract. The matter was arranged in this way: Certain gentlemen in the Agricultural Department outlined a tentative proposition to go along with the policy of the Government in the restoration of the range lands—the grass lands—in the Southwest. Growing out of that, apparently, came a proposition to reserve in the State of New Mexico 280,000 acres. This I knew nothing about, nor did my colleague in the Senate, nor, I am assured, did the Representative, or the two Representatives at that time, in the House. None of us were consulted and none of us knew anything about it until we heard through our local papers of the withdrawal of this land.

The Secretary of Agriculture recommended the withdrawal of 280,000 acres of land, and the Secretary of the Interior recommended to the President the withdrawal and prepared the proclamation withdrawing this land. I have been assured——

Mr. SMOOT. For what purpose, will the Senator state?

Mr. FALL. For no purpose, so far as we know, except the purposes that I am undertaking to detail, and I will go more fully into this matter when I have the records here. I have them in my office, or at least some of them.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. All I wanted——

Mr. FALL. I am trying to explain——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. All I wanted was to find out when it was done.

Mr. FALL. It was done under Mr. Fisher, Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In what year?

Mr. FALL. Less than two years ago—about a year and a half ago, I think.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. In what county is the land?

Mr. FALL. In Dona Ana County, in New Mexico, about 20 miles north of Las Cruces, and a little east of the present Government irrigation enterprise on the Rio Grande known as the Engle or Elephant Butte project.

The Secretary of the Interior prepared the proclamation, and the President signed and issued it. When the two Senators from New Mexico sought information about it the Secretary of the Interior said that he knew nothing whatsoever about it, but had made the recommendation upon the request of the Secretary of Agriculture. The Secretary of Agriculture said that he knew nothing whatsoever about it, but had made the recommendation upon the suggestion of a certain gentleman in his department. The President of the United States knew nothing about it except that it had come to him with the proclamation prepared by the Secretary of the Interior.

The fact of it is that in undertaking to get at the root of the matter, as to what this land was to be used for, how it was to be used, and by whom it was to be used, I was promised a copy of a tentative agreement entered into by some gentleman in the Department of Agriculture with a certain cattleman in New Mexico, who, I may say, Mr. President, is personally a friend of mine. I knew nothing, however, about it, and had not been approached upon the subject at all.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Mexico yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. FALL. I do.

Mr. THOMAS. May I inquire if the name of that gentleman is Jastrow?

Mr. FALL. No; that is not the name.

Mr. President, as I was saying, I was promised a full statement of the agreement which had been tentatively entered into, but I have never been able to obtain it. I did secure, though, when this promise was made a memorandum of the proposed agreement; and when I next went to New Mexico I met the gentleman who was holding the land and asked him what he was trying to do. The same day I was approached by another gentleman, who had some connection with the Agricultural Department of the United States, who very excitedly wanted to know if the contract that "we made" was not going to be carried out; that he was interested in this proposition, and that, if he was not going to be protected, he was going to overthrow the whole business. I do not know whether or not he has been protected, but the "whole business" has not been overthrown. This cattleman holds 270,000 acres fenced in from the public domain, and is using that land for his own purposes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator says that man holds it under contract; that he holds it in perpetuity; and that he holds it without having paid any compensation for it or any rent for the use of it?

Mr. FALL. Yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If he has a contract from the Government giving him the right to hold it in perpetuity, rent free, it is better than a fee simple, because he does not have to pay any taxes on it.

Mr. FALL. No; he has to pay no municipal taxes and no taxes of any kind to the Federal Government.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. And it is a fee to all intents and purposes, except that he can not sell it.

Mr. FALL. Yes; he can not sell it nor, I presume, could he sublease it. I do not know as to that, for, as I have said, I am not thoroughly familiar with the contract, because after it had been promised me I was never able to secure it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The gentleman was a friend of the Senator?

Mr. FALL. Yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I should assume from the circumstances that pertain to the transaction that he was also a friend of the other gentleman with whom he made the contract?

Mr. FALL. I might assume, further than that, that he might have been a partner of some other gentleman whom I do not know.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. He might have been; but what I am trying to get at is whether the Senator is able to say, even upon hearsay, whether there is anything in the contract that provides that this gentleman, who must be very attractive and have winning ways, shall do anything at all for the Government?

Mr. FALL. Nothing at all, except the terms provide, I think, that he shall not graze upon these 270,000 acres more than 5,000 head of cattle continuously; so, I presume, that some expert might ascertain whether or not the grazing of 5,000 head of cattle on 270,000 acres was good for the range.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, as the Senator states this matter, of course it is a most remarkable transaction.

Mr. FALL. It is, indeed—the most remarkable transaction I have ever known.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. It is so perfectly unheard of that I can hardly credit it; but I hear what the Senator says, and, in view of his promise that in the future he will amplify the statement he has made——

Mr. FALL. I will go as far as I can; and if I can not secure any more information in the future than I was able to secure then by my unaided efforts, I have it in mind to ask the assistance of this body in investigating the matter a little more fully.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the Senator goes as far as he can, and can not go far enough, I think he will have no difficulty in getting all the help he wants from this body.

Mr. FALL. I am glad to have that assurance. There is one Senator who, possibly, will agree with my view that these reservations should not be made, anyhow, merely within the discretion of some Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit an interruption there, I wish to have him make an exception as to that being the most outrageous thing that has been heard of in connection with this subject. I think, on a little reflection, several instances will occur to his mind that are much worse than that, even. One is where, in order to create a forest reserve, they take the denuded sections of railroad lands and give the railroads scrip for those denuded lands, and permit them to locate the scrip on the best lands of the United States. I think that is even worse than this.

Mr. FALL. That, of course, is a matter of judgment. At least, the United States got back some acreage; it retained something in the way of acreage, even if it were only upon the lava flows which ornament some portions of our country. It got back an acreage, even if it lost the timber.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, will the Senator from New Mexico yield to me?

Mr. FALL. Certainly.

Mr. MYERS. I will ask the Senator if he considers that there is any similarity between the instance he has related and the provisions of this bill?

Mr. FALL. Well, if not by blood relationship, at least by consanguinity.

Mr. MYERS. It is a very strained consanguinity, is it not, and very remote—so much so that you have to have a microscopical examination to discover it? It is a very remote degree of consanguinity, is it not?

Mr. FALL. Yes; but under the old civil law, which we still have in our southwestern country, marriage is prohibited even where the relationship is very remote.

Mr. MYERS. One thing more, Mr. President. Will the Senator yield just for a moment?

Mr. FALL. Yes.

Mr. MYERS. I desire to call the attention of the Senator from New Mexico to the provisions of section 3, by which it is made purely optional with the people of each reclamation project, in each State, as to whether or not they want this. It is not compulsory. If the people of New Mexico, under a certain reclamation project or any reclamation project there, do not want it, they do not have to have it.

I desire to call the Senator's attention to this language:

SEC. 3. That for the purpose of carrying out and effecting the objects of this act the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to enter into a contract with the organization formed by the owners of the lands irrigated within said project or project unit pursuant to section 6 of the act of June 17, 1902, stipulating and providing that the organization will maintain and use such of the lands so reserved for the purposes prescribed in this act as such organization may desire, and that upon failure to so maintain and use such lands—

That is, if they do not want to use them in that way, they do not have to do so—or in the event that same shall be permitted to be used or occupied for other purposes than those stipulated in this act, the control of the lands shall revert to the United States, and same shall be thereafter disposed of in accordance with the public-land laws applicable thereto.

So if there were a reclamation project in the Senator's State, and the people under that project, or in any one unit of that project, did not desire this little tract of 10 or 20 acres, all in the world they would have to do would be this: In the first place, to avail themselves of it, they have to form an organization and enter into a contract with the Secretary of the Interior. If they do not want to do that in the first place, they do not have to. If they do it and later change their minds and do not desire to have this benefit, all in the world they have to do is to fail to keep it up or maintain it according to the provisions of this bill; or, better still, if they do not desire it in the beginning, they do not have to enter into the contract.

So I think the Senator will see that it is optional with the people of each community; and if the people of any community in his State do not want it certainly it is not going to be forced on them against their will.

Mr. FALL. I can not imagine that the present Secretary of the Interior would use any coercion on those people; but when a highwayman sticks a pistol to your head and demands your money or your life, you have the option, of course. In that sense these people would have the option. It would be optional with them. If, however, the Secretary of the Interior, through his agents in connection with the reclamation projects, were just mildly to suggest to the water users' associations organized under the different irrigation projects that it would be well for them to consider a matter of this kind, I think very likely his suggestion might be carried out, although the idea might not have been previously entertained by the water users themselves or the owners of the land.

Let me call the Senator's attention to the fact that different conditions exist in different States. I have no earthly objection to voting for this bill if the Senator will confine it to his own State; or, if there are any other Senators here who think they would like to have the provisions of the bill apply to their States, I shall vote for it with a great deal of pleasure, as far as they are concerned; but I am one Senator who objects to having the provisions of the bill applied to his State.

Speaking of the reclamation projects, allow me to call the Senator's attention to some facts that possibly he does not know. Under one of the great irrigation enterprises in course of construction to-day in the United States—and I think this applies to more than one irrigation project—the rights of owners of lands under that enterprise to their acreage have been adjudicated in the courts, in some instances for the reason that before the proposition would be entertained by the Government they were compelled to go into the courts and settle the acreage of water to which each was entitled. Under those circumstances, even to-day, those people are being told that they must agree with the Government of the United States to surrender the greater portion of the acreage which they have an absolute contract with the Government to have water for, notwithstanding the fact that they are lands which have been in them and in their predecessors in interest for many years. In one case, involving thirty, forty, or fifty thousand acres, they have been in the present owners and their predecessors in interest for approximately 300 years. They have had an irrigation system of their own. They have been irrigating their lands.

Men who, with their predecessors, have irrigated 160 acres of land for 100 or more years continuously, and are so irrigating them to-day, have been notified recently that it was the policy of the Reclamation Service of the Department of the Interior to require them to surrender all but 40 acres of their lands; that they must sell these lands to some one else; that it was the policy of the Government to divide up these lands into holdings of not more than 40 acres. That has been done as to lands which were held under grants made by the Spanish Government, recognized and confirmed by the Mexican Government, recognized by solemn treaty with this Government of ours when those people came in in 1848, recognized by the Congress of the United States, finally passed upon by the court especially designated by the Congress of the United States to take these matters in charge and ascertain the true interest of the people in these grants, and settled by suits in court brought to quiet title to the water for certain acres of land. Now they are told: "Before we finally give you the benefit of this water, although you have obligated yourselves to pay so much for every acre of it, you must surrender all but 40 acres."

What is the Government going to do with it? Constitute it into a Chautauqua park, where the people may hold barbecues? If we are going to be compelled by the Government to turn over to some one else these lands which we own and have paid for, and for which we have contracted with the Government, surrendering our prior water rights to the Government and giving it a basis to hold up Colorado and other States in the use of water, it can constitute national parks of them or do with them what it pleases.

As I say, Mr. President, I presume the Senator understands the conditions existing in his own State. I will at least join with him upon that theory, and I will cheerfully vote for this bill, provided the Senator will accept an amendment of just a word or two; say, for instance, that on line 4, after the word "withdraw," he will insert the words "in the State of Montana."

If that will suit the Senator, I will cheerfully vote for the bill; and if any other Senator desires to put his own State in it, I will vote for that. If the Senator from Utah wants to make it applicable to Utah, I will vote with him; if the Senators from Arizona desire to make it applicable to Arizona, I will cheerfully vote with them; but I object to its being made applicable to New Mexico.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. FALL. Certainly.

Mr. MYERS. I will ask the Senator if it would meet with his approval and satisfy him to have an amendment put in providing that it should not apply to the State of New Mexico?

Mr. FALL. Yes, sir; I will accept that proposition. If the Senator will, after the word "withdraw," insert the words "except in New Mexico," that will be satisfactory to me.

Mr. MYERS. I accept that amendment, so far as I am concerned.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, before the Senator takes his seat, I wish to say that section 1 of the bill provides:

That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized to withdraw from other disposition and reserve for country parks, public playgrounds, and community centers, for the use of the residents upon the lands, such tracts as he may deem advisable, not exceeding 20 acres in any one township in each reclamation project or the several units of such reclamation projects undertaken under the act of June 17, 1902, known as the reclamation act.

In the construction of the first sentence of the first section of the bill I should like the Senator from Montana to explain what limitation there is on the Secretary of the Interior, in the case of unpatented lands, to make the withdrawal under any reclamation project now in effect. For instance, take the Yuma or Phoenix projects in my State; there is no limitation on him.

Mr. MYERS. He can not, in any event, withdraw more than 20 acres in any one township.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I know; but in both of those projects there is not any 20 acres that is not much more desirable for a farm, for people crowding for homes, than for any other purpose which could possibly be accomplished by the segregation of as much as 20 acres of land.

Mr. MYERS. In view of the attitude of the Senator from Arizona, if the Senator from New Mexico will permit me to offer an amendment at this time, and yield the floor for that purpose, I move to amend the bill by inserting, after the word "withdraw," in line 4 of page 1, the words "in the State of Montana."

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. All right.

Mr. FALL. That is what I suggested at first.

Mr. MYERS. If anybody else does not like the idea, we do in our State. The only reason I introduced this bill was because it was strongly petitioned for and requested by settlers in such projects in my State.

Mr. FALL. I have no doubt in the world that the Senator represents the wishes of the people of his own State.

Mr. MYERS. I offer that amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The committee amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 7, after the word "advisable," it is proposed to insert the words "not exceeding 20 acres in any one township."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Let the title be amended, Mr. President.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill to authorize the reservation of public lands for country parks and community centers within reclamation projects in the State of Montana, and for other purposes."

BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 2725) authorizing the sale of certain lands to the Dwight Mission School, of Sallisaw Creek, Okla., was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 41) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell or lease certain public lands to the Republic Coal Co., a corporation, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2242) making it unlawful for any Member of Congress to serve on or solicit funds for any political committee, club, or organization was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over, too.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3112) to authorize the Secretary of the Interior to acquire certain right of way near Engle, N. Mex., was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask to have that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2651) providing for the purchase and disposal of certain lands containing kaolin, kaolinite, fuller's earth, and other minerals within portions of Indian reservations heretofore opened to settlement and entry was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRYAN. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 156) limiting expenditures for telegrams sent or received by Senators was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 2860) providing a temporary method of conducting the nomination and election of United States Senators was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

Mr. WALSH. I assume that does not prejudice the position of the bill as the unfinished business?

The VICE PRESIDENT. No. The Chair will state to the Senator that it will go over for only about two minutes.

The resolution (S. Res. 84) providing that any Senator, upon his own request, may be recorded and counted as present in order to constitute a quorum was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

The resolution (S. Res. 218) proposing an amendment to the standing rules of the Senate was announced as next in order.

Mr. GALLINGER. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be passed over.

The bill (S. 3403) to abolish the office of receiver of public moneys at Springfield, Mo., and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will go over.

MOSES CHAUNCEY.

The bill (S. 3149) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Moses Chauncey was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Military Affairs with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and to insert:

That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, and benefits upon honorably discharged soldiers, Moses Chauncey, who was a private of Company M, Eighth Michigan Cavalry Volunteers, shall hereafter be held and considered to have been discharged honorably from the military service of the United States as a member of said company and regiment on or about the 25th day of December, 1863: Provided, That no pay nor bounty shall accrue or become payable by reason of the passage of this act.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Moses Chauncey."

ELECTION OF SENATORS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning hour having expired, the Chair lays before the Senate the unfinished business, which is Senate bill 2860.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (S. 2860) providing a temporary method of conducting the nomination and election of United States Senators.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The pending question is on the amendment proposed by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS].

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I am not going to consume very much time in the discussion of this amendment. It is so manifestly correct that it does not need much discussion from my viewpoint to commend it to the favorable consideration of this body. I think it should be adopted because I do not believe it is the proper function of the Federal Government to interfere with, regulate, and control political parties in the States, even in the nomination of United States Senators and Members of Congress. I do not think it was ever dreamed by the framers of this Government that such a power should be exercised by the Congress. It is an encroachment upon the reserved rights of the States which if carried to its logical extreme would destroy the autonomy of the States and leave State lines only a faint recollection. This bill under consideration within itself is a harmless measure. It provides that the nomination of Senators shall be made by the machinery in vogue in the States for the nomination of Members of Congress. Its provisions are entirely secondary and subordinate to State legislative enactment, but the danger, Mr. President, which lurks in this measure is insidious. It involves a declaration of policy, an arrogation, or usurpation of authority by the General Government, which was never intended by the framers of the Constitution to be delegated to the General Government. If Congress has the right to say that the nomination of Senators shall be made in the manner provided in this bill, it has also the authority to prescribe an entirely different method from that now in vogue in the States—a method which the people of the States might not want, but, on the contrary, disapprove. I do not want the Congress to prescribe or to regulate the party machinery in the different States. The people in the States, or in any one State, are just as capable of managing their own affairs, nominating Senators and Members of Congress, as the people of all the States in their legislative capacity are capable of prescribing this machinery. I believe in popular elections.

If I had my way about it, I would fill every office from constable to President by direct vote of the people, but, Mr. President, I would also preserve the autonomy of the States inviolate. I believe every community is more capable of governing itself—I know that I am better prepared to speak for the people of my State and to say what they desire, and what they need, than a man who does not live within the State. I repeat, I do not believe that it was ever contemplated by the wise men who framed this Government that party nominating conventions and primary elections should ever be controlled or prescribed by Federal law. For these reasons I shall vote for the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS].

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ASHURST in the chair). The pending question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS].

Mr. VARDAMAN. I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi suggests the absence of a quorum. The Secretary will call the roll.

The Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Johnson	Overman	Smith, Mich.
Bankhead	Kenyon	Owen	Smith, S. C.
Borah	Lane	Page	Smoot
Brady	Lea, Tenn.	Perkins	Stephenson
Bristow	Lewis	Pittman	Sutherland
Chamberlain	Lippitt	Reed	Thomas
Chilton	McCumber	Saulsbury	Thompson
Clapp	McLean	Sheppard	Vardaman
Clark, Wyo.	Martine, N. J.	Sherman	Walsh
Dillingham	Myers	Shields	Warren
du Pont	Newlands	Shively	Williams
Fall	Norris	Simmons
Gallinger	O'Gorman	Smith, Ariz.
Hollis	Oliver	Smith, Md.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I am authorized to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES], and to state that he is paired with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. REED. My colleague [Mr. STONE] is detained from the Senate by illness. I make this announcement for the day.

Mr. THOMAS. I desire to announce the necessary absence of my colleague [Mr. SHAFROTH]. This announcement may stand for the remainder of the day.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. TOWNSEND].

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to announce the necessary absence of my colleague the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], and to state that he is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. This announcement may stand for the day.

Mr. SHIVELY. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. KERN]. It is illness that detains him from the Senate. He is paired with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY]. I desire this announcement to stand for the day.

Mr. GALLINGER. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Fifty-three Senators having answered to their names, a quorum of the Senate is present.

Mr. WALSH. I ask for the yeas and nays on the pending amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CLAPP. Let the amendment be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the pending amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, lines 15 and 16, strike out the words "the nomination of candidates for such office shall be made"; in line 16, after the word "same" and before "conducted," insert the words "shall be"; in lines 17 to 23 strike out the following words: "as near as may be in accordance with the laws of such State regulating the nomination and election of candidates for Members at Large of the National House of Representatives: Provided, That in case no provision is made in any State for the nomination or election of Representatives at Large the procedure shall be."

Mr. REED. Mr. President, one word upon the amendment. The effect of the amendment is to take out of the bill the provisions regulating the nomination of candidates for the Senate. If the amendment prevails, in my humble judgment the bill will only be partially effective. It will leave a condition of uncertainty and chaos not quite so bad as it is without any bill, but still sufficiently deplorable.

When we enacted the seventeenth amendment it was not contemplated that so many questions and difficulties would arise in regard to the selection of Senators as have already confronted us. I presume that those Members of Congress and the State legislatures that gave consideration to the seventeenth amendment contemplated the early meeting of State legislatures and the early creation of the necessary machinery to elect a Senator. But already in two or three cases we have found that an election was upon us before the legislature had been assembled. In some of the States there will be no meeting of the legislature prior to the time when the candidates for the Senate must be nominated, and even in some cases there will be no meeting of the legislature prior to the election at which Senators must be chosen.

It seems highly desirable that this temporary condition should be met, and in such a way as to remove all doubt and uncertainty, and we ought not to allow a mere feeling that it is a possible technical invasion of the rights of the States to interfere, unless the objection be more than merely technical and is one of substance and gravity.

It is admitted that Congress has the right to provide with reference to the election. No one seriously challenges that proposition. No one objects to that portion of the bill. The objection comes only to the provision which provides how candidates may be nominated.

The first observation I make is that a mere provision that candidates for the Senate may be nominated in the same way and by the same machinery which the State has already provided for the nomination of its own principal officers clearly can not impose any condition which is unfriendly to the State or which is the exercise of an arbitrary power over the State——

Mr. VARDAMAN. Will the Senator yield for a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. REED. When I conclude this sentence, if the Senator will pardon me.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Certainly.

Mr. REED. We merely say to a State: "You have already in your own way devised a means for nominating your governor, for nominating your other State officers, for nominating your Representative at Large. It is a method that you yourself devised. It is one which is satisfactory to you. Now, until you see fit to provide otherwise you may nominate your candidates for the Senate by that machinery and that method which has already been adopted by you as a State for the purpose of nominating other officers."

That ought not to be, and it seems to me it can not be said to be, doing anything which would be obnoxious to the State, because we are not saying to the State how it shall conduct primaries, how it shall make nominations; we are simply saying that in this one case you shall pursue the method which you have voluntarily laid down as to other cases.

I will yield now to the Senator from Mississippi.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I was about to ask the Senator from Missouri, Mr. President, if this proposed statute directs the State to make the nomination according to the State law now in effect for the nomination of governor or Members of Congress, if the announcement of that fact is not arrogating to Congress the right to prescribe the method of making the nomination? If Congress has a right to say you may nominate them as you nominate your governor, then could not the Congress prescribe some other method if it should see fit?

Mr. REED. I think the Senator is correct that——

Mr. VARDAMAN. And I want to add that that is the very thing we object to—that Congress should assume or arrogate to itself the right to direct the State, or the political parties of the State, in a matter of that character. If you have a right to say that the Senator shall be nominated as you nominate your governor, then you have a right to say who shall participate in the nomination primary or prescribe an entirely different method. I do not believe it was ever contemplated by the framers of this Government that party machinery should be directed from Washington. I am afraid we are drifting far away from the original purposes of the Constitution builders if we pass this bill as it came from the committee.

Mr. REED. In part I agree with the Senator and in part I am obliged to disagree. I agree to the proposition that if Congress has the power to say that a candidate for the Senate shall be nominated in the same manner that the State has provided for nominating a governor Congress therefore must have the power to say the Senator shall be nominated in accordance with any other rule, and to lay down the rule, subject to the qualifications contained in the seventeenth amendment itself.

That is a question of power; and that Congress does possess the power to regulate as a part in the nomination I entertain not the slightest doubt whatever. I am discussing now the naked question of power, not the question as to what ought to be done or ought not to be done, but the question of power alone.

It is abundantly settled by the authorities that a nomination is a part of an election.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. REED. As soon as I conclude the sentence.

Mr. SHIELDS. I should like the Senator to state those authorities and cite us to them.

Mr. REED. Very well. I will conclude my sentence and then I will respond to the Senator's interrogatory. I say it is abundantly settled by the authorities that in creating the power to govern an election that power can be exercised as to all things necessary to or incident to the election, and that therefore a constitutional power to hold an election embraces the power to prescribe the method of nomination, embraces the power to make it a crime to vote at a primary election, embraces the power to make it a crime to interfere even at a mass convention with a proper expression of the will of that convention.

The Senator from Tennessee asks me to name the specific authorities. I say to him frankly that I can not call the names of cases, for I have not given this question an examination along that line since the debate began, and I have been absent for a week from the Senate and out of the city; but my reading of the books in the past has left that impression with me as an undoubted principle of law, and I will undertake, if this debate lasts until to-morrow, to furnish the authorities, and, if I can not furnish them, to withdraw my statement. I affirm that as my judgment of the law, and I think there is no question about it being well settled. It has been decided in my own State, unless my recollection is clearly in error.

Mr. President, I think the power exists beyond any doubt. The question that I think ought to be discussed is one as to the desirability or the undesirability of the amendment. I am as great a stickler for the rights of States not being interfered with, that the local self-government of the people shall be allowed to remain always as full and complete as possible, as any of my colleagues on this side. If it was proposed in this bill to prescribe a rule by which the States of the Union were to be governed in the nomination of their candidates for the Senate, to assume that prerogative on the part of Congress and to fasten that upon the States, I would oppose the bill—I would vote for the amendment which is now offered; but no such thing is proposed. It is not contemplated that we shall say to the States of this Union, you shall nominate your Senators by any given method; it is not even said, "You shall nominate as you now nominate your principal State officers"; all that is said is, "Until you see fit to otherwise provide, you shall nominate in this way; if you have made no provision in the past, then you shall nominate in this way"; but the moment the State sees fit to prescribe a different method of nomination, its power so to prescribe remains absolutely intact.

What harm are we doing the States when we simply say "Until you act, there shall be a certain rule laid down by which candidates for the Senate can be nominated"? We are not taking away from a State a single right it possesses; we are not depriving it of a single privilege which it has; we are not imposing upon it an obligation that will rest upon it one day beyond the time that the State sees fit to exercise its own power and prescribe its own method. It is for that reason that I think we can safely vote for this bill without the amendment.

If we do adopt this amendment and emasculate this bill and let it apply only to the election, we shall not have remedied the defect which now confronts us at all; and for this reason: In State after State it is provided that candidates, in order to have their names placed upon the ticket, shall be nominated at a primary held at a certain time and under certain regulations. In a State of that kind, where they have no provision for the nomination of a Senator at that primary, how are the officers of that State to determine who the candidates are, and how are those candidates to get their names upon the ticket? Manifestly, they can not get their names upon the ticket in a State which provides that all candidates shall be nominated in a certain way.

A party convention might be held, but if the law provides that candidates to be upon the ticket must be nominated at a primary, then the candidate nominated at a convention could not have his name put upon the ticket. On the contrary, if a State should undertake to nominate at a primary and the primary election law was drawn specifying the officers to be there nominated—which is the case in State after State, and not specifying the Senator, for none of them up to this time do specify the Senator, unless it be the single State of Georgia, that has enacted a law in conformity with the seventeenth amendment—then there is no way to nominate at the primary. We shall be left with a condition in the States of this Union where we shall have provided how Senators can be elected, but we shall have an absolute condition of chaos with reference to their nomination. That ought not to be; not for the sake of any mere prejudice or fear that we are invading the power of the State merely technical in its nature; not for such a reason as that ought we to leave the election of Members of the Senate in doubt and obscurity and uncertainty. Certainly we ought not to jeopardize the personnel of this body merely because we technically are doing something that gentlemen feel might be an invasion of the power of the States, when they also must know that the law itself is so drawn that the State on the instant can prescribe any means, any method, it sees fit to employ.

I think that this bill with the amendment adopted would be an emasculated thing; that it would not perform the office for which it was intended. I certainly hope that the bill will pass and that we may have a rule established which will be as wide as the country, and provide for the method of nomination and election, leaving to the State, as this bill does, the full right to prescribe by law the exact method the State may desire to follow. Any State that feels wronged by being required to nominate its Senators as it has already provided that it shall nominate its other officers can get rid of that wrong by taking it up at the first meeting of the general assembly of the State.

Mr. President, my attention has been called by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], who has given this subject a great deal of consideration, to the fact that he has the authorities at hand which were called for by the Senator from Tennessee, and that in his own time he will put them in.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, it gives me no pleasure to differ from my friend the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED], but it seems to me that here we are embarking upon a course of legislation which is very dangerous to the people of this country. I remember very well when the laws of the United States undertook to regulate elections in the States; I remember the abuses that grew up; and I think that every patriotic citizen of this country thanked God when those laws were finally repealed under the first Democratic administration that existed in the two Houses and in the White House after the Civil War, when the last vestige of Federal legislation affecting elections in the States was finally repealed.

Great abuses do not spring up overnight; they always exist because of insiduous beginnings. I shall vote against the Federal Government undertaking to interfere with the nomination of Senators in the States, and I shall vote against it undertaking to interfere with or to control the elections in the States so far as the Senators themselves are concerned. The first I very much doubt the constitutionality of; as to the second, while I must admit that the decisions of the Supreme Court have justified it, yet I do not believe it is sound public policy to reinaugurate that system which was abandoned, and abandoned, I think, by the general consent and in accordance with the good judgment of all the people of this country.

The pending amendment, Mr. President, removes one very objectionable feature of this bill, to wit, the control or the attempted management, even though it be in a slight degree, of the nominations of United States Senators. The bill itself undertakes to provide how Senators can be elected. Admittedly, the only reason for this bill is a temporary one; admittedly, for only a very few months—not more than 12 months or 24 months at the outside—will the provisions of this bill be needed. I do not believe that the thin edge of this wedge of Federal legislation as affecting the elections in the States should ever be permitted to be used; and, so far as I can by my vote, I intend to break off the edge of that wedge and make it forever useless.

That is my position in voting against the nomination provision of the bill and in favor of the amendment submitted by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS]. I think it is the logical one for any man who has seen the effects of Federal legislation when attempted heretofore to be applied to the States. I think it is the safe and sound course for one to follow.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I sympathize in the very warmest way with the views expressed by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY]. Obviously he does not join with others upon this side who are opposing this measure in the view that the Constitution does not authorize Congress to enter this field of legislation at all. He argues against the unwisdom of Congress doing so, based upon the unfortunate experience which attended the only effort that it ever made of any considerable consequence in this direction.

With all that I am in full and entire accord; and yet, Mr. President, when once we admit the power of Congress to legislate upon this subject at all we ought not, as it seems to me, be frightened by a specter of the past. Out in the western part of the country we have suffered most grievously by the abuse of the power of the executive officers of the Government to withdraw lands from entry, and many of us have got into such a frame of mind that the least suggestion about empowering the officers of the Government to withdraw even a little bit of a tract of 20 acres of ground for the most necessary public purpose throws us into a state of panic. I understand fully, as I think, the sentiment actuating the esteemed Senator from the State of Delaware, who I am proud to number as one of my friends. His State was thrown into the midst of a controversy which arose out of the unfortunate legislation which all agree was happily swept away 20 years ago.

But, Mr. President, here we are confronted with a situation that may involve us in a great deal of embarrassment, touching the membership of one-third of this body. Controversies innumerable may arise over those who shall claim to have been elected as Members of this body at the election next fall unless legislation of this character is enacted. In the face, Mr. President, of such a situation as that, it does seem to me that the principle is given too serious a cast by the gentlemen who admit the power of Congress to enact it and yet deny the wisdom of this legislation.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I want to call the Senator's attention to the fact that while I think this bill in its present appearance seems to be about as harmless as any bill that could be drawn on this subject and proposed to be enacted by Congress, yet, in regard to the nomination of candidates for Senator or for officials who are to be voted for in the States themselves, it goes far beyond any statute with which I am familiar which existed during those evil days, which, fortunately, we have survived. Never in the history of the Federal legislation of this Government did the Federal Government undertake to control, affect, manage, or in anyway supervise the nominations of political parties in the States. This is an enunciation for the first time, so far as I know, of the right of the Federal Government to enter into that domain, which is one entirely of party organization. For that reason, Mr. President, I regard this particular provision, the constitutionality of which I do not admit, in regard to nominations, as one of the worst features—indeed, I think as the worst feature—of the bill, so far as that is concerned, and it is one which I believe should be challenged and most strenuously opposed.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, at an earlier stage in this debate I took occasion to invite Senators to follow me step by step backward from the final act by which the voter expresses his choice among the various candidates so as to let us understand where the line is which separates what is claimed to be the power of Congress to legislate in relation to this matter from that domain which is beyond its power. I pointed out at that time that it had been determined that a registration law is a valid law; I pointed out that away back in the year 1870 Congress legislated that the votes for Members of Congress must be given by a written ballot and could not be given viva voce. I inquired at that time whether it was not within the power of Congress, if it saw fit to do so—not suggesting now the wisdom of legislation of that character—whether it was not within the power of Congress to provide that elections for Senators and Representatives should be by the Australian ballot system. Along all these suggestions the eminent gentlemen and distinguished lawyers who have have been combating the existence of this power have followed me and have admitted that Congress has that power.

Now, Mr. President, when you assert that Congress may prescribe the Australian ballot system for the election of Members of Congress, you of necessity say that Congress has the power to regulate the nominations, because you can not have an Australian ballot system unless there is some regulation by law of the system of making nominations. I am going to advert to that directly; but I did not want this debate to close, Mr. President, with the inference that might be drawn from the challenge given by the distinguished Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS] to the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] to cite some authority which holds that the word "elections" embraced within its meaning the nominating machinery provided by law for placing the candidates before the people upon the final ballot.

At an earlier stage of this debate—we forget these things—I took occasion to invite the attention of the Senate to the fact that it had repeatedly been determined that the word "elections" is sufficiently comprehensive in its scope to embrace every step provided by law leading up to the final act of the choice of the people and intended to safeguard that choice and to see that it really was the reflection of the wishes of the people, including the method by which candidates are nominated, as well as the final choice between the various candidates. I am going to repeat it now in the RECORD, lest anybody should make any mistake about it at all, and assume, by reason of the question now addressed to the Senator from Missouri by the Senator from Tennessee, that even the weight of authority is in support of his contention that it does not.

I refer you now to the eighteenth volume of the Lawyers' Reports Annotated, new series, at page 412, where will be found a note containing a reference to practically all the cases decided up to that time upon the question as to whether the word "elections," as used in constitutions and statutes generally, will be held to embrace a primary election held for the purpose of choosing candidates of a political party. I read:

A primary election for the purpose of placing in nomination candidates for public offices is an "election" within a constitutional provision prescribing the qualifications of electors at "all elections authorized by law." (Spier v. Baker, 120 Cal., 370.)

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, if the Senator will pardon me, does that authority hold that, although the word "election" includes a primary election as well as a general election, the primary election is a part of the general election?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, it holds that a primary election falls within the meaning of a constitutional provision which prescribes the qualifications for voters at all elections authorized by law.

Mr. WILLIAMS. There can be no doubt of that position; nobody ever expressed a doubt of that.

Mr. WALSH. Excuse me; the doubt is expressed, because the Senator from Tennessee has invited our attention to an adjudication of a court in his own State which holds directly to the contrary.

Mr. WILLIAMS. But the Senator from Tennessee took the position that the weight of authority was that a primary election or any other device for nominating officers was not, and could not be, a part of the general election, and that a law which merely referred to the general election—not a law which referred to all elections, but that a law which merely referred to the election of an officer at a general election—did not give authority to regulate the method of nominating the officer.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, the introduction into this debate of the subject of "general elections" is entirely unwarranted. We have no such language in the Constitution. The Constitution provides that "the times, places, and manner of holding elections"——

Mr. WILLIAMS. I will change my language to suit the Senator. I was merely describing a thing. Where I said "general" I will substitute "the election to the office," and where I said a "nominating election" I will substitute the language "the nomination by election within the party."

Mr. WALSH. It seems to me that we are getting away from the question we are considering—the scope that is to be given to the word "elections." In the language of the Constitution:

The times, places, and manner of holding elections for Senators and Representatives shall be prescribed in each State by the legislature thereof——

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. WALSH. Now, wait a moment—but the Congress may at any time by law make or alter such regulations.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Regulations in relation to holding elections.

Mr. WILLIAMS. In relation to the times, manner, and so forth, of holding elections. Now, I ask the Senator from Montana, in all candor, if that does not apply to what I a moment ago designated, not in legal terms, as a "general election," meaning by that an election in which all the people participated, the result of which was to give the office to somebody? In other words, does not the language of the seventeenth amendment refer, and refer solely, to the election, the result of which is to seat a man in this Chamber? Is not the question here whether a different sort of election, an election within a party solely, the result of which is merely to fix who the nominee is, can be referred to in the amendment which refers only to an election the result of which is to settle who is to be a Member of this body? In other words, whether an election to nominate within a party can possibly be a part of an election of a totally different character which gives the right to a seat in this body?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, that would open up, as a matter of course, this debate from its beginning, and I do not propose at this time to repeat what I have said to this body in the course of this debate, in which I have participated perhaps too often already. I simply rose to demonstrate that it had been adjudicated by courts of the very highest character that the word "elections," as used in constitutions, is not to be given that restricted significance; and, particularly, simply to show that the inference that might be drawn from the question addressed by the Senator from Tennessee to the Senator from Missouri that it was universally so held was an entirely unwarranted one. On the contrary, I undertake to say that the great weight of authority is to the effect that the word "elections" as used in constitutions, when not restricted by attendant language, embraces as well beyond question primary elections held anticipatory of the final election.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I will ask the Senator whether it also embraces party nominations?

Mr. WALSH. Let me answer that from the authorities. I want to call your attention to the authorities. I have referred to the California authority. Next, I read this:

> Or within a provision of the State bill of rights, providing that "all elections shall be free and equal." (People ex rel. Breckon v. Election Comrs. Chicago, 221 Ill., 9.)

The word "elections" there embraces primary elections.

> Or within a constitutional provision prescribing the qualification of voters at "any election." (Johnson v. Grand Forks County, 16 N. Dak., 353.)
> Or within a constitutional reference to "any election." (Leonard v. Com., 112 Pa., 622.)
> So a primary election is within the letter and spirit of a statute prohibiting the sale of intoxicating liquors on "the day of any election." (State v. Hirsch, 125 Ind., 207.) The court said: "The words 'primary election,' we may say, are as well understood to mean the act of choosing candidates by the respective political parties to fill the various offices as the word 'election' is to mean the final choice of all the electors of the persons to fill such offices. So that the words 'any election' clearly include primary elections, and such elections come within the letter of the statute."

I have right before me here—and I am sorry the Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] is not here—a decision of a court of his State to the same effect. I may as well read it as I pass. I refer to the case of Ashford against Goodwin, reported in One hundred and third Texas, 491:

> A constitutional provision conferring original jurisdiction in the matter of "contested elections" (constitution of Texas, art. 5, as amended in 1891 by sec. 8) is applicable to primaries, and therefore a statute providing that certificates of nomination shall be reviewable and prescribing the procedure therefor (acts thirty-first legislature, ch. 26) is constitutional.

Let me read further:

> But, on the other hand, it has been held that a primary election is not an "election" within a constitutional declaration of the necessary qualifications of electors. (State ex rel. Gulden v. Johnson, 87 Minn., 221.)

Let me explain that decision. Where a statute prescribed that only the members of a particular political party could be permitted to vote at a primary election held to name nominees of that particular party, and it was contended that under the provisions of the constitution anyone having the qualifications prescribed by the constitution could vote at any election, and so Democrats claimed the right to vote at a primary election held for the purpose of nominating Republican candidates for office, the court said, "We can not give that meaning to the constitution." Therefore they held that it was inapplicable to a primary election.

So, Mr. President, when you come to consider these cases, you will find that in practically every instance in which the restricted meaning has been given there were circumstances and conditions which so restricted it.

In the course of this debate I invited your attention to a Kentucky decision which held that the word "election" in the Constitution did not extend to primary elections, because the Constitution also provided that there should be only one election each year; and they said, "You have got to have the primary election close by, and therefore it does not fall within the meaning of the Constitution," it being held that the word "election" in the Constitution was restricted by the actual circumstances to the other election.

Mr. SHIELDS rose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. WALSH. Let me go through with these authorities, if the Senator from Tennessee will pardon me.

Mr. SHIELDS. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Here are the authorities on the other side of the question:

> Nor within a statute making it a misdemeanor to place any bet or wager upon any election.

That is a Tennessee authority. I think that decision is wrong. This is the case of Lillard v. Mitchell (37 S. W., 702). That case was an authority in the Federal court of the State of Tennessee before the case of Ledgerwood against Pitts, to which the Senator has referred, reported in One hundred and twenty-second Tennessee, came before it.

Let me show you some comments upon the case of Lillard against Mitchell.

I read from the note to the case of Ashford against Goodwin, reported in Twenty-sixth American and English Annotated Cases, beginning at page 699. I read from page 701:

> The case of Lillard v. Mitchell, decided by the court of chancery appeals of Tennessee (37 S. W., 702), uses language which, if not examined with reference to the facts, might be held to be in conflict with our holding in this case; but in that case it appears that the primary election which was then under investigation before the court was not one which was authorized by the statute of Tennessee, but was a voluntary arrangement by the members of the political party, by which they undertook to secure an expression of the opinion of members of the party as to the nomination of certain persons for election to office in that State. It is evident that the two cases are so dissimilar as to render the Tennessee case wholly inapplicable to the facts of this case.

This is a later note found in the report to which I advert, and it carries the cases down to that time. You will observe that in both of them the rule is said to be that the word "election" does extend so as to embrace the primary election, but that there are authorities to the contrary.

I continue reading the note from which I was reading originally:

> Nor within a statute prohibiting a wager upon the result of, or success of, any candidate at "any election." (Com. ex rel. Directors of Poor v. Wells, 110 Pa., 463; 1 Atl., 310.)
> Nor within a statute disqualifying a person from holding office during the term for which he may have been elected where he shall have given a bribe, threat, or reward to secure his election. (Gray v. Seitz, 162 Ind., 1; 69 N. E., 456.)

Now let me call the attention of the Senator from North Carolina—I see he is not in his seat, however—to the fact that very recently the supreme court of his State has had this matter under consideration. I read from the note in the American and English Annotated Cases, as follows:

> There is some conflict among the decisions relating to the question whether a constitutional or statutory provision relating to elections is applicable to a primary election, although some decisions have turned on the question whether the particular provision is adapted to a primary election. (Line v. Election Canvassers, 154 Mich., 329; 16 Ann. Cas., 248.) The recent cases on the subject are likewise conflicting.
> From a recent case the inference is that a statute prohibiting fraudulent conduct at an election would be applicable to a primary election. The court said: "This primary election was a public election, and any conduct which interferes with the freedom or purity of the election is punishable at common law."

I submit that that is a good deal better reason and a good deal better sense than is expressed in those opinions which hold that the selling of liquor on the day of a primary election, or the making of a bet upon the outcome of an election, does not fall within the inhibition of criminal statutes. It certainly falls within the evil that was intended to be remedied by those statutes.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. SAULSBURY. May I ask the Senator from Montana whether the decision to which he has just referred decides that the primary election was included under the term "election" because the term "election" was originally broad enough to cover all classes of election, or because the term "election" in the statute or in the Constitution referred to an election at which there would be voted for the candidates at the primary to which the law was applied? I ask because I think I can see a distinction there.

Mr. WALSH. I do not know. I dare say, Mr. President, that in considering what the word "election" meant in the criminal statute the court considered what the evil was that was to be remedied, what purpose was to be accomplished by the statute, and whether it fell within the provisions of the statute for that reason. That is what we ask here. We ask here to consider what was the purpose of this grant of power to Congress to make regulations in relation to elections. It was unquestionably for the purpose of securing the purity of those elections.

We recognize to-day that in the old times—the Senator has spoken to us about what happened 30 years ago—practically all the fraud was perpetrated right at the polls on the day of the last election; but we circumvented that, and the operators simply transferred their operations to the nominating machinery and effected the evil in that way. It is contended, and I think with abundant reason, that the power of Congress reaches as well to that character of violations of good morals and good policy.

Mr. SAULSBURY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Montana further yield to the Senator from Delaware?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. SAULSBURY. I do not understand, however, that the Senator would contend that where either a constitutional provision or a statute referred to what has been termed "a general election" the opinion just read from would necessarily be an authority for continuing the control over that general election back to the primary at which the nominations were made.

Mr. WALSH. I contend that these authorities clearly establish the proposition that the law is not, as might have been gathered from the question of the Senator from Tennessee, that the word "election" never has been held to include the primary election, the nominating machinery. I insist that in the construction of statutes containing this word it has been repeatedly so held and that the weight of authority is that way, and that those cases which hold to the contrary hold so by reason of other language in the Constitution which restricts the general significance.

I merely desire at this time to supplement what has been heretofore said, and particularly by the Senator from Missouri a little while ago, about the absolute impossibility of putting an Australian ballot system into operation without a provision in relation to nominations, by reading again to the Senate from the decision of the Supreme Court of the State of Illinois an excerpt which I read in an earlier portion of this debate. I read from the RECORD, at page 1375. This is from the opinion of the Supreme Court of Illinois, in the case of People versus Board, Seventy-seventh Northeastern, page 321. Speaking of the Australian ballot law, the court says:

> That act provides for an official ballot, and in connection with it regulates the nomination of candidates whose names shall be placed on the ballot, the filing of nomination papers and certificates of nomination, and for the printing and distribution of ballots at public expense.

Now, how can you have an Australian-ballot law, I ask, without provisions of that character?

I continue:

> No other ballot can be used, and the provisions and restrictions of the act as to what parties and names and other matters shall appear upon it are regulations of elections equally with those provisions which relate to the actual conduct of the election on election day—

I do not see how we can escape that conclusion.

But let me continue. The court says:

> No other ballot can be used, and the provisions and restrictions of the act as to what parties and names and other matters shall appear upon it are regulations of elections equally with those provisions which relate to the actual conduct of the election on election day. It is manifest that, if an official ballot must be used, nominations of candidates whose names shall appear upon the ballot must be regulated in some way, otherwise the whole scheme would become incapable of execution. The right of the legislature to provide for an official ballot is not questioned, and it follows that the legislature may prescribe reasonable requirements concerning it which will not subvert or injuriously restrict the right of suffrage or conflict with the provisions of the Constitution. The act of 1905, which is now under consideration, makes further extensions and regulations for choosing candidates whose names shall be printed on the official ballot, and the legislation is of the same character as the ballot law. All these acts relate to the same subject, and in combination are designed to constitute a single and harmonious system, under which the people may exercise the elective franchise and make their choice between the candidates for public offices. They all relate to elections and are within the meaning of that word as used in the Constitution.
> It seems clear that the elections protected by the Constitution are all such elections as are held under authority of law at which qualified electors may vote.

In the Tennessee case, reported in Thirty-seventh Southwestern, it was held that the primary election law was not under the protection of the Constitution, because there was no law for holding it at all; it was simply a party contrivance, having the justification of no statute.

> And when statutes are enacted which regulate the form of the ballot to be used, what shall appear upon the ballot, and how the candidates whose names shall so appear shall be chosen, the provision of the Bill of Rights applies to the new condition.
> The right to choose candidates for public offices whose names will be placed on the official ballot is as valuable as the right to vote for them after they are chosen, and is of precisely the same nature. There is scarcely a possibility that any person will or can be elected to office under this system unless he shall be chosen at a primary election, and this statute, which provides the methods by which that shall be done and prescribes and limits the right of voters and of parties, must be regarded as an integral part of the process of choosing public officers, and as an election law.

Mr. President, the restricted meaning has, indeed, been given to the word "election"; but I did not want anybody to labor under the impression that there was no division in the authorities nor that the weight of authority was to the contrary upon the construction of this word.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I did not hear all of the Senator's address; but does he claim that there is any decision or authority going to show that the nomination of a candidate in a party convention is a part of the election over which Congress would have jurisdiction?

Mr. WALSH. Unquestionably I claim that it would.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. As well as the nomination by the primary?

Mr. WALSH. Undoubtedly. I sent down here yesterday to get the Montana Political Code for the year 1895. It gives our first Australian ballot law. It recognized nominations by political conventions, and it provided that whenever such a convention was held for the purpose of nominating candidates the officers of the convention should certify up to the proper officer of the State the result of their work there. Thus the statute stepped in and regulated the method by which parties could nominate their candidates. I may say, further, that the same statute provided for nomination by petition, and provided that a man's name could be gotten upon the ballot in that way.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If I understand the Senator correctly, that was the procedure in the State of Montana.

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Did I understand the Senator correctly?

Mr. WALSH. Yes. I say we have abrogated that procedure now, however, by a primary-election system.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. What I meant to direct the Senator's attention to was this: Where the Constitution gives Congress control over the election of Senators, has the Senator any authority to show that in those States which nominate their Senators in party conventions the use of the word "election," as defined by the authorities which are so ably presented here, would include the party convention, provided the laws of the State do not provide in any way how the candidate for Senator shall be nominated?

Mr. WALSH. I will answer the Senator by saying that I have just invited his attention to a case in Tennessee in which there was no statute at all in relation to the nomination of candidates, and it was held that the word "election" as used in the Constitution did not extend to a primary election which was held simply by the party authority without any right at all under the law. I will also, however, call his attention to the fact that the cases to which I have referred likewise say that any machinery provided or authorized by the local law—primary election, convention, petition, or anything else prescribed by the local law—leading up to and constituting a part of the process by which the final election is reached, is likewise a regulation in relation to the holding of elections within the meaning of the Constitution.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I think I understand the Senator's contention in that respect. What I do not understand, however, is this: The bill before us provides how Senators shall be nominated.

Mr. WALSH. No, Mr. President; it simply makes applicable to Senators whatever State statutes there are applicable to State officers. If there is a State which has no statute at all in relation to the nomination of State officers, then it will likewise be without any statute in relation to the nomination of Senators.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Does the Senator claim that the Congress can provide a law to regulate the nomination of Senators in States which have no law as to their nomination?

Mr. WALSH. The bill does not attempt to do so.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I wanted to get at whether the Senator claimed or thought that the authority of Congress under the Constitution to regulate the election of Senators would extend to such cases?

Mr. WALSH. I entertain not the slightest doubt about it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator thinks it would under the decisions he has cited?

Mr. WALSH. I do.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Although there is no State law controlling the nomination at all?

Mr. WALSH. Exactly. We could go right in. We might feel that some States were away behind the times, and that they were allowing men to be sent as Members of this body who got their nominations by fraudulent practices or otherwise, and that the character of this body was deteriorating by reason of the fact that those States had not proper nominating laws. We could step in then and make a nominating law applicable to the entire Nation or to any States that did not have nominating laws, or generally upon the matter, and require the nominees in the various States to be nominated in accordance with that law.

I apprehend, of course, that no such condition will ever arise. It seems to me an extraordinary state of affairs must exist before such a power as that should be exercised; but that the Congress has that power I do not entertain any doubt at all.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I listened with a good deal of interest this morning to the remarks of the Senator from Delaware [Mr. SAULSBURY] when he made an objection to the provisions of this bill. As a result of his discussion I have very carefully reread the bill with a view of ascertaining in my own mind, at least, whether the parallel really existed which he attempted to draw between the old Federal regulation of elections of Members of Congress and the provisions of this measure, because I have a very lively and disagreeable recollection of the operation of the statute to which the Senator adverts and which I think now is unanimously condemned by an enlightened and dispassionate public sentiment. I am, however, unable to perceive any analogy between the present condition, which makes some legislation of this kind necessary, and the Federal statute concerning the election of Federal officers which was in existence so long.

The old regulations consisted of positive enactments whereby the statutes of the United States were made directly applicable to the machinery of elections, ostensibly designed to protect every man in the casting and counting of his vote, but carried out in practice in such a way as to control and many times to defeat the popular will. This is nothing but an emergency measure, a bill providing for the selection of Members of this body by adopting, through national legislation, the existing local statutes until some affirmative action shall have been taken by the States themselves under the provisions of the seventeenth amendment.

The State which I in part represent here is not very much concerned in this discussion, since it has anticipated the passage of a bill of this kind by the enactment of appropriate legislation relative to the subject.

My construction of this bill is such that if the word "nomination" were entirely excluded from its language the effect would be the same. I believe that the exposition of the law which includes the legal definition of the word "election" as presented by the Senator from Montana is absolutely unanswerable. In fact, ever since the introduction into the United States of the Australian ballot system of election the courts have been filled with controversies which have necessitated an interpretation of the constitutional provisions concerning elections; and I think the general consensus of judicial opinion is that the term "election" is sufficentiy broad to include the machinery which is essential to the perfection of the Australian ballot system, from its inception to its end. Of course, as is well said by the Senator, you can not conceive of any system whereby the final expression of the voter is made manifest through the casting of the so-called Australian ballot that does not include every step leading up to the official publication of that ballot and placing it in the hands of the voter.

So, if the bill read as I think the amendment now under consideration provides that it shall read, so that the word "nomination" should be stricken out of its body entirely, the word "election" would cover everything here that was feared or that seems to be feared from the addition of the word "nomination."

Let us suppose that the bill simply made provision for the election of Senators, without the use of any other word upon that identical subject. What would be the procedure?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. WALSH. Let me suggest this idea to the Senator: I fully agree with him that if this debate had never taken place at all, if the bill had been originally framed in that way and the matter had never been mooted, the word "election" in the bill would embrace the machinery for nomination as well. But does not the Senator feel that in view of the proposed amendment and the discussion that has taken place the adoption of the amendment now would operate to make the court give to the word "election" the restricted meaning?

Mr. THOMAS. Well, it is possible. I hardly think so, because I think the proposed statute would be so clear in its purposes and in its expression as to make it unnecessary for the courts to refer to the matter of contemporaneous discussion or interpretation. But upon the assumption, Mr. President, that the language of the statute is confined to the word "election," what would be the result of it in any State? By way of illustration, what would be the result in the State of Colorado?

The first step in the process of an election would be the selection of a candidate. In what manner would the selection be made manifest? Certainly by the existing statute, which includes primary elections. Would a nomination in any other manner than that provided by the statute be lawful? If not, then the use of the term "election" would be amply sufficient for the purpose.

It is to be observed, too, that this statute is merely designed to meet an emergency. It is not affirmative legislation in the strict sense of the term. Congress does not propose by this measure to prescribe its own method of procedure. It simply declares that the existing machinery of the States shall be made applicable for the selection of Senators of the United States. That machinery may be changed by the States just as completely and with as little restriction after this bill becomes a part of our legislation as before.

If the Congress of the United States were prescribing an elaborate system of election of Senators, beginning with the nomination and ending with the casting of the ballots, I would sympathize most heartily with and doubtless vote in conjunction with those who challenge the power of Congress to provide all the machinery for the selection of a United States Senator from the initial period of nomination down to the final casting of the ballots. I am inclined to think it would have that power, but I am perfectly willing to waive it and solve the doubt in favor of those who contend against its exercise. But, suffice it to say, that is not the purpose of this law at all. Congress is not occupying the attitude which it occupied when it enacted legislation to regulate and control the election of Representatives in Congress. It is merely saying, affirmatively, that the proceeding which the States have provided for certain other defined offices shall be applicable to the election of a Senator until the States themselves shall otherwise provide, and when they do otherwise provide, then the machinery which they enact becomes immediately effective and supersedes the provision that is here set forth.

It seems to me, therefore, Mr. President, that this debate is based upon assumptions which really have no existence in fact, upon apprehensions which may never materialize, upon conditions that are entirely imaginary, or almost entirely so, and that we have overlooked the fact that this is merely designed to tide things over, so to speak, until all the States shall have regulated and adjusted their own legislative machinery to meet and harmonize the conditions and requirements of the new constitutional amendment.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the California case, which has been referred to simply by reference to the digest of the opinion, I think is so thoroughly in point that I might be pardoned for calling attention to it again. In the State of California they had a provision in the constitution which read as follows:

> Every native male citizen of the United States, every male citizen who shall have acquired the rights of citizenship under or by virtue of the treaty of Queretaro, and every male naturalized citizen thereof, who shall have become such 90 days prior to any election, of the age of 21 years, who shall have been a resident of the State one year next preceding the election, and of the county in which he claims his vote 90 days, and in the election precinct 30 days, shall be entitled to vote at all elections which are now or may hereafter be authorized by law.

I call special attention to the language "at all elections which are now or may hereafter be authorized by law." The Legislature of California proceeded to pass a primary election law and to provide that all candidates should be nominated at the primary election, but in prescribing the qualifications for the voters at the primary election they placed in the statute different qualifications for the voters at the primary election than were specified in the constitution in this that the constitution provided that voters must reside within the State for one year prior to the election and that condition was left out of the primary-election law. The question came before the supreme court of the State whether or not that primary-election law was unconstitutional, because it had undertaken to prescribe the qualifications for voters and had prescribed a different qualification for a voter at a primary election than the constitution prescribed for voters at elections, which, of course, raised the question whether a primary election was embraced within the term "elections provided by law." The supreme court of the State held this:

> The primary election provided for in the present act is an election "authorized by law" under the foregoing provision of the constitution.

I do not intend to read the decision, but that one sentence embraces the whole of its spirit. Because there was a different qualification prescribed at the primary election than was named in the constitutional provision which regulated the election, and because a primary election was an election within the meaning of the constitution, the supreme court held that the statute was an unconstitutional statute.

Mr. President, if the sacred right of the State has been invaded by this proposed statute, it is an invasion which is innocuous because of two propositions—first, it is merely temporary, and, second, it has already been more thoroughly accomplished by the seventeenth amendment itself. The seventeenth amendment expressly undertakes to specify the qualifications of the electors by stating that "the electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature." If we can say that as to the election itself and say it properly, and it has been said, it is the supreme law of this land. If that can be done without danger to the rights of the State, what danger is involved in simply providing that candidates shall be nominated according to the law which the State itself has adopted for the nomination of its own candidates? How can any State be wronged or outraged by that kind of a statute? It can change its law as it sees fit at any moment. It is only required to apply to Senators the same rule that it has already seen fit to apply to its own governor, to its own Representatives at Large, and to its other principal State officers.

If, therefore, there is a peculiar condition existing in any State making it necessary for them to have peculiar laws, they have already such laws upon the statute books, and the very laws they have chosen to make to meet their peculiar condition are simply made to apply to the election of a Senator.

Now, suppose we do not enact this statute; then the whole field is left open, and I can show Senators how great wrongs might be perpetrated. Let me take for illustration the State of Mississippi. I am informed that in the State of Mississippi they have a method of nomination which requires a man to receive the majority of the votes of the electors who have been created for the purpose of casting a vote by way of nomination, and also shall have the majority of the votes of the people in some manner with which I am not familiar. I take it that was for the purpose of guarding against some evil. It is the plan they have already adopted and successfully adopted.

Suppose, now, that we do not enact this statute. Suppose we strike out the method of nomination, and suppose then the governor of that State or some other State, seeing that there is no law, being in control of the State officers who print the ballots, should seek arbitrarily to call a rump convention of some kind without any of the safeguards that the legislators of that State have wisely put into the law, and should cause a satellite or himself to be nominated in that way and order the name upon the ballot, cutting out his opponent, would not that opponent and the people of that State have just cause to complain because the very laws they have enacted to safeguard against that kind of wrong have been set aside and disregarded? This law as it is proposed gives to every one of the States the power to utilize; nay, it makes it their duty to utilize, with reference to the election of a Senator, all the safeguards of the laws that were enacted for the purpose of safeguarding their ballot.

Let us assume the case of a governor in a State with perhaps the secretary of state closely allied with him, a governor who sees fit to exercise arbitrary power, who does not care so much for the law, who wants to get himself elected to the Senate. The people of the State have provided a machinery for nominating their State officers, but neither the people of the State nor Congress have provided any means of nominating a Senator. Whereupon they proceed by any kind of irregular method they see fit, by any kind of unfair method they see fit, to nominate or go through the form of nominating some one, perhaps the governor himself, and they put his name on the ballot as a candidate before the people under the law, when if they were given a chance to vote under the law—that is, if the machinery that applies to the nomination of State officers should be applied to the Senate—there might be 10 votes for an opponent to that governor's 1 vote, but still by that arbitrary act the opponent is deprived of any chance to have his name go upon the ballot.

It is well for Senators to think before they vote upon this question. It is important that we should have men in this body who come here really bearing the credentials of their people.

Mr. President, it seems to me that it is a shortsighted policy to say that nominations and elections to the Senate should be left without any rule to govern and upon the theory that a nomination is no part of an election. That is equivalent to saying that by indirection you can defeat the very purpose of the seventeenth amendment. You can provide as often as you please in the seventeenth amendment or in any other constitutional provision that a man shall be elected by voters possessing certain qualifications, yet if you never give those voters a chance to express their opinion as to who shall be the candidate, you can render the section as dead as though it never had been written at all.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I wish to suggest to the Senator from Missouri that the position he assumes in the discussion of this bill is that it is necessary in order to protect the citizens of the States in the enjoyment of the full and free exercise of the franchise that a law must be enacted by Congress. If the Senator will stop for a moment and think, he will remember that the States first acted in favor of elections of Senators by the people. Long before the seventeenth amendment was adopted the States were nominating their Senators by primary elections. The thing I want to do is to leave the matter of party management and control to the States. They can be relied upon to protect themselves. They have done so in the past, and it requires no Federal interference to guarantee to the voter of the State the full and free exercise of the suffrage.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, it seems to me that the argument of my very good friend is quite aside from the question. This provision which we are now discussing does not undertake to interfere with the right of the State for a single minute of time.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Does the Senator——

Mr. REED. The provision which we are now discussing simply states that until a State has acted the rule which it has laid down with reference to the nomination of other officers shall apply here, but the moment the State sees fit to act, if it be the day after this law is enacted or if it be long before the law shall be enacted, this rule ceases to be of any binding force in that State. We do not take away from the States the right to act. We simply act until the States see fit to act, and when the State sees fit to act this law ceases to be so far as that State is concerned.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, if the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri further yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. REED. Yes, sir.

Mr. VARDAMAN. By the terms of this bill, the Federal Government assumes the right to say how the nomination shall be made, how to control and manage party primaries, party conventions, and other methods of selecting candidates.

Mr. REED. No; the Senator is in error. We assume nothing in this law. The right has already been assumed by the Federal Government in the seventeenth amendment to conduct elections; that is, it has prescribed that Senators shall be elected by a vote of the people, and it has prescribed that the qualification of the voters shall be the same as that required by the State law for voters.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, I do not want to interrupt the Senator, but——

Mr. REED. Let me finish my sentence—

The electors in each State shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the State legislature.

That has already been assumed. That means unquestionably, to my mind, that the power exists here to prescribe every rule and regulation if we desire.

Now, if the power already exists, we are assuming nothing when we pass this statute in the way of an assumption of power. We are acting under that provision of the Constitution. But I am replying to the Senator's suggestion in the sense that he, I think, makes it, that by the exercise of this power we are impinging upon a power which the States have the right to exercise.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Undoubtedly.

Mr. REED. I affirm that I am not depriving the Senator of his seat for an instant if I give it to my friend to occupy until the Senator comes to take it, but the Congress is not impinging upon the authority of a State to make any regulation it sees fit, so long as it states that the regulation of Congress shall only be effective in the event the State has not acted, and it shall only be effective until the State shall act. We deprive them of nothing. The State of Mississippi, which is so splendidly represented here by the Senator, can to-morrow, if it sees fit, enact a statute providing that the Senators shall be nominated by what we commonly call mob primaries, or by any other method.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. REED. Yes.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I realize that. I understand that the bill permits the nomination of Senators by the machinery in vogue in the State, which was enacted and prescribed by the legislature. But here is the point I make. When the Federal Government assumes the right to say it may be done in a certain way, it at the same time arrogates to itself the right to prescribe another method and one contrary to the wishes of the people of the State, and possibly against their better interest. It simply permits the people of New York, New England, the Middle West, the extreme West—in a word, the General Government—to prescribe the method by which the Senator from Missouri may receive the nomination from the people of his State. That is what I object to. That is the insidious poison in the bill.

Now, a large majority of the States—my State, for instance—have for 18 years had a primary for the nomination of United States Senator. It was authorized by the constitution of 1890.

Other States had primaries long before the seventeenth amendment was adopted, and I maintain that the States can be relied upon to protect their citizens in the enjoyment of the franchise without Federal interference.

Mr. REED. This leaves the States open to protect their citizens without Federal interference, because it expressly provides that the minute the State gets ready to protect its citizens the State shall have the supreme right to do it. It is a distinct recognition of that right in the State. It is a step in the direction the Senator wants to go, because we have already put into the Constitution the right to regulate.

After the exposition of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH], I think there is but little doubt about the law. I thought there was none before. I am strengthened in that conclusion. If, then, the right has already been conferred by the seventeenth amendment, clearly this statute does not confer it or usurp it, because it already exists. If it already exists, then this statute is, in fact, a recognition of the thought that Congress should never exercise this power if any State sees fit to exercise its own power.

But, Mr. President, this is ending largely in a repetition of the same matter. As far as I am concerned, I would be among the last men in the Senate to take away from the States the full control over their elections and election machinery. If this bill did undertake to invade the States and take away their right of control. I would vote against it; but I am decidedly in favor of a bill which will give us an orderly and clear method by which Senators can be elected and sent to this body and until the various States shall see fit to enact laws suitable to themselves.

It seems to me there ought to be no opposition to the bill, but of course it seems with equal clearness to other Senators that there is a great question involved. I can not agree with that view.

Mr. VARDAMAN. Mr. President, just one moment——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. REED. I was yielding the floor, unless some one desires to say something which will call for a reply.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I simply want to say that I believe the right to make nominations, to regulate parties, belongs inherently to the people of the States, and I do not want the remark made by my good friend, the eloquent and able Senator from Missouri, to go unchallenged, that the Federal Government is yielding to the States the right to regulate their internal affairs. That is what I object to about this bill. It is a recognition of a superior right vested in the Congress of the United States to say to the people of Mississippi or Missouri or any other State in the Union how they shall regulate their primaries or party nominating conventions. That is the point I desire to make.

Mr. REED. But the bill does not say how you shall regulate your primary elections. The bill simply says to you, "You have a primary election law or you have a method which you yourself devised for the nomination of your other State officers. Until you make some change yourself, you may follow in the nomination of a Senator the method you have already provided." My language may have been subject technically to the criticism the Senator makes, but certainly I had no such thought in view as I think he concludes I had from what I said.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Missouri yield to the Senator from North Carolina?

Mr. REED. I do.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish only to ask the Senator from Missouri if, under the bill as brought in by the committee, which I understand him to be advocating, in case there was no provision in a State prescribing the manner of nominating a Representative at Large or prescribing the manner of nominating a governor or executive or administrative officer, that part which relates to nominations would have any effect at all?

If a State has not prescribed any method for the nomination of a Representative at Large, or if it has not prescribed in any manner for the nomination of what are termed the ordinary executive and legislative officers of the State, would the provision of this bill with reference to the nomination of candidates have any effect at all?

Mr. REED. I would answer the Senator in this way: As I understand this bill——

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will let me finish——

Mr. REED. I thought the Senator was through with his question.

Mr. SIMMONS. I want to add that it occurs to me—and I want to see whether the Senator agrees with me—that the provisions of this bill with reference to nominations would only be effective in a State where there was already or should be hereafter prescribed a particular method for the nomination of candidates for Representatives or for State officers, and that if a State does not prescribe any manner at all, then this bill would not affect the right of nomination in that State in any way whatsoever.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I think that the answer is perfectly clear, and upon the face of the bill. If the State has provided a method by which to nominate candidates at large for the National House of Representatives, that method would be followed in nominating a Senator; and if it has made no such provision, but has made provision for the nomination of the ordinary executive and administrative officers of the State, that method would be followed. If it has not made any provision for the nomination of any of the officers I have referred to, which are the ones named in the bill, then this clause in the bill with reference to nominations would be utterly inoperative, and party candidates would then be selected for the Senate in accordance with party usage, just as they now select in some States a candidate for governor or for the House of Representatives by party usage. This would only become operative and binding when there is a law passed by the people of the State regulating that.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is to say, if there is no law now, it would not be effective, and it would not become effective until the State had provided a law for the nomination of these prescribed officers.

Mr. REED. I think that is undoubtedly correct.

Mr. SIMMONS. That being so, the contention of the Senator from Missouri is that it would not in the least interfere with the right of the State to regulate and control that question.

Mr. REED. Not only for the reason given by the Senator from North Carolina, but because the very language of the bill with reference to all cases, even where the States do have laws providing for nominations, still the effect of this bill is limited to such time as the State may otherwise provide; so that it interferes with nobody. If there is a State that is going along in the old-fashioned way of years ago, nominating its candidates by party conventions, they will still go on in the same way; the bill does not apply. If there is a State that has a primary election law which provides a method by which nominations shall be made and that men must be nominated in that way in order to get upon the ticket, then this bill provides the machinery by which candidates for the Senate can have their names placed upon the ticket.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I am astonished at the gloomy picture which the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] has drawn here. I do not know whether it applies to Missouri or other States, but I have no apprehension of any fraud or of any usurpation of that kind taking place in the State which I in part have the honor to represent. I have confidence in the integrity of my people and the honesty of their elections. I have confidence in their belief in popular government, in their sincerity in adopting the seventeenth amendment, and that they propose to give effect by electing Senators who will represent their will and interest. I have such confidence in them that I am not here urging that Congress take charge of our primary elections in order to prevent such usurpations and the defeat of the popular will as the Senator fears. Anyone lacking confidence in the people of his State may want this law. I do not. The people of Tennessee are honest and law-abiding. The Democratic Party of Tennessee is a party of law and order. The Democrats of my State believe in popular government, and they are able to take care of it without the aid of the Federal Government. We do not want Federal supervisors and deputy marshals interfering in the nomination of Senators and Representatives. We are able to take care of our own affairs.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, I hope my friend the Senator from Tennessee will not in any way put into his remarks anything that would indicate that he thinks I referred to my State as a State that could not properly govern itself or a State the governor of which would be likely to be guilty of any improper act.

Mr. SHIELDS. Certainly I do not wish to charge the Senator with any want of confidence in his people. If he takes that view of what I have said, I withdraw it.

Mr. REED. I used the illustration simply as a general one which might happen in any State. It might happen in Tennessee; it might happen in Missouri; it might happen in Massachusetts. We all hope it will not happen, but we have always to consider the possibilities of it.

Mr. SHIELDS. Mr. President, I have no apprehension of it happening in Tennessee.

I am not going to rehearse and repeat the argument I have heretofore made. I wish briefly to refer to the third review of the authorities made by the Senator from Montana [Mr.

WALSH]. When this discussion first began, I understood this bill to be predicated upon the theory that a primary election was an election; I mean a distinct election or function from the election of officers recognized by the Constitution of the United States, and that, under the authority to regulate the manner of holding elections, Congress had the right to regulate nominating conventions and nominating primaries as a distinct function; and that the authorities that were read to-day were cited in support of that proposition.

In answer to that I cited quite a number of authorities holding to the contrary and stated that the great weight of authority was against the proposition that a nominating device, a primary election, was an election in the sense of the constitutions of the States. We have no authority directly construing the word as used in the Constitution of the United States. I especially referred to a case from my own State, not that spoken of to-day by the Senator from Montana, decided by the court of civil appeals, but a case decided by the court of last resort in that State, the supreme court, that of Ledgerwood against Pitts. In that case, in an able, well-considered, and elaborate opinion by Judge McAllister, all the cases are reviewed; and it is there stated that the great weight of authority was that primary elections were not elections in the sense of the term as used in the Constitution.

Later, when we came to discuss this question again, the position of the Senator from Montana, concurred in by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], as I understood them, was different; was that a convention or primary was an integral part of an election to elect officers of the law, and for that reason that Congress had the right to regulate it just as it had the right to regulate the preparation or casting of ballots and the return of the result.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, before the Senator passes from that, I invite his attention to the fact that the very language which he now uses—"an integral part of the election"—is found in the very first case I cited before this body—the Illinois case.

Mr. SHIELDS. I am coming to that.

Mr. WALSH. So that it was not a second position which I took after another position had been abandoned.

Mr. SHIELDS. Now, upon the question as to whether it is an integral part of the case the Senator from Montana cited an Illinois case, and it is the only one in all the books which sustains that position. It is true that case was cited and read from by the Senator in the first discussion of the question; but, as I understood his position then, the two elections—the primary and that for the election of officers—were treated as distinct functions. In the Illinois case it is held that the nominating device is simply a part of the regular election.

All the cases which were cited to sustain the proposition that a primary election was an election within the sense of the Constitution as a distinct function are authorities for holding that such an election and such a nominating device is not an integral part of an election to elect officers, because every one of them treats the primary election as a distinct function from the general election. The Illinois case is the only authority that has been presented here holding, or protending to hold, that a primary election or nominating device is part of an election. That is my reading of the authorities and my analysis of them.

Of course the Senator's opinion is worth as much as mine; but I read the same authorities, and I took another view of them; I construed them differently; and I respectfully submit that an examination of them will show that I am correct. The great weight of authority—case law and textbook law—is against the contention of the advocates of this bill, and sustain my position that nominating devices are not elections within the meaning of constitutional provisions on the subject, and are no part of elections, but mere parts of the machinery of political parties.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I am inclined to agree with the position taken by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS]. If the contention of the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH] and the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] is correct—and I am not prepared to say that it is not correct; indeed, I am rather inclined to think that it is correct—I am rather disposed to believe that when we conferred upon Congress the power to prescribe the manner and time of holding elections for Senators, we also conferred upon it the right to prescribe all of the preliminary steps which lead up to and are essential elements in that election. That is, however, quite a big question, and one which I expect a little later we will be called upon to legislate on somewhat broader lines, and when that happens I expect the powers of Congress in this behalf will be the subject of much controversy on the part of those entertaining different views of the proper construction of the power conferred upon Congress by the seventeenth amendment with respect to this matter. If, however, the contention of the Senator in charge of this bill is correct and the power to prescribe the manner of holding the elections includes the power to prescribe the manner of nomination, all that is necessary would be to provide that the election of Senators should be as is prescribed by the States for the election of certain State officials. The bill will be just as effective in accomplishing the purpose the Senator from Montana and the Senator from Missouri say they have in view if that part of it which relates to the nomination of candidates is eliminated.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to put this case to him?

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. REED. Not for the sake of provoking argument, but to get his views, for I have great respect for his views. Take this sort of a case: A State has a primary election law and a general election law all in one, the law providing that all candidates shall be nominated at a general primary election to be held on the 1st day of August of each election year; that the ballots shall be counted, and the persons receiving the highest number of votes in the Democratic primary shall be placed upon the Democratic ticket, and those receiving the highest number of votes in the Republican primary shall be placed upon the Republican ticket, and that the secretary of state shall print the ballots for all the electors, containing the names of those who are chosen, and no other names shall go upon the ballot unless by petition, and then provisions for nomination by petition are made. Assume those facts. There is no provision in the law to nominate a candidate for Senator at this primary, and there is an absolute inhibition of law of any name going on the general ticket unless the candidate has been nominated at the primary or nominated by petition. In such a case, will the Senator tell us, if we do not pass this bill, how a man can receive a party nomination and how he can get his name upon the ballot? I do not see.

Mr. SIMMONS. This bill, as I understand, provides that, until the States act otherwise, candidates for the Senate shall be nominated and elected according to the method prescribed in the States for the election of candidates for Members at Large of the National House of Representatives.

Mr. REED. But the very proposition now is to strike out the clause relating to nominations.

Mr. SIMMONS. Yes.

Mr. REED. And if we take that out, then we will have a bill saying they shall be elected, but omitting all reference to nominations.

Mr. SIMMONS. But have I not understood the Senator from Montana as contending that when we say that candidates for the Senate shall be elected as the State law prescribes for the election of Representatives at Large, it means that he shall also be nominated in the same way as prescribed for the nomination of Representative at Large?

Mr. REED. I did not so understand the Senator from Montana, but he can answer that better for himself.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, as this discussion involves my own views about the matter, I will say to the Senator from North Carolina, as I said to the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], that if this question had never been mooted in this debate, and if the bill had been drawn and had come in here before this body using only the word "election," providing that the manner of election should be just the same as is prescribed for the election of State officers, I should say unquestionably that it would embrace all the preliminary machinery.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is exactly what I understood the Senator to say.

Mr. WALSH. But this bill has not been so drawn; it has been drawn so that there would appear to be a difference in the significance of the word "election" as used in the proposed statute; that is to say, it would seem that the draftsman of the bill gave it a restricted significance.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is as I understood the Senator.

Mr. WALSH. In view of the amendment which has been proposed and in view of the discussion which has ensued, I am simply apprehensive that if we should adopt the amendment, the court might give to the word "election" the restricted significance.

Mr. SIMMONS. Then, as I understand the Senator's position, it is this—and it is just as I understood it in the first instance—that the term "election" is so broad that when we give the power to prescribe the manner of election, that includes the power to prescribe the manner of nomination, and when we say that a Senator shall be elected in a particular way, in such manner as a particular candidate in a State is elected, that carries with it the requirement that he shall be nominated in the same way as such State official is required by State law to be nominated. That is what I understood the Senator to say a little while ago in reply to the Senator from Colorado. Now, the Senator has just said, as he has said heretofore, that he would have no doubt about that construction, but for the fact that the bill as reported contained a provision for the nomination as well as for the election; and if that provision should be stricken out upon consideration here, he fears the court would accept that action as an expression of opinion on the part of the Congress that the term "election" should receive a restricted construction and one not including the nomination machinery.

Mr. WALSH. I should be apprehensive that the court might so hold.

Mr. SIMMONS. That is what I understood the Senator to say. I want to say to the Senator that, while it is a well-known rule of construction that the court will attempt in various and sundry ways to ascertain what was the intent of the Congress with respect to its enactments, that rule only applies when the meaning and the intent of the legislation, gathered from the language employed, is involved in serious doubt. As I understand the Senator, he has very little, if any, doubt about it, and I am inclined to believe his confidence is well founded.

Further, Mr. President, if the fact that the provision with reference to nominations as originally incorporated in the bill is stricken out on the floor by amendment should be taken into consideration by the court in passing upon the meaning of the law, the discussion contemporaneously with the elimination of the provision would also be taken into consideration by the court in determining what force and effect it should give to the fact of the elimination of that particular clause from the bill. The discussion here, if it were construed by the court in this connection, would show that there were diverse opinions; it would show that there was an expression of opinion on the part of the manager of the bill in behalf of the committee presenting the bill that the language with reference to nominations was not necessary in order to carry out the purpose which he, which the committee, and which Congress probably had in view. It would show, furthermore, that Senators who participated in the debate asked for its elimination on the ground that it was not necessary to accomplish the purpose of the proponents of the legislation. Therefore I maintain that the fact of its elimination could not possibly, in these circumstances and conditions, have any influence upon the mind of the court in reaching a conclusion as to what would be the meaning of the word "election" as used in this particular statute.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, if it will not interrupt the Senator at this point——

Mr. SIMMONS. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. REED. If the Senator thinks that the word "election" does embrace primary elections, and if he thinks that even with the word "nominations" stricken out the bill still will include the nominations; that, notwithstanding this debate, that construction will be given, then what use is there in striking the word out and injecting a matter of doubt or debate into the bill? If the same result is to be obtained, why amend the bill to get a result that is going to be obtained anyway?

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the Senator is somewhat anticipating me. I said in the beginning—and I am going to speak further as to that—that I expected this very question of the power of Congress under the Constitution over nominations of candidates to be voted for in the States would shortly be presented to Congress in a very much broader aspect than it is presented in this bill; that there was divergence of opinion with respect to that question; and that it is not necessary for us to pass upon it in this bill when it is not essential from the standpoint of the mover and supporters of the bill. Under these circumstances I suggested that it might be well to postpone the ultimate and final decision of that question until it is raised directly and a decision was necessary to the legislation.

I want to say for myself that I strongly incline to believe the seventeenth amendment conferred the power contended for by the Senators from Montana and Missouri upon the Congress of the United States. In fact, I am inclined to think that the Congress had that power before the adoption of the seventeenth amendment. Having adopted this amendment, having conferred upon the people the power to elect Senators by a direct vote of the people, I do not believe we ought to attempt in any way to abridge any of the rights incident to the exercise of the new power we have conferred upon the people, and I am not myself going to attempt to do it. I am going to meet that issue squarely.

I wish to say to the Senator, however, that there are Senators here who feel that this question has not yet been fully considered; that it is a very big and a very important and a very far-reaching question, and that it is not necessary to inject it into this bill. From the standpoint of the Senator from Montana it does not seem to be necessary, so I see no reason why it should be done. I wish to say, however, so far as this particular measure is concerned, that outside of the fact that it impliedly recognizes a power that some of my colleagues, with whom I do not altogether agree, do not think we possess, I think the bill is the least objectionable method of the exercise of the power, if such power has been conferred upon Congress.

This bill does not attempt to take from the States the right to control the manner of nominating candidates for the Senate. It does not attempt to prescribe any method of nomination or any method of election. It simply says that if the States of the Union have already prescribed a method of nomination or a method of election, that method shall be followed in the nomination and election of United States Senators.

The meaning of that is that if the States have prescribed any method of nomination of candidates for Representatives at Large or for executive and administrative State officers, that method shall be followed. It means that if a State has not already prescribed a method of nominating Representatives at Large or nominating administrative and executive officers, that when it does prescribe a method it shall be followed. The Congress does not attempt to prescribe any method. It leaves that to the States.

I think the Senator from Missouri agrees with me as to that construction. I do not think you could put it in a more innocent form, so far as State rights are concerned. My only contention is that it is not necessary to enter upon this question now; that it is going to arise later; that the question of power is going to be one of serious debate and difference of opinion among Senators; and that in this bill, where it is not necessary, according to the contention of Senators favoring it, to pass upon that question.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, a while back I asked the Senator a question which was not then answered, because the Senator was going on with some observations he had to make. I wish to renew that question, in view of his statement that it is not necessary to provide any method for nominations; and lest it may have escaped the Senator's attention, I will state it again.

Mr. SIMMONS. I wish to qualify that. I wish to say that from the discussion I have heard, and the limited investigation I have been able to make, I am inclined to entertain that opinion, along with the Senator from Montana.

Mr. REED. That is to say the Senator's position now is that he thinks that with the word "nomination" stricken out it means just the same as it does with the word "nomination" in, and that we ought to strike out the word out of consideration for the feelings of those who fear that the word does mean something. I have great respect for the opinions of Senators who have said that the word "nomination" means a great deal.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator could not have quite understood me about that. I said that was a very big question, and I thought we had not thoroughly investigated it and considered it up to this time, and I expected it to arise very soon in a way in which we would have to meet it directly.

Mr. REED. As to the matter of necessity, of course, if it is perfectly clear that the word "nomination" in this bill is without any significance or meaning, that the bill means the same without the word as it does with the word "nomination" in it, then the States would be compelled to make their nominations for Senators under the rules they have already laid down for the nomination of Congressmen at Large. Suppose, however, that is a mistake. I must assume that it may be a mistake when Senators like the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], lawyers of great ability, including himself, who have spoken upon that side of the question, say that in their opinion there is a great difference. Assume that they are right, and that we should find that the bill would not include nominations, then what would the Senator do in the case which I stated to him before, which was in substance this:

Assume that a State has a law which provides that no name shall go upon a ballot unless the candidate is nominated at a primary election, and that the law relating to primary elections provides how each particular officer shall be nominated, naming the officer, and not naming a Senator. How, then, would we get the name of a Senator upon a ballot?

I am confident that that situation exists in State after State; and if it does, we ought to remove the difficulty. It is my opinion that if this bill is amended so that you strike out the word "nomination" you have stricken out the very vitals of the bill. It is my opinion, after this debate, that if the amendment which is now offered should be adopted any court would be compelled to rule that Congress, by its express action, had expressed the intent and the purpose not to include primary elections.

What other construction can a court give? Here is a bill brought in with the word "nomination" in it. A motion is made to strike out the word "nomination." The reasons advanced in support of that motion are that by leaving in the word "nomination" you have invaded the rights of the States. Thereupon, after full debate, those views prevail and the word is stricken out. It seems to me, then, that any court, in construing this act, would say that Congress had plainly shown its purpose to limit the act simply to the election itself and not to the means by which the names of the candidates were to be placed upon the ticket at that election.

I do not think there is a question of doubt now about the proposition that if this amendment were adopted a court would be compelled to say that we had cut out of the act all questions relating to nominations.

I do not know what my friend refers to when he says that this matter may come up in a more serious form. It is sufficiently serious now. One-third of the Members of this body go out of this body in less than a year from this date. Their successors must be elected in the natural course of affairs at the next general election, to be held next fall. If you have one-third of the Members of this body here with doubtful titles to their seats, you can not prophesy what chaos may be introduced.

It is true that State legislatures may be assembled in extraordinary session; laws may be passed; but the very purpose of this bill is to make it unnecessary to assemble the general assemblies of States in extraordinary session. Assume that one-third of the seats are vacated; assume that that leaves one party in control here by a few votes; assume that party feeling runs high, and that some advantage would be gained by declaring all or a large part of these elections void because the candidates were not nominated in accordance with the laws regulating the nominations of other candidates in the States, and those men are thrown out of office, thus depriving the people of their States of representation here. Shall we permit a thing of that kind to occur, and if so, for what reason? Because the distinguished Senator from North Carolina says the act means the same with the word "nomination" out that it does with the word in?

I can not think that is wise. Why not make the act perfectly clear by leaving the word in?

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator will do me the justice to say that in saying that I thought it meant the same, I was following the lead of the able lawyer who in part represents the State of Montana in this body, who said he had no doubt that it would mean the same.

Mr. REED. I think that is not quite a fair statement of the position of the Senator from Montana. The Senator from Montana said, and he has said it two or three times now with great clearness, that if the bill as brought in had simply used the word "election," and had not used the word "nomination," then when it came to be construed by a court, he was very clear that the court would have said that the word "election" was broad enough to cover the nomination, because the nomination was a necessary incident to the election; but when the bill is brought here with the word "nomination" in it, and that word is stricken out, the act of striking it out is indicative of the legislative intent to give to the word "election" a narrower meaning; and the Senator from Montana states with very great clearness that it is now, in his opinion at least, a matter of grave doubt.

There are enough doubts which arise in the construction of every law that is made. After you have drawn it with all possible care and have eliminated all possible doubts that occur to you, there is always enough doubt arising, so that the wise drafter of a law seeks in every possible way to remove all doubts he can think of or conceive of. Here, however, we are asked by the Senator from North Carolina to draw a law which will certainly contain a doubt as to its construction, because the doubt has been already suggested and raised, and minds differ on it.

Let us face this matter squarely. Let us either vote with the Senator from Tennessee upon the ground he so ably presents, namely, that Congress ought not in any way to assume power to legislate with reference to a nomination, or let us vote squarely for the other proposition and assert that Congress does have that power and that we propose to exercise it candidly and fairly. Let us not take the view that the act means the same thing anyway and that we can save somebody's feelings by doing something that is meaningless. That does not seem to me to be the part of wisdom.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Tennessee to the amendment of the committee.

The Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee (when his name was called). I announce my pair with the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] and withhold my vote.

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON]. I transfer that pair to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. NORRIS (when his name was called). I am paired for the day with the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. HUGHES]; but I am reliably informed that, if present, he would vote the same as I would on this question, and I therefore feel at liberty to vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Sentaor from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. THOMAS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], which I transfer to my colleague [Mr. SHAFROTH] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. SMITH of Michigan (when Mr. TOWNSEND's name was called). My colleague [Mr. TOWNSEND] is unavoidably absent from the Senate. He is paired with the junior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON]. If my colleague were present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. WEEKS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES], which I transfer to the senior Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] and will vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the junior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and will vote. I vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. GALLINGER. I have been requested to announce a pair between the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE] and the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON].

Mr. FLETCHER. I have a pair with the junior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. MARTIN] and will vote. I vote "yea."

Mr. CHILTON. I wish to announce the necessary absence of the junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] and his pair, as already announced, with the senior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. BRANDEGEE].

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the necessary absence of the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. He has a general pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON].

Mr. KENYON. I desire to announce the absence from the city of my colleague [Mr. CUMMINS]. If present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. RANSDELL. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. THORNTON] on account of sickness. If present, he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 16, nays 37, as follows:

YEAS—16.

So Mr. SHIELDS's amendment to the amendment of the committee was rejected.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question recurs upon the amendment of the committee.

Mr. WALSH. I have some amendments to the amendment which I desire to submit. I move to substitute for the word "time," in line 2, page 2, the word "term," so as to read:

That the regular election held in any State next preceding the expiration of the term for which any Senator was elected.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. It has been repeatedly asserted that the bill provides that the act should be enforced only in those cases which have made no specific provision for the nomination or election of a United States Senator, and likewise that as soon as any such State should make provision specifically to cover the case it should be of no further force and effect. The committee intended that that idea should be expressed in the language found in lines 12 and 13, on page 2:

Until or unless otherwise specially provided by the legislature thereof.

The senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], however, expressed to me his doubt as to whether that language sufficiently met the case. He did not express in any particular way why it did not or how it did not. I said to him that I would ask to amend by striking out that language and offer a separate section, which would leave the matter in no doubt whatever. I accordingly move to strike out the language of the bill as it appears on page 2, lines 12 and 13, as follows:

Until or unless otherwise specially provided by the legislature thereof.

And to add to the bill the following:

SEC. 3. If any State shall have made, or whenever any State shall in the future make, provision by appropriate legislation for the nomination or election of United States Senators, this act shall be of no effect therein so far as it shall conflict with any provision so made.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to call the Senator's attention to the word "or." It seems to me that that ought to be "and."

Mr. WALSH. I gave attention to that, and I put in the word "or" "with malice aforethought."

Mr. NORRIS. With that word in, if some State should provide for the nomination and no provision for election, or, vice versa, if it should provide for the election and do nothing about the nomination, this law would have no effect in that State, as I understand the reading of the Senator's amendment.

Mr. WALSH. It could not possibly, in any case, even if the word "and" were used. The idea that occurred to me was that with the word "and" used the law would be in force and effect until the State had provided for both the case of nomination and of election. That was not the purpose, and so we do not want the act to so read. Whenever a State shall provide a statute in relation to the election, then this act shall be no longer in force or effect in relation to the election. If it shall provide a method for the nomination, it shall be no longer in force or effect so far as nominations are concerned, but shall remain in force so far as the election is concerned.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator think that would be the effect of it?

Mr. WALSH. I think so.

Mr. NORRIS. I, of course, never examined the amendment, and I only know of it from having heard it read by the Senator; but suppose a State should provide for the election and not for the nomination; in that case this law would have no effect in that State, as I understand the amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Yes; indeed, it would. There is now in a State, we will say, a general law in relation to the general administrative and executive officers for both elections and nominations. The legislature of that State passes a law in relation to the election of United States Senators that will govern. But it does not do anything at all about the nomination of United States Senators. The nomination for United States Senators would then, in pursuance to the provisions of this act, be governed by the State law in relation to the nomination of the general administrative and executive officers.

Mr. NORRIS. In other words, if I understand the Senator's construction, in the case he puts this law would be in effect as to nominations, but not as to elections in that particular State.

Mr. WALSH. Exactly; and whenever the State makes specific provision for the election——

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator want to do that?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. NORRIS. That is not what the Senator was trying to accomplish, as it seemed to me, by the amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Undoubtedly it is. The legislature of the State deems it wise to make some specific provision in relation to the ultimate election of United States Senators, and it makes that provision. It does not say a word about nominations, but it has a general law in relation to the nomination of general officers. Now the specific provision in relation to elections governs the final election, but the general law applicable to nominations generally governs the nomination of United States Senators.

Mr. NORRIS. But as I understand the amendment, in the case the Senator puts it would not bear the construction he places on it. In other words, it seems to me from the reading of the suggested amendment that in the case he put it would be just the same as though we had not legislated. I should like to hear the amendment read again.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be read.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, lines 14 and 15, strike out the words:

Until or unless otherwise specially provided by the legislature thereof.

And at the end of the bill add a new section as follows:

SEC. 3. If any State shall have made, or whenever any State shall in the future make, provision by appropriate legislation for the nomination or election of United States Senators, this act shall be of no effect therein so far as it shall conflict with any provision so made.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I think it would be better to leave the bill as it is than to adopt the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana. It is perfectly clear, under the original provision as contained in section 2, that the moment any State legislature makes provision for the nomination or election of United States Senators section 2 will cease to be operative in that State. The language is very precise. It is:

That in any State wherein a United States Senator is hereafter to be elected, either at a general election or at any special election called by the executive authority thereof to fill a vacancy, until or unless otherwise specially provided by the legislature thereof, the nomination of candidates for such office shall be made—

And so on.

Obviously the moment provision is made, or if provision be now made in any State, the provision which follows will not apply in that State.

I think there is this danger in adopting the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana: The provision of his amendment is that whenever State legislation of the character described shall be adopted, then the act in so far as it conflicts with the legislation shall cease to have effect in that State. There are other provisions in the act than those contained in section 2. For instance, section 1 provides a general rule that we shall never want to have interfered with by any State legislature. That provision is:

That at the regular election held in any State next preceding the expiration of the term for which any Senator was elected to represent such State in Congress, at which election a Representative to Congress is regularly by law to be chosen, a United States Senator from said State shall be elected by the people thereof for the term commencing on the 4th day of March next thereafter.

That is a general provision with reference to the election of United States Senators, and it fixes a uniform date for the election, just as Congress fixed a uniform date for the election of Representatives in Congress. Certainly we do not want to interfere with that provision. We want that provision to continue in operation, no matter what the State shall legislate. The uniformity provision with reference to the Members of the House of Representatives was passed for the very purpose of getting rid of the differing provisions of the State legislatures. We want that uniformity to continue.

Then there is at the end of section 2 a proviso:

And provided further, That in any case the candidate for Senator receiving the highest number of votes shall be deemed elected.

That ought to be continued as the rule, no matter what any State may legislate upon the subject, because if we do not have that rule continue it is apt to result in confusion. For example, suppose that in the State of Vermont no candidate for the Senate should receive a clear majority of all the votes cast. Under their statute there is, I think, a requirement that when no candidate for a particular office receives a majority of all the votes cast the authority to elect devolves upon the legislature. Of course, that would be, so far as a United States Senator is concerned, in the very teeth of the seventeenth amendment, which requires an election by the people; and it is necessary that there should be a rule declared by Congress which will make it certain that in every election the Senator will be elected. Unless we so declare there may be doubt as to whether it will require a majority of all the votes cast or only a plurality.

So we put into the law the provision which I have read, that in any case the candidate for Senator receiving the highest number of votes shall be deemed elected.

There are these two provisions in the bill which we do not want to disturb by any subsequent legislation which may be enacted by a State, and I fear that some such result as that might come about if we adopt the amendment which is suggested by the Senator from Montana. If we leave the bill as it is, then the limiting clause "until or unless otherwise specially provided by the legislature thereof" applies only to that part of the bill we desire it to apply to.

I hope the amendment will not prevail.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have felt and feel now that the amendment of the committee as originally drawn embraces everything that is contained in the proposed section 3, and for that reason I shall vote to retain the amendment as submitted by the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Montana to the amendment of the committee.

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I suggest a change in the phraseology of the bill. In the print I have—the composite print—at line 19, page 2, the language now is:

Regulating the nomination and election of candidates for Members at Large—

And so forth.

While we nominate candidates, we do not elect candidates. We elect Members. I suggest that it should be changed so as to read:

Regulating the nomination of candidates for and election of Members at Large.

Mr. WALSH. The amendment is quite agreeable to me, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the desk print, line 19, page 2, after the word "nomination," strike out the words "and election," and before the word "Members" insert the words "and election of," so as to read:

Regulating the nomination of candidates for and election of Members at Large of the National House of Representatives.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I wish to ask the Senator from Montana what was done with the amendment proposed by the Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], in the first section to strike out the words "was elected" and insert in lieu of these words the language "has been chosen"?

Mr. WALSH. I will state to the Senator that no action has been taken upon that amendment. I rather understood the Senator from New York, at the time he tendered it, that the substitution of the word "term" for "time" would meet the purpose he had in mind in offering the amendment. I think that the language suggested by the Senator ought not to be inserted, because the Senator from Utah will recall that section 1 was intended to cover only the case of an election occurring at the conclusion of the entire term for which a Senator was elected.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I only called attention to it in order that it might not be overlooked. I have not any suggestion to make about it.

Mr. WALSH. Lest there should be any question about it, I think perhaps the question ought to be put on the amendment. I suggest that the condition is met by the amendment already adopted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment submitted by the Senator from New York must be formally offered if it is to be voted upon.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not offer it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

COMMISSION OF PHYTOPATHOLOGY.

Mr. SHIVELY. From the Committee on Foreign Relations I report back favorably without amendment the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 110) authorizing the President to accept an invitation to participate in an International Commission of Phytopathology, and I submit a report (No. 247) thereon. I ask for the immediate consideration of the joint resolution.

The Secretary read the joint resolution; and there being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration. It authorizes the President to accept an invitation extended by the Republic of France to the Government of the United States to be represented by delegates in an International Commission of Phytopathology, to be held in Rome, Italy, February 24, 1914; but no appropriation shall be granted at any time for expenses of delegates or for other expenses incurred in connection with the commission.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RICHARD C. REED.

Mr. O'GORMAN. From the Committee on Naval Affairs I report back favorably without amendment the bill (S. 3997) to waive for one year the age limit for the appointment as assistant paymaster of the United States Navy in the case of Landsman for Electrician Richard C. Reed, United States Navy, and I submit a report (No. 248) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the bill.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to ask the Senator from New York a question.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I will state that this person took his examination, but the examination was not passed upon until a few days after he had passed his twenty-fifth year. He would not be eligible, though he had successfully passed his examination, in the absence of this enabling statute, which we have considered favorably at the suggestion of the Navy Department, and which we report favorably.

Mr. SMOOT. Did the applicant fail in his examination?

Mr. O'GORMAN. No; he was eligible when he took the examination.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the bill was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. SHIVELY. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 15 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock and 35 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Thursday, February 12, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

NOMINATION.

Executive nomination received by the Senate February 11, 1914.

CONSUL.

Otis A. Glazebrook, of Elizabeth, N. J., to be consul of the United States of America at Jerusalem, Palestine, vice William Coffin, appointed consul general at Budapest.

CONFIRMATIONS.

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate February 11, 1914.

SECRETARIES OF EMBASSIES.

Thomas Hinckley to be second secretary of the embassy at Vienna, Austria.

Fred Morris Dearing to be secretary of the embassy at Madrid, Spain.

Arthur Mason Jones to be second secretary of the embassy at St. Petersburg, Russia.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

WEDNESDAY, February 11, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

O Thou, who art ever in the light, by day and by night, in the seedtime and in the harvest, in the laws which environ us, in the still, small voice ever speaking to us, in Holy Writ which has come down to us out of the ages—

A glory gilds the sacred page,
Majestic, like the sun:
It gives a light to every age;
It gives, but borrows none—

strengthens the weak, lifts up the fallen, comforts the sorrowing, cheers the dying; may it be a light to our feet, illumine our homes, and guide us as a Republic on our way. This we ask in the name of Him who revealed Thy loving heart and tender mercies, and glory and honor and praise be Thine forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 8667. An act to promote the efficiency of the Naval Militia, and for other purposes.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. 65. An act to amend an act entitled "An act providing that the State of Wyoming be permitted to relinquish to the United States certain lands heretofore selected and to select other lands from the public domain in lieu thereof," approved April 12, 1910; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

RAILROADS IN ALASKA.

The SPEAKER. The House resolves itself automatically into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (S. 48) to authorize the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes, with the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] in the chair.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill S. 48, the Alaskan railroad bill, with Mr. HARRISON in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill S. 48, the Alaskan railroad bill, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 48) to authorize the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the special rule adopted by the House, all general debate having closed, the Clerk will read the bill under the five-minute rule for amendment.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that we read the House bill as a substitute in lieu of the Senate bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] asks unanimous consent that the substitute be read instead of the Senate bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, would not the gentleman make his request so that the substitute be read as an original bill, because the substitute is an amendment, and there could be only one amendment? If an amendment were proposed, there could be no amendment to the amendment.

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes. I will put my request in that form, that the substitute be read as an original bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the substitute be read as an original bill. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. That would be read, then, by sections.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, would not the Chairman think we would have a better procedure if the bill were read by paragraphs rather than by sections? We have had instances of the reading of bills by sections under the five-minute rule. This is not a long bill, but when a bill is read by sections it adds to the confusion.

Mr. HOUSTON. I would be perfectly willing to do that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Would the gentleman embody that in his request?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes. Mr. Chairman, I request that the bill be read by paragraphs instead of by sections.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin object?

Mr. STAFFORD. No. I modify my request so as to provide that the bill be read by paragraphs instead of by sections.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Chairman, I want to understand the parliamentary status of it. If the substitute is read, as I understand the gentleman's request, the substitute will be considered as an original bill in the House?

Mr. MANN. Yes; and the same rule as to amendments.

Mr. DAVENPORT. It would not be governed by the rule as to an amendment to an amendment, but would be subject to amendment as any other bill?

Mr. MANN. Yes. That is the reason we are trying to do it in that way.

Mr. DAVENPORT. That is the reason why I asked, so that there would not be any parliamentary complications.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] asks unanimous consent that the House bill be read by paragraphs instead of by sections, in lieu of the Senate bill. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

That the President of the United States is hereby empowered, authorized, and directed to adopt and use a name by which to designate the railroad or railroads and properties to be located, owned, acquired, or operated under the authority of this act; to employ such officers, agents, or agencies, in his discretion, as may be necessary to enable him to carry out the purposes of this act, such officers, agents, or agencies to be appointed or designated by him, or under his direction; to authorize and require such officers, agents, or agencies to perform any or all of the duties imposed upon him by the terms of this act; to detail and require any officer or officers in the Engineer Corps in the Army or Navy, or any official in the civil list of the United States, to perform service under this act; to fix the compensation of all officers, agents, or employees appointed or designated by him; to designate and cause to be located a route or routes for a line or lines of standard-gauge railroad in the Territory of Alaska not to exceed 1,000 miles, to be so located as to connect one or more of the open Pacific Ocean harbors on the southern coast of Alaska with the navigable waters in the interior of Alaska, and with a coal field or fields yielding coal sufficient in quality and quantity for naval use, so as best to aid in the development of the agricultural and mineral or other resources of Alaska, and the settlement of the public lands therein, and so as to provide transportation of coal for the Army and Navy, of troops, arms, munitions of war, of the mails, and for other governmental and public uses, and for the transportation of passengers and property; to construct and build a standard-gauge railroad or railroads, with the necessary branch lines, feeders, sidings, switches, and spurs along such route or routes as he may so designate and locate; to purchase or otherwise acquire all real and personal property necessary to carry out the purposes of this act; to exercise the power of eminent domain in acquiring property for such use, which use is hereby declared to be a public use, by condemnation in the courts of Alaska in accordance with the laws now or hereafter in force there; to acquire rights of way, terminal grounds, and all other rights; and to exercise all the powers granted to railroad companies under and by virtue of the act of Congress entitled "An act extending the homestead laws and providing for right of way for railroads in the District of Alaska, and for other purposes," approved May 14, 1898, and all amendments thereto, to purchase or otherwise acquire all necessary equipment for the construction and operation of such railroad or railroads for the transportation of passengers and property; to build or otherwise acquire docks, wharves, terminal facilities, and all structures needed for the equipment and operation of such railroad or railroads; to fix, change, or modify rates for the transportation of passengers and property subject to the supervision of the Interstate Commerce Commission, as hereinafter provided; to receive compensation therefor, and to perform generally all the usual duties of a common carrier by railroad; to make and establish rules and regulations, not in violation of law, for the control and operation of said railroad or railroads; to employ officers, agents, and employees for the conduct of the business of said railroad or railroads, and to fix and provide their compensation; to lease the said railroad or railroads, including telegraph and telephone lines, after completion, upon such terms as he may deem proper, but no lease shall be for a longer period than 20 years, or in the event of failure to lease, to operate the same until the further action of Congress; to lease, purchase, condemn, or otherwise acquire any other line or lines of railroad in Alaska which may be necessary to complete the construction of the line or lines of railroad designated or located by him in the first instance, upon such terms as he may deem proper; to make contracts or agreements with any railroad or steamship company or vessel owner for joint transportation of passengers or property, and to make such other contracts as may be necessary to carry out any of the purposes of this act; to transfer any tools, equipment, or other property belonging to the United States and used in the construction of the Panama Canal or other Government work for the use of such railroad and railroads in Alaska; and no charge shall be made therefor.

The authority herein granted shall include construction, maintenance, and operation of telegraph and telephone lines so far as they may be necessary or convenient in the construction and operation of the railroad or railroads as herein authorized, and they shall perform generally all the usual duties of telegraph and telephone lines for hire; and the Interstate Commerce Commission shall have as full power and authority over all matters connected with such telegraph and telephone line or lines, whether engaged in transmitting messages from one place in the Territory of Alaska to another place therein, or to any other State, Territory, or District of the United States, or to any foreign country, as it has by law over other telephone and telegraph lines engaged in sending messages from one State, Territory, or District of the United States to any other State, Territory, or District of the United States, or to any foreign country.

That it is the intent and purpose of Congress through this act to authorize and empower the President of the United States, and he is hereby fully authorized and empowered, through such officers, agents, or agencies as he may appoint or employ, to do all lawful acts and things in addition to those specially authorized in this act necessary to enable him to accomplish the purposes and objects of this act: Provided, That the President is hereby authorized to withdraw, locate, and dispose of, under such rules and regulations as he may prescribe, such area or areas of the public domain along the line or lines of such proposed railroad or railroads for town-site purposes as he may from time to time designate.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, section 1, by striking out all after the semicolon in line 22, on page 11, down to and including the word "lease" in line 1, on page 12.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, what I desire to do is to amend this so that the following language will be stricken from the bill:

To lease the said railroad or railroads, including telegraph and telephone lines, after completion, upon such terms as he may deem proper, but no lease shall be for a longer period than 20 years, or in the event of failure to lease.

That is the language I desire to strike out, so it will provide that if this law is passed and the railroad is constructed the Government shall continue to operate the line until Congress takes up the subject of leasing and permits it to be leased. If the Government makes this appropriation, I am opposed to the Government leasing the line until it is first shown what the probabilities are of the Government making a success of its operation; and I believe, if we are going to vote this appropriation, the Government ought to be required to operate it, at least to make the experiment, if we are going into the experiment, so that we can ascertain whether the Government can make a success of it or not, and not lay the foundation now for a leasing contract that would probably be entered into as soon as the road was constructed.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVENPORT. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is the gentleman acquainted with the policy pursued by the French Republic in the operation of its railroads?

Mr. DAVENPORT. Historically, I am.

Mr. STAFFORD. I only have a slight knowledge of it; but as I recall, the French Government provided the right of way and other utilities, but leased the lines for long-term periods. Can the gentleman inform the committee as to the successful operation of that policy by the Republic of France?

Mr. DAVENPORT. I can not, Mr. Chairman; and I take the position that whether success or failure may have been accomplished by the French Government, the case would not be a parallel one; and therefore when we start in this policy we ought to carry it far enough, by direct operation by the Government, to see whether or not it can be made a success. That is why I believe this amendment should be adopted.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. DAVENPORT. Yes.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the gentleman's amendment were to prevail, the Government would be compelled to operate this railroad, would it not?

Mr. DAVENPORT. Until further directed by Congress.

Mr. HARDWICK. I want to see what it means. So we will be committed not only to Government ownership, but to Government operation if the gentleman's amendment prevails.

Mr. DAVENPORT. If my amendment should prevail, that would be the effect of it.

Mr. BRYAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DAVENPORT. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. BRYAN. If we adopt this amendment, will the gentleman then favor the bill?

Mr. DAVENPORT. I suggest to the gentleman that I have a right to try to perfect the bill, and then I will pursue my own course when it is perfected.

Mr. BRYAN. I do not question the gentleman's right.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I think this amendment is a good amendment.

Mr. HARDWICK. I agree with the attitude of the gentleman from Oklahoma on this bill, as I have understood it, up to the present moment. I agree with him entirely that this bill ought not to pass. I do not believe the Government of the United States ought to undertake the construction or operation of a railroad whether that railroad be located at the Equator, at the Pole, or in this country. I do believe, however, that if we could take it in the alternative it would be better to construct a railroad and lease it than it would be to own the railroad and operate it. So that I find myself utterly opposed to this particular amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma.

I want to say a few words about this measure, because the gentleman's proposition brings us to a discussion of every phase of this bill. I want to say, in the first place, that if this bill were presented to a business man, in my judgment there is not a good business man in the United States who would favor it. I doubt if there is a business man in this country who would undertake either to spend or obligate himself to spend $36,000,000 on the amount of information that either the President, the Secretary of the Interior, or this House has on this question. I doubt if any private business company or corporation would authorize the construction of more than 1,000 miles of railroad when the great part of it has never yet been surveyed even. While the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. WICKERSHAM] was making his six-hour speech he stated, in answer to some questions that I propounded to him, that most if not all of this proposed railroad had been surveyed, or the country through which it was to run, under the terms of this bill, had been surveyed.

When I pressed him to know exactly by whom and how the survey was made the gentleman from Alaska [Mr. WICKERSHAM] said that most of it, pointing out on the map, had been surveyed for dirt roads. And yet, without any engineer's report that this thing is feasible, that it is practicable, that a railroad can be built at all, or if built ought to be built from an economic standpoint, with no preliminary survey upon which to rest it, we propose to enact this legislation.

Now, I want to ask the gentlemen in charge of the measure how they can insist, as a practical proposition, upon any such course as that. It is no answer to say that the President of the United States is not bound to build this railroad; it is no answer to say that we have merely delegated to the President the authority to construct this railroad, that he need not exercise that authority unless and until these necessary preliminary steps are taken. The burden is on us here and now to perform our own duty, not to enact this bill in any event until these things are done. We can not shift every burden to the shoulders of the President of the United States.

One of the planks in the platform on which you and I were elected was a declaration that the three branches of the Government—the executive, legislative, and judicial—are independent and coordinate, not subordinate one to the other; that each of us have our duties to perform to the constituency we represent and to the people of the United States.

Now, I imagine it will be an inadequate answer if any Member undertakes to say that he voted for this bill with the idea that it would do no harm, because the President of the United States would have manhood and wisdom enough not to do it if it was unwise. We are discharging duties, not delegating powers; we are, or ought to be, acting for the people of the United States, and not passing our responsibilities and burdens over to another branch of this Government.

Why should we have this bill at all? Is it to reach the coal mines? From my reading, which is somewhat cursory, it is true, but as far as my limited opportunity would permit, I have been convinced that the construction of thirty-odd miles of railroad would reach all the coal fields in Alaska that are known. And yet gentlemen who urge the bill in public and private are insisting that it is necessary to reach these great coal fields in order to supply the Navy of the United States on the Pacific coast. I want to ask these gentlemen how they can urge this contention, in view of the fact that it will only take 33 miles of railroad and a small amount of money, compared with what the bill carries, to do the thing on which they rest their whole bill. Not only that, but how can you insist on it, in view of the recent test on the Maryland, in which it was proved that the coal was not what it is claimed to be; in which the naval officers contended that the coal was so inferior that it clogged up the engines so that they would not work, and that the Navy could not use it?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Georgia has expired.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARDWICK. Now, Mr. Chairman, I want to ask how they can urge it in the interest of the Navy of the United States when in his last annual report the Secretary of the Navy himself says that oil and not coal is to be the great future motive power of the Navy; when he calls attention to the fact that every great power on this earth is going to oil instead of coal, and that the motive power of the Navy is to be oil, and when he says that such must necessarily and wisely be the policy of the United States.

This is a great question, you say; you are building for the future. If you are building for the future and rest your argument on the military necessity or the naval necessity, what do you say about the report of our own Secretary of the Navy, who says that in the future coal is not to be the motive power but oil is to be the motive power, not only of our Navy but of every other navy in the world?

Now, I want to go one step further. What did we do in the campaign just ended? We went before the American people and said "private monopoly is intolerable and indefensible, and we will abolish it by law." What will we substitute for it? Will we substitute for it public monopoly? No; that was not our promise. That was the promise of the Roosevelt Progressives. But we said we would substitute for it Jeffersonian doctrine, pure and simple, competitive conditions, and a return to the day of individual opportunity. What do we find? These bills are presented one after the other, wherever a public question arises, wherever private monopoly is to be abolished, and we are required to present a constructive remedy. What do we do? We substitute, or some gentlemen wish to substitute, upon every occasion public monopoly as the remedy.

As far as I am concerned I do not believe in that doctrine. I was not reared in that school. I have not supported those principles. Others may go that far if they like, but as for me, my vote has never supported it and never will.

I believe, with Jefferson, that the individual citizen is the great corner stone of this Republic. I believe our laws must be so constructed and affairs so administered that the blessings of this country will flow from the citizen up to his Government rather than from the Government down to its subjects. [Applause.]

I can not find it in my heart to support any of these measures that rest on the other doctrine. I could not find it in my head to support any of these propositions that are based on the things I have always been taught were not democratic. I can not find it anywhere in the teachings of the fathers of my party nor the great principles upon which our party rests to support bills of this character; and I predict here and now that unless a halt is called somewhere on this sort of thing it will not be long before we will not only be building railroads in Alaska but also be mining radium in America. We will also be mining coal, and it may be gold, in Alaska, and next be manufacturing clothes in Dayton and food in Milwaukee.

A MEMBER. Does not the gentleman mean beer? [Laughter.]

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; beer in Milwaukee. I accept the amendment. I was thinking about the great grain elevators of Minneapolis and said Milwaukee inadvertently.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, we have very good food manufactured in Milwaukee as well as very good beer.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Chairman, it will not be long before we will get to all this sort of thing if we lose sight of our principles and forsake the paths that our fathers trod. Once we depart from principle, once we embark on enterprise simply because it is popular, once we do a thing simply because there seems to be a temporary demand for it, and ignore the great cardinal principles of our party and forsake the great doctrines of our faith, even for a moment, there is no safety for us.

What about this bill? Is it necessary; is it wise; is it a step in the right direction, or is it a step in the wrong direction? If you are to spend $36,000,000, why spend it at the North Pole? Why not spend it at home? Have we so much money, are we so rich, that we would rather send it to the North Pole than send it to the people of our districts? Are we so rich that we can afford to develop Alaska while America languishes? Are we so rich that we can not build battleships and yet can develop a possible coal mine in Alaska, with a view to future Government ownership and operation of coal mines as well as railroad and telegraph lines? I challenge any gentleman who favors this bill to point out, either now or later, what Democratic platform, what Democratic principle, he pins his faith to when he advocates this measure. You can not point it out in the last platform on which we were elected. That platform demanded the opening up of Alaska. That platform when it came to the railroad question was, as it should have been, silent as the tomb. If we want justification for this bill we can not go to the platform of either one of the great parties—oh, yes; I will take that back. You must go to the platform of the so-called Progressive Party and to the propaganda of Theodore Roosevelt, because nowhere else——

Mr. FERRIS. And the Socialists?

Mr. HARDWICK. Yes; except the Socialists. You get it from their principles, though, not from their platform, but you get it from Roosevelt's platform, and we find it nowhere else.

Mr. PAYNE. How about the Socialist platform?

Mr. HARDWICK. It is Socialist propaganda. It rests on the same principle that the Socialists advocate; it rests on the same foundation stones on which they build; but so far as the platform declarations are concerned, I challenge anybody, either now or later, to show a Democratic platform on which it rests. Oh, but they say, the Democratic Party gave subsidies in the past of either money or lands to the great transcontinental railroads. So we may have done. Whether it was wise or not I can not say.

There were then, as there are now, two great sides to that question; but this question is not involved in that question at all, because even when we gave money under our broad powers to appropriate, or land under the power to dispose of the public domain, there was not any question of Government building or leasing or operating a railroad. Not only that; none of these propositions to which gentlemen have referred in this debate contemplated even the remote possibility that there should be added to the ever-increasing army of Federal employees another army mightier than the hosts that followed Xerxes across the Hellespont into Greece. I want to say that when to your ever-growing host of Federal employees you add Federal employees not only at the Equator but at the Pole and all through this country, for you need not think that the people are going to be content with letting you build railroads in Alaska and at Panama and not build them at home. So I say when you add to the ever-growing host of Federal employees, the potency of which we have every one of us felt in the performance of our official duties, another and greater host of railroad men and their connections everywhere through this Republic, you will find the Federal Government so augmented in power that the rights of the States will be of little avail whenever there is conflict or desire of authority; and you will find the Federal Government so great, so powerful, and the administration of whatever party is in so well intrenched in power that nothing short of actual revolution will ever displace it. Mr. Chairman, I know not what others may do, I care not what others may think. I have no criticism for any man or set of men here or elsewhere who can not and do not see this question as I do; but as for me, it is not the democratic faith that I learned at my father's knee; it is not the democratic faith that Jefferson taught; it is not the democratic faith that has been taught by all the fathers of this Republic and all the founders of our great party, and for one I can not and will not support this bill. [Applause.]

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to address the committee for 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. Chairman, I have listened with much interest to the remarks of my friend from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], and I recognize the gentleman from Georgia as one of those men in the House who is sound in the Democratic faith, but I do not think he has gone far enough in his reasoning or followed the history of his party closely enough to bring this proposition in conflict with the great history and principles of the legislation of our party. I have seen a good many truly progressive measures in the interest of the development of this great country of ours come before the Congress since I have been a Member of it, and I have always heard the same arguments advanced against these measures, when it has come down to the Federal Government in any way aiding in the development of our material resources. I heard the interruption of my friend from New York [Mr. PAYNE] a while ago, suggesting that this proposition carried in it the germs of socialism, and it carried me back some 12 years, or possibly longer, ago when I saw a great bill in the process of construction in this House, to give the public domain in 18 arid States to the Secretary of the Interior, as trustee, to develop a great irrigation system and build homes for those who lacked homes, to build an empire in a desert. My friend from New York [Mr. PAYNE] and other gentlemen who took the same view of these questions at that time opposed the irrigation bill, when some of us on this side of the House and some on that side were battling that those vacant lands of the West might be given by the Government to create a fund to develop that great western country. They predicted at that time disaster, they predicted that the Government giving up its territory for that purpose would lead to political disaster and would seriously impair the Treasury of the United States. But what has been the result? Many men at that time said it was impossible of accomplishment by Government engineers; that it should have been left to private enterprise; but what has been the result?

I do not say that the Government engineers have made no mistakes. If mistakes have been made, it has possibly been in building these irrigation works too well and at too great a cost; but we have built homes for thousands where no homes could be if it had not been for this bill that we passed 12 years ago. We are raising food for hundreds of thousands where food could not be raised to-day if the Congress had not taken idle desert lands and created a trust fund by which they could be developed. I said then, as I say now, that there has always been a great distinction from the beginning of this Government——

Mr. HENSLEY. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Just let me finish my sentence—a great distinction from the beginning of this Government between the public lands of the United States, which is the private purse of the Nation, and the money that is raised from taxation of the people. I now yield to the gentleman.

Mr. HENSLEY. Does the gentleman from Alabama undertake to say that such kind of work as the Reclamation Service—from a careful study of it is he able to declare that in every particular it has been a success?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; I said just the other thing.

Mr. HENSLEY. Does not the gentleman realize——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask the gentleman not to interrupt me with an argument; I have only 15 minutes.

Mr. HENSLEY. Just one brief statement.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask not to be interrupted for a statement. If the gentleman desires to ask a question, I will yield.

Mr. HENSLEY. Let me put it in this form: Does the gentleman realize that the engineers' estimate of the project at Phoenix, Ariz., when they induced the farmers to enter into that project, was not to cost more than $15 an acre to the farmers, and to-day it has reached the enormous sum of from $50 to $60 per acre, and the end is not yet?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Well, I will state to the gentleman, as I said a while ago, I do not pretend that mistakes have not been made, but notwithstanding some mistakes have been made the great scope of the work has been a success and in the interest of the American people, and I have been over that very ground in Phoenix, and when the gentleman says that the original land cost the owner of it $50 per acre by reason of this improvement, I will say to the gentleman that the land is worth more than twice $50 an acre to the man who owns it. [Applause.]

Mr. HENSLEY rose.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask not to be interrupted. I was at Phoenix before the Roosevelt Dam was built and I have seen the land and I saw tracts of land you could not buy for $50 an acre in the same valley. Now I want to say this, that in the very beginning of the Government the Democratic Party, in the day of its greatest supremacy, gave lands and money to the development of a great road system to connect the eastern and western sections of the country. That road is still in existence to-day. That system of road building would have gone on if the railroads had not supplanted it temporarily. So that to say that the Democratic Party—controlling this House and standing for legislation of this kind is contrary to the history of our party—flies in the face of the history of past legislation is not sustained.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will yield.

Mr. HARDWICK. Is the gentleman able to point out where the Democratic Party undertook to build a railroad or to either operate or lease it?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I have just stated where the Democratic Party——

Mr. HARDWICK. Oh, we made an appropriation to aid the building; that is a different thing.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Democratic Party—that is, the Congress when it was controlled by the Democratic Party, in every branch, when the bill was signed by Democratic Presidents Jefferson, Madison, and Monroe—built turnpike roads to aid in the development of the country.

Mr. BURNETT. Will my colleague yield to me?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do.

Mr. BURNETT. Does the gentleman think that authorized the President or would authorize the Government to go and build railroads all over this country?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. No; I am not in favor of building railroads all over the country.

Mr. BURNETT. Then why make an exception in favor of Alaska and build there?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will tell my colleague why I would make an exception. I would not be in favor to-day of the Government aiding in building roads in continental United States. Why? Because it is not necessary.

Mr. HARDWICK. If it was necessary, then, the gentleman would favor it?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I should if it was within the power of the Constitution and it was necessary to build up and develop our country. Any party which assumes the responsibility of Government must live up to that responsibility. [Applause.]

Now, what I say is this: There has been no wild country ever developed by railroad building except when there was governmental aid behind it of some kind. We developed continental United States in that way. We gave the public lands to develop railroad building at a time when the land grant was needed to accomplish the result.

Mr. CALLAWAY. You do not intend to defend the Government giving the public lands in this country to the railroads, inasmuch as it got nothing?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I do not attempt to defend it at all. I say it was a proper thing to do.

Mr. CALLAWAY. You and I differ in regard to that.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. It does not require an argument.

Mr. CALLAWAY. Will the gentleman yield for another question?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. CALLAWAY. On this Alaskan railway proposition, it occurs to me if Congress is going to build a railroad, it should know where it is going to build it, where it should begin, and where it should go to, instead of just delegating the power to the President to go into the railroad business, which necessarily will have to be delegated by him to somebody else, because he is not going to build any railroads in Alaska.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I want to ask my friend from Texas [Mr. CALLAWAY], because I believe he is the same kind of a Democrat that I am and we are generally together, when we gave great grants of land—which is the same proposition as we have here—toward building the transcontinental railroads, where was the survey that was made before the passage of the act of Congress?

Mr. HARDWICK. They were surveyed, every one of them.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Not the survey of the direct location of the line.

Mr. BRYAN. The acts particularly show the survey had not yet been determined upon.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. If the gentleman will examine, he will find that the general direction of the roads was indicated, and that was all that was had at that time. Now, the purpose of this act is similar in purpose to those acts that gave the public lands for the development of this western country. It is the only way in which you can develop Alaska.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have time in which to conclude his remarks.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will not ask that, but I would like about 10 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] asks unanimous consent for 10 minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Now, I want to say this to the gentleman, you can not develop this Alaskan country except in one of two ways. Private enterprise unassisted can not build this road, and without reasonable means of transportation you can not carry a population in there that will make a permanent development. Of course you may have the gold miner going there and speculating on finding a gold field, and when he digs the gold out will come away. But this Alaskan country is capable of sustaining a permanent population, and should have permanent and lasting development, and the only way that you can accomplish that result is to provide means for transportation. No private individual without assistance of some kind can go there and develop that country.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will ask my friend to let me finish this thought. But there are two ways in which you may do that. You might make a grant of the public lands of Alaska to a private corporation to develop the Territory or, on the other hand, you can do what this bill proposes to do, namely, the Government can build a railroad and turn back into the Treasury the proceeds of the sale of public lands to compensate the Government for its expenditure.

Now, that is what is proposed to be done here.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield right at that point?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. I think the gentleman is dealing with the very crux of the whole proposition, and I wanted to ask him if he thought private enterprise had had a fair chance to extend the nine fragmentary railroads which are now there, when the Government went up there and withdrew the land to such an extent that only 2 coal claims have been patented and only 163 homesteads have been patented. And did he know that the Secretary of the Interior and the chairman of the Committee on Mines and Mining of the House, and the chairman of the Committee on the Public Lands of the House, and the chairman of the Committee on the Territories, and the three corresponding committees in the Senate have agreed on a leasing bill which will give the Territory a fair chance to progress and improve and develop? And I wondered if the passage of this bill first would be a fair test as to whether or not private enterprise would go in there.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to my friend from Oklahoma that I am uninformed on that proposition, because I have not had a chance to investigate it.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Just let me finish this. I think the great difficulty that confronts us all in reference to Alaskan legislation is the lack of information which we all have in reference to the subject matter.

Now I will yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. BUCHANAN].

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. The question I wanted to ask the gentleman was whether he did not think it would have been better for the Government to have constructed railroads in this country many years ago, instead of giving away lands amounting to several times the cost of construction?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. In the end we might have profited by it. But this is no new proposition. Ten years ago, and more than 10 years ago, we had before this House the proposition of whether we would turn the building of the Isthmian Canal over to a private corporation, with Government aid, or whether we would build the canal ourselves. The Government has built it as one of the greatest monuments to the genius and enterprise of this generation. [Applause.]

Now, just before I close I want to ask the House this question: Why should we develop Alaska? There are a number of reasons. In the first place, as a great Government, as the Government of those people—because we are not only the National Government, but we are to-day the local government of the people of Alaska; we stand both in the shoes of the State and of the Nation—to those people we owe the responsibility of giving them a chance to develop their country and grow as we have grown in Continental America.

But, more than that, there is a greater governmental reason why we should open that country and develop it. Here is a great Territory of the United States, filled with storehouses of wealth; a Territory that, if it is necessary, we must lay down our treasure and our blood to protect and defend against a foreign enemy. By reason of conditions that exist, by reason of lack of transportation facilities, there is but a scattered population there, a sparsely settled community, without strength or power to defend itself.

That country is no barren waste. That country is no "frozen north." It is capable of sustaining as good a population as Scotland, Sweden, or Norway. A strong, vigorous American people can be builded up in that Territory; a people ready to fight and defend themselves, to defend our flag; and the day may come when that population will be strong enough to protect itself against a foreign foe without the necessity of our maintaining battleships and troops on Continental America to defend it. We can not do it without the population; and I say it is a matter not only of patriotism, but it is also a matter of economy to take the necessary steps to open up that country and invite the American population to take care of it and make an asset of a great Government instead of a liability. [Applause.]

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, I have been interested in Alaska ever since that great act of statesmanship of William H. Seward, of whose town I was a resident when a boy, in purchasing the Territory. I remember those jokes about his having bought icebergs, and the prospect that the Senate would not ratify the treaty of purchase. I remember that he went to that great Senator from Massachusetts, Charles Sumner, and laid before him the facts in regard to Alaska; and if some of these gentlemen would read that great speech of Sumner's, they would find that the material riches of Alaska which are known so well to-day were discovered by Sumner by a study of the records and given to the world in that great speech he made at that time.

Now, there was all that wealth of mines and of fisheries and of furs, all the wealth of Alaska that we know of to-day, placed before the American people then, and still private enterprise never went far enough to build railroads during all the years until these latter years, when a few railroads were built; and then we had this wave—and I sympathize with it—this wave of sentiment in opposition to men exploiting too much the Government domain, making great fortunes out of it and destroying those great assets for posterity, and Alaska was closed up, completely closed up.

Three years ago, as my friend from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] said the other day, I suggested to him the wisdom of drawing up a bill allowing people to go in there, on a royalty or on a lease, to open up those mines of Alaska in order that we might go on with the development; to open those riches to the people and still not give too much to the people who opened them up and exploited them. But that bill has not yet passed, and now we come to this proposition of the Government building a railroad up there in Alaska.

Gentlemen seek to justify it on the ground that we voted 10 years ago to build the Isthmian Canal, the wonder of the world; and I never could see how we could build it in any other way except through the Government. We could not give any body of men a chance to levy tolls on what went through that canal, to remunerate them for the capital they put into it, and still preserve commercial peace with the Governments of the world and get treaties by which we could build that canal.

It was a great undertaking. We were fortunate in getting the one man who had been raised up equal to that enterprise, and now it has become a success and the Government is simply to collect the tolls and keep the canal in repair. What comparison is there between that and a few miles or a thousand miles of railroad in Alaska? Oh, gentlemen say that it is not socialistic, because it is such a little thing. Still the camel got his nose under the tent, and you know the result. A little thing! And still one man high in the civic life of the Nation advocates a railroad connecting the Atlantic and the Pacific, to be built by the Government of the United States, as a regulator of freight between the two sections. A little thing! And still you will find Members of this House who do not belong to the Socialist Party saying they believe that the Government ought to own all the railroads and all the public utilities. You find a Postmaster General advocating the investment of $000,000,000 to take up the telephone service in the United States. What excuse there can be, after passing this bill, against taking up the telegraphic service no man can explain, and no one can tell what the difference would be in the two propositions.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PAYNE. I would rather not be interrupted. I have not much time. So you go on progressing from one thing to another, railroads to come in next, and then you will have carried out every socialistic platform ever adopted by any body of Socialists in the United States, for Government ownership of all the utilities everywhere. And what excuse have you to offer?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. PAYNE. I should like 10 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to proceed for 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PAYNE. The gentleman from Illinois spoke the other day about a number of things that have grown on us that were first opposed, but which got into the House and grew upon us. That ought to be a warning instead of an argument in favor of this.

Much has been made of the irrigation system and of the fact that some of us opposed that. Why did we oppose it? We were making great progress in irrigation under private ownership and private enterprise. We were putting the charge where the charge belonged, upon the men who used the ditches and used the water, and compelling them to pay for bringing it there. But that was not going quite fast enough. Our friends were impatient. They could not get it through by direct appropriation out of the Treasury of the United States, and they came in with this other proposition, that all the money received for the sale of public lands and no more should be devoted to that enterprise. They assured us that the thing would be self-sustaining; that all we would ever lose was the millions that we received from the sale of Government lands, because the irrigated lands would pay the expenses. Four or five years ago they came in here with a proposition for a loan by the Government. The enterprise was bankrupt. They had got to have $15,000,000. People had gone on there who could not make their payments, notwithstanding the boasted success of the enterprise. Well, we let them have the $15,000,000 to go on with the enterprise; and now to-day we find we must put in more money to help out the people who are struggling to pay what the United States is collecting out of them; sometimes, as my friend from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] says, because the works have been built too well, too much has been spent in ornamentation, and the Government has spent the money extravagantly in those schemes. The thing now must have an appropriation. And that is the way we go on.

Is there not a better way to build this road? Is it not better to keep the camel's nose out of the tent? Why not pass a law similar to that recommended by Secretary Lane, and said to have been introduced into this House in the last day or two, leasing these coal mines to whoever will pay the rental? Perhaps the terms of it might be amended a little bit, or a good deal in some instances, but it is entirely feasible and practicable. It is just what every private owner of coal land does in the United States. He leases the right to operate, generally on a royalty per ton.

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman will allow me, an exactly parallel enterprise is being carried on now in my State for the Indians as a tribe. In other words, their tribal coal lands are being leased on a royalty basis and it is a success.

Mr. PAYNE. It is entirely practicable. It is said there is not capital enough and enterprise enough in the United States to go in there and build these railroads and open up these mines. "Oh," you say, "they have not come before the committee and said that they would do it." I think they would naturally be a little wary about it from what they have got from Congress for the last six or eight years. Why, they have been cut off from the mines; they have not had any offer as to what the United States would do in the matter of opening up the mines. Of course they are not going to enter into any enterprise of this kind unless they see some way of getting the interest on their money or getting the investment back. But if you open up these mines as suggested I have no doubt but that men will come forward and build this road, and if it is necessary, and they could not get the credit, I would go further than that and guarantee the payment of the interest on the bonds that they issue at a fair rate of interest to help float the bonds, because I believe firmly that the money would all come back to the Government of the United States. And then we would keep out of the Government railroad business and would not follow in the wake of any nation that owns its railroads. What has been the result there and what would be the result here? Why, every member of the legislature would want to build a railroad in his district. They would not build them for the necessities of commerce, but they would build them for the necessities of political commerce in each district in the United States. You know how the thing goes; and so it would go in every congressional district; there would be a railroad from Podunk to some place, and from nowhere to nowhere, simply because it would help the Congressman in his district and set some men at work.

You would have the same results with the failure to operate—roads not kept in repair, roads subject to accidents, roads where they get to the destination sometime but never on schedule time, roads where the rate of freight is high for the little freight that is carried.

Oh, gentlemen, let us keep out of this proposition and keep our proper functions. Have you thought what the result would be when you get a million employees of the United States into the politics of the United States? Why, I have seen gentlemen here of the highest character follow one another in a rush between the tellers in order to raise the salaries of the city letter carriers, and then when you came to the rural letter carriers everybody went through. [Laughter.] I have voted against that myself when too extravagant, and felt it in my district afterwards.

I know what the result would be. If the United States owned the telegraph lines, the telephone lines, and the railroads and put a million employees upon the pay roll, where would you be?

Oh, but you say up in Alaska these men will not be in any congressional district, except the one represented, perhaps, by my friend Mr. WICKERSHAM. How many of you will try to get a man in there, and then another, and then another? And so it goes. The whole political system will be turned into a race after jobs and places and graft. We are a Republic. This Government is a Republic. Every man is a sovereign. Why put the individual sovereign in where his very bread and butter may depend on the way he votes? [Applause.]

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Chairman, some wit is credited with saying that, politically speaking, a Progressive means a man who is for anything that anybody wants, and a reactionary is a man who is against anything that anybody wants. I am just a plain Democrat without prefix or suffix. I believe in constitutional, representative government as the best and only hope for the perpetuity of this Republic. I believe that parties arose as a necessary means to preserve constitutional, representative government, and I am profoundly convinced that party organization is absolutely essential under present conditions. I have never regarded the platform expressions of my party, or any party, as a thing to be disregarded. All Democrats were nominated and elected upon the Baltimore platform, and each is equally bound by all of its declarations.

I find under the general heading of "Conservation," in the Baltimore platform, the following:

> We believe in the conservation and the development, for the use of all the people, of the natural resources of the country. Our forests, our sources of water supply, our arable and our mineral lands, our navigable streams, and all the other material resources with which our country has been so lavishly endowed constitute the foundation of our national wealth.
> Such additional legislation as may be necessary to prevent their being wasted or absorbed by special or privileged interests should be enacted, and the policy of their conservation should be rigidly adhered to. * * *
> Immediate action should be taken by Congress to make available the vast and valuable coal deposits of Alaska under conditions that will be a perfect guarantee against their falling into the hands of monopolizing corporations, associations, or interests.

It seems reasonably clear to my mind that these declarations lead irresistably to building a railroad in Alaska. It is true that the word "railroad" does not occur, but I submit that the railroad is the only way of opening and developing Alaska under the conservation policy declared for in the platform. If there were any question at all in my mind, it would be solved by the quotation from the address of the President of the United States delivered at a joint session of the two Houses of Congress on December 2, 1913. The President, like Congressmen and Senators, is elected on the same Democratic platform, and it is his duty, which he is endeavoring with splendid ability to discharge, to carry out all the promises to the people contained in the platform.

You will remember that recently the suffragettes have been urging the President to favor them, and his answer was that that question had not been passed on by the Democratic Party. It was outside the program of carrying out the platform promises, and he could not speak thereon. This gives mighty force to the declaration which I will now quote from his address. He says:

> A duty faces us with regard to Alaska which seems to me very pressing and very imperative; perhaps I should say a double duty, for it concerns both the political and the material development of the Territory. The people of Alaska should be given the full Territorial form of government, and Alaska as a storehouse should be unlocked. One key to it is a system of railways. These the Government should itself build and administer, and the ports and terminals it should itself control in the interest of all who wish to use them for the service and development of the country and its people.
> But the construction of railways is only the first step; is only thrusting in the key to the storehouse and throwing back the lock and opening the door. How the tempting resources of the country are to be exploited is another matter, to which I shall take the liberty of from time to time calling your attention, for it is a policy which must be worked out by well-considered stages, not upon theory, but upon the lines of practical expediency. It is part of our general problem of conservation. We have a freer hand in working out the problem in Alaska than in the States of the Union, and yet the principle and object are the same, wherever we touch them. We must use the resources of the country, not lock them up. There need be no conflict or jealousy as between State and Federal authorities, for there can be no difference of purpose between them. The resources in question must be used, but not destroyed or wasted; used, but not monopolized upon any narrow idea of individual rights as against the abiding interests of communities. That a policy can be worked out by conference and concession which will release these resources and yet not jeopard or dissipate them I for one have no doubt, and it can be done on lines of regulation, which need be no less acceptable to the people and governments of the States concerned than to the people and Government of the Nation at large, whose heritage these resources are. We must bend our counsels to this end. A common purpose ought to make agreement easy.

This, I submit, is a clear and emphatic declaration for the pending bill, and I shall, therefore, as a Democrat, give it my support. [Applause.] I am not troubled about the constitutional question, because all men who are informed will admit that under section 3, Article IV, of the Constitution of the United States, which says:

> The Congress shall have power to dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the territory or other property belonging to the United States.

And hence, as Alaska is a Territory that belongs to the United States, it is entirely a distinct proposition under the Constitution from the question of the national ownership of the railroads of the country, which rests upon distinct and, I think, indefensible grounds not necessary now to discuss.

Nor do I think it wise or necessary to consider Government ownership of telephone and telegraph lines in connection with this bill. That also rests upon distinct grounds entirely apart from this propcsition, as well as the national ownership of railroads.

We have to face in Congress each distinct proposition upon its own merits when it arises, and we must not stop the wheels of progress. Democrats have always been and always will be, I trust, in favor of every sort of wise legislation authorized by the Constitution and commanded by the platforms of the party.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BURGESS. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS. I want to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that the Baltimore platform specifically declares that the President shall make public all indorsements for district judge?

Mr. BURGESS. Oh, that has nothing to do with this question. I want to talk about the Alaskan railroad.

Mr. THOMAS. Is it not a fact?

Mr. BURGESS. I will not yield for that.

Mr. THOMAS. In other words, the gentleman will not yield when he is asked about anything that violates the Democratic platform.

Mr. BURGESS. Mr. Chairman, I want to say that every Democrat must be bound by every declaration in his platform. If he is not bound, then nobody is bound; and what is the use of making it? [Applause.]

Now, in regard to the national ownership of telegraphs and telephones. I hold no brief for Albert S. Burleson, who has been called into the Cabinet and who is making such a splendid Postmaster General. But I do feel that I ought to say this much in defense of his recommendation to Congress for the ownership of the telegraph and telephone lines. It is within the constitutional power of the Government to do that, and no Democrat can make any objection to it on that ground, but only to question the policy of it.

The question of the national ownership of railroads rests on an entirely different and distinct ground from that of the ownership and construction and operation of a railroad in a Territory of the United States because of this fact: To build a railroad you must condemn the land, and the ownership of land is in the State and in the individual, and this Government, in my judgment, has no power to go in there and condemn the land of a citizen of a State for any such purpose as to build a railroad. In brief, that is the chief objection to the national ownership of railroads.

But in the Territories it is an entirely distinct proposition. We own the lands in Alaska. We have that right, and it is our duty to legislate in any way to further and develop it in the interest of the people who reside there. That is all there is to this proposition. You have heard Mr. UNDERWOOD explain fully what it means to the country to develop Alaska, and I agree most cordially with all he said on that subject. [Applause.]

Mr. OGLESBY. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will not prevail. The President should have the right to lease this road, and not be compelled to operate it. The operation of the road would require the organization and maintenance of a special department at great expense. It may be that opportunity will be presented to lease the road on favorable terms, and I do not think the President's hands should be tied in that matter.

Mr. Chairman, it can hardly be said that those who have undertaken to enlighten us on Alaska are in entire accord as to all the facts about that Territory. But they do agree that the two great rivers of that country, the Yukon and the Kuskokwim, which afford means for internal transportation by water in summer and ice highways in the winter, enter the Bering Sea at points north of the southern limit of winter ice, and are therefore not available as aids to transportation in connection with ocean steamers for more than four or five months in the year. The route via Skagway, White Horse, and Eagle to Fairbanks is many hundreds of miles out of the way, is through foreign territory, and at best is only a means of ingress and egress, and a very tedious and expensive one at that. The topography, great distances, and unfavorable climate make commercially impossible the transportation of freight and passengers from points on Alaska's Pacific coast, where the waters are always free from ice, to the interior, except by railways.

I concur with the majority of your committee in the opinion that it is not possible to make any material progress in the development of Alaska unless a railroad be constructed from some usable harbor on her southern coast to one or more of the inland waterways and with connecting spurs to one or both of her known deposits of high-grade coal.

I also concur in the belief that the resources of Alaska are well worth developing. By resources I mean her known wealth that is not under present conditions available. Of course the comparatively small advantage of such railways to her fisheries and her fur industry would not warrant such expenditure, nor do her much-heralded agricultural possibilities give promise to serious-minded men of relief from the present high cost of living through imports of foodstuffs produced from her soil. But, Mr. Chairman, even the opponents of this measure admit that the agricultural resources of Alaska will enable her to abundantly support any number of men who at any time may be engaged in mining her coal, her copper, and her gold.

It is extremely difficult for one who has never seen a country to speak convincingly of her resources. But as a member of your committee having this matter under consideration I have devoted considerable time to a study of the available evidence and to ascertaining to what extent many apparently conflicting statements therein might be reconciled, and have endeavored in forming a conclusion to give weight to such testimony only as appears convincingly corroborated.

There is abundant evidence that there are large areas in Alaska of gold placers and almost unlimited quartz gold, much of it of low-grade ore, which under present conditions costs more than its value to mine, but with transportation at fair rates hundreds of millions of gold can be profitably mined from ground now profitless. Transportation is necessary, not as has been absurdly suggested, to freight out the gold, but to lessen the cost of mining by cheapening the cost of machinery, supplies, and labor. If a man mine a million of gold at a cost of $500,000 and has plenty of similar ore left, he will continue to mine. If the cost be $2,000,000 and there be no apparent prospect for richer ore or a reduction in the cost of production, he will abandon his mine, although certain it contains a hundred millions more of gold.

The coal mines will furnish freight both ways, supplies in and coal out. Such tonnage, according to the estimates of the Taft Commission, will provide about one-quarter of the revenue for the road.

I have never attached any particular importance to the possible use of this coal by the Navy. I have believed had it been so available ample proof would have been forthcoming long since. But it is unquestionably good coal and of great value for the railways, mining, and for domestic use. None would ever find its way very far east, but we hope it might help supply the West, so the pressure from this source on our eastern mines might be lessened, and we in New York would not be kept on starvation allowance on the plea of a heavy demand from the Northwest.

The most extensive of the known copper deposits are reached by existing railways, but many rich mines are yet untouched for lack of transportation facilities.

I am fully convinced that Alaska is worth developing, and equally certain that no railroad that will accomplish this purpose will ever be built by private capital without Government aid.

No railroad has ever been built in the United States through large areas of undeveloped territory without Government aid. This aid has usually been in the form of land grants from the Federal Government, or railroad-aid bonds by the States or counties through which the road was to pass. In some instances the promoters of the roads obtained and sold the bonds and the roads were never built. But these grants of land, worth more in some instances than the total cost of the roads, were often of little real assistance in building the roads. Cash was what was needed, and the land did not then have a cash market value at all commensurate with its real value, largely because alternate adjoining sections, retained by the Government, were open for homesteading and also were for sale at a very small price per acre. In time the land became enormously valuable, but this was years after the roads were built and had enough traffic to be self-supporting.

Of course, the time for land grants and railroad-aid bonds has long since passed in this country, although State and local assistance is yet, absurd as it may seem, being donated to rich roads in congested sections of the country for the elimination of grade crossings.

But no roads are being constructed in this country at the present time, and none are probable under existing conditions. No private capital will be invested in the construction of railways in Alaska or in the States unless it has the promise of a return at least closely approximating ten per cent.

There appears to be a general impression that there is an abundance of money in New York seeking investment and willing to accept low interest returns. There is no such money—at least there is none for investment in any business enterprise involving even a legitimate business risk. There are trust funds belonging to estates and moneys in savings banks to be had for five and even four per cent, but this is on loans to be secured by first mortgage on local real estate worth practically double the amount loaned, or for investment in certain State, municipal, or other bonds specified by law. There is also money to be had on call loans, upon so-called stock-exchange collateral, for rates of interest running at times as low as one per cent; but these in the main are surplus funds of out-of-town banks on temporary deposit with their New York City correspondents likely to be withdrawn at any time, and therefore unsafe to place on time loans and are loaned subject to call for any price the market happens to command. Money for investment in business enterprises comes only from individuals, and is not to be had for such purposes unless there is at least promise of a return sufficiently in excess of six per cent to provide a premium for the risk always incident to any business enterprise. No such promise can honestly be held out as an inducement to capital to engage in railroad building in this country at the present time.

I would not undertake to enter into a defense of the estimates made by the Taft Commission of the probable amount of traffic that would be available for the railroads contemplated in this bill, if and when constructed, nor am I inclined to quarrel with them over their statements of alleged facts, premises assumed, or their conclusions. Possibly their guess is as good as could be made by anyone having only one guess. But it is the experience of railroading in this country that an average service rate which will produce a revenue of fifty per cent in excess of operation and maintenance, and available for dividend on capital invested, is about the maximum permitted. Where operation and maintenance cost are unusually high, as would surely be the case in Alaska, such excess could not reasonably be expected to exceed thirty-three and one-third per cent. The estimates of the Taft Commission numbers "3" in their report (pp. 118 and 119), which are based on traffic rates they hold would not be prohibitive or produce a deficit with a capital charge of three per cent, show a revenue return of sixty-six and two-thirds per cent in excess of "operation cost." This is a net return exactly twice what I believe may be reasonably expected from the gross business estimated, assuming their estimate of "operation cost" to include maintenance or ordinary upkeep, which it surely must to be of any value. But if we adopt this very optimistic estimate as a result possible of attainment, with an interest charge of three per cent on the cost of construction, it requires little calculation to discover that to meet a charge on construction cost of nine per cent—and no less will tempt any investment of private capital in such an enterprise—would necessitate an average increase of eighty per cent in the freight and passenger rates fixed by the Taft Commission as the maximum that could be charged, and that could not, in their opinion, be exceeded without "defeating the immediate object of the railroad, namely, the expeditious development of the interior of Alaska." Wherein, then, does the hope lie that private capital may be induced to enter this field on terms that would assist in the development of that Territory?

The passage of this bill does not mean a start on the road to Government ownership and operation of railroads. That is a problem we may be called upon to solve in the near future, and unless conditions undergo a decided change its consideration may be forced upon us at a much earlier date than most of us now expect. But the passage of this measure will neither hasten nor retard its approach.

I have always been opposed to paternalism in our Government, and while Government ownership is a matter of expedience and not of principle, yet whenever any question has arisen of a choice between public and private ownership I have, unless persuaded that the advantage lies clearly on the side of public ownership, cast my small influence on the side of private ownership largely because an extension of public ownership usually means an extension of paternalism in Government. I say usually, but not always, and not necessarily. Every proposition for Government ownership is a separate and distinct question of expedience, and is always debatable. We own our public buildings in the District and throughout the country, even though rented quarters might be less expensive, because permanency, stability, and certainty of being housed are more important considerations than the small difference in expense. We favor public ownership by each municipality of its water supply, because through such ownership the adequacy and purity of such supply can best be insured. Who now but favors public ownership and control of our waterways, harbors, docks, and terminal facilities, or the public operation of our Postal Service, now gradually but surely absorbing, through its parcel-post extension, the express business, so long enjoyed as a private monopoly by a few individuals whose principle investment was pull and favoritism?

Some of the principal objections to Government ownership were clearly and forcefully set forth by the able chairman of the Senate Committee on Territories in an address, a portion of which was put in the record of the Senate hearings by one of the witnesses who appeared in opposition to this bill; and since it so well states some of the views I have always held on the subject I will, with the permission of the House, read here a short extract:

> The foundation principle of socialism is Government ownership of natural resources and public utilities and Government operation of all industries.
> Such a theory of government is the antithesis of our present theory, which is based on individual ownership and operation of natural resources, public utilities, and industries, except in a few instances wherein by the very nature of the use of the resources, utility, or industry such use is a monopoly. In other words, we believe that individualism tends to the advancement of man and the perfection of government, where fair competition is capable of being assured by law.
> Such a form of government as is advocated by the Socialist Party is without precedent, so we must indulge our imagination in determining the probable results.
> Let us, for instance, consider the operation of railroads. We must assume that the division of labor would be somewhat similar to what it is at present; that is, some one would have general charge, and some one would have to grease the cars; some one would be conductor and some one would be brakeman. Now, granting that the greaser received just as much as the general manager, would he be just as well satisfied with his position as with that of the general manager? Would the brakeman just as lief be brakeman as conductor? Would the general manager be willing to become the greaser or the conductor the brakeman?
> Why, to admit such a condition is absurd. It could only exist by the total elimination of the most prominent characteristics of man—ambition, vanity, greed, and selfishness.
> Why, if there were no such thing as ambition, vanity, selfishness, and greed, we would be even worse off, because those traits of character are essential to desire, and without desire evolution would cease, degeneracy set in, and decay and death of all things would necessarily follow.
> It was the desire of man to better his condition above that of his neighbor that originated every comfort we now enjoy.
> To the Socialist principle we can not subscribe, and if ever our Government were threatened with such dire calamity, every intelligent, thinking man would abandon every other cause and join in the fight for the life of our country.

Two witnesses before the Senate committee in opposition to this bill, alleging their opposition to be on the ground that its enactment would embark the United States upon a troublous voyage on the dangerous sea of Government ownership and operation of railroads, quoted with commendable eloquence the following well-known saying by a distinguished ancestor of a distinguished Member of this House hailing from the great State of Texas:

> I know of no light by which to guide my feet but the lamp of experience.

Mr. Chairman, from what period in our history shall we select the fashion of this light to guide our footsteps in the pathway of the solution of the present-day railway problem? Shall we use the pine knot, the tallow dip, or the tungsten electric?

Self-interest and pride of ownership are the greatest incentives to that industry and alert attention so necessary to efficiency and success in any enterprise.

A few years ago our great railway systems were controlled by the men of genius, who built them up by the investment of their money, their brains, and their untiring energy. Here, indeed, was the pride of ownership and the interest of enlightened selfishness.

To-day, with one notable exception, the officials of the great railways of the country are scarcely more than paid employees, with little or no financial interest in their prosperity beyond the retention of their names on the pay rolls. The managements are supposed to be highly systematized on scientific principles. Many departments have been created, each headed by men alleged to be experts in their line, always jealous of their own prerogatives and quick to resent any encroachment; each anxious to make a good surface showing for his own department, but having no real interest in that standard of efficiency which makes for the general welfare and prosperity of the road. I have had opportunities personally to observe the workings of one of the great present-day systems and have been unable to discover either in its officials or other employees any greater manifestation of enterprise, personal interest, or desire for curtailment of expenses than is usually found in those performing work of equal grade in our Federal service. I have found an alertness on the part of some of these men to serve their personal interests and an eagerness to line their own purses at the expense of the road, and many opportunities are open to them to accomplish this end that could never exist, or that they would never dare attempt to avail themselves of, were the road Federal property or they employees of Uncle Sam.

But it is not necessary for me to rely upon my own limited observation for evidence that, with respect to the present-day management of our railways, there does not exist among the officers that pride of ownership which makes for the protection of the property intrusted to their keeping. Is there a Member of this House unfamiliar with the complaint of the coal operators a few years ago that they could not obtain cars from that boasted model for all the great roads—the Pennsylvania—to carry their coal, and that it was shown plenty of cars were being furnished to coal companies in which certain officials of the road were interested?

Mr. Chairman, where is the pride of ownership, and how has it been manifested by the officials of the New York, New Haven & Hartford, and of the Frisco, and of the Boston & Maine?

These are only a few of the known present-day experiences by whose light our feet are being guided to a determination of these questions.

Ambition, vanity, greed, and selfishness are abundantly in evidence, but where in the realm of modern railroading is the pride of ownership?

The attempt to build up, develop, and operate roads by private capital but under rates and regulations fixed by the public is still an experiment which has never been successfully worked out to the end, and if that regulation and supervision is to extend not only to the dealings between the roads and their patrons, between the roads and their employees, between the roads and their security holders, but also between the roads and their officials, would the actual ownership and operation of these roads by the Government present a condition of materially greater seriousness or appreciably more complex?

These present-day pride-of-ownership-of-other-people's-property magnates are laying out a hard task for those of us who, in the fight to stay the advance of paternalism, are opposing Government ownership and operation of railways, persevering in the hope that supervision, regulation, and publicity may yet prove a better and safer solution of this problem.

But, Mr. Chairman, this proposed road for Alaska is in a class by itself. It is not, in my judgment, a question between a Government-owned road or a privately owned road; it is a question of a Government-built road or no road, with the consequent continued neglect amounting to a practical abandonment of that great Territory of undoubted marvelous resources. We own Alaska, and we owe it to our people who are there, to our people at home, and to the people of the civilized world to develop those resources. Ownership imposes this duty, and we should discharge this obligation.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

The committee informally rose; and Mr. CARAWAY having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, a message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 2674. An act to define certain crimes and to provide punishment therefor;

S. 2830. An act making appropriation for the correction of the acoustics of the United States Naval Academy chapel and auditorium;

S. 3210. An act to establish a fish-cultural station at some point in the State of Louisiana; and

S. 797. An act to establish auxiliary fish-cultural stations in the State of Minnesota.

The message also announced that the Vice President had appointed Mr. PAGE and Mr. LANE members of the joint select committee on the part of the Senate, as provided for in act of February 16, 1889, entitled "An act to authorize and provide for the disposition of useless papers in the executive departments," for the disposition of useless papers in the Treasury Department.

The message also announced that the President of the United States had approved and signed bills and joint resolution of the following titles:

S. 234. An act to enjoin and abate houses of lewdness, assignation, and prostitution; to declare the same to be nuisances; to enjoin the person or persons who conduct or maintain the same and the owner or agent of any building used for such purpose; and to assess a tax against the person maintaining said nuisance and against the building and owner thereof;

S. 4094. An act authorizing the construction of a bridge and approaches thereto across the Columbia River at or near Vancouver, Wash.; and

S. J. Res. 107. Joint resolution relating to supervision of the Lincoln Memorial.

RAILROADS IN ALASKA.

The committee resumed its session.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, before I begin I ask unanimous consent that I may be permitted to continue for 15 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] defends his support of this legislation partly upon the proposition that he supported the reclamation law, and that this is a proposal somewhat along the lines of that contained in that legislation. It seems to me the gentleman's comparison is not happy.

The national reclamation law simply borrows the proceeds from the sale of all the public lands for the improvement of a part of the public lands, and all of the moneys expended under the national reclamation law must be returned to the fund. There is no possibility of the loss of any of the sums used under the reclamation law, unless the value of the lands that are irrigated prove to be less than the sum expended in their reclamation, and that is not likely to occur. This is a very different proposition. This bill proposes to pledge the credit of the people of the United States; in other words, to take the public money and to start in Alaska a great national system of transportation. I think anyone familiar with the situation in Alaska and with the terms of this bill, who is entirely frank, will admit that if we begin with this work of construction as proposed under the bill there never will be any construction of railways in Alaska by private enterprise. In other words, this is the beginning of an Alaska-wide system of Government-owned and Government-operated railways, for if the Government is going to own these railways, if there is any argument in favor of expending the Government money for building them, there is much more argument in favor of the Government operating them. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] says that Democrats may support this legislation, because it is not contrary to Democratic doctrines. He is an authority on that point, and I am not. I believe, however, that, so far as Republicans are concerned, there is nothing in Republican principles that would prevent a Republican from supporting this legislation if he believes it to be wise and necessary. With the gentlemen on this side, at least those of the Republican household, this is simply a question of policy. If, having a great Territory up yonder in the Northwest, it can never be developed as it should be developed and its resources utilized for the benefit of all the people except by the aid of all the people, then it is a good policy, and it is Republican policy, to extend whatever aid may be necessary.

I oppose this bill because, first, it is the beginning of Government ownership and operation of railways. That is not a Republican doctrine. Second, because, if I were in favor of that sort of thing, I would not want to try it in a country where it will not be a success. But I am particularly opposed to the legislation because, in my opinion, it is entirely unnecessary. There is no justification for expending the people's money in Alaska upon the theory that it is necessary in order to develop the resources and the industries of Alaska. On the contrary, it seems to me that a thorough knowledge of the situation of Alaska that a reading of all of the hearings before the House and in the Senate committees makes it very clear, indeed, that so far as the development of Alaska coal mines are concerned, so far as railroads to the coal mines or from the coal mines to the coast are concerned, if the coal mines are opened those roads will be built by private enterprise as promptly, if not more promptly, than by the Government, if this bill became a law.

Private enterprise stands ready to build the 25 or 38 miles, as the case may be, from Controller Bay or from Mile Thirty-eight on the Copper River & Northwestern to the Bering River coal field. Private enterprise stands ready to build the 115 miles from Kern Creek, on the Alaska Northern, to the Matanuska coal fields, and private enterprise must, if these extensions are made, ultimately build two lines of railway into the Yukon Valley, one from the end of the Copper River & Northwestern and the other from Matanuska, which will be the end of the Alaska Northern. If these extensions are not built it will be because there are not sufficient resources to warrant their building. In my opinion there are sufficient resources to warrant their building, and if we give private enterprise proper encouragement the railroads to the coal fields will be built, and eventually the valley of the Yukon will have two lines of railroad instead of one.

We spend thirty-five millions of the people's money mostly for the benefit of the owners of the Copper River & Northwestern and of the Alaska Northern. After having spent all of this money we will give the people of the Yukon Valley one line of railroad, whereas if private enterprise were left free to act they will eventually secure two lines of railroads. Now, what is it that Alaska needs? All the gentlemen admit that she needs the opening of her coal resources. The gentleman from Texas read from the Democratic platform a few moments ago, but he did not read it, I regret to have to say, as it seems to me, with a very great amount of understanding. What the Democratic platform says is:

> That immediate action should be taken by the Congress to make available the vast and valuable coal deposits of Alaska under conditions that will be a perfect guarantee against their falling into the hands of monopolizing corporations, associations, and interests.

And having read that, the gentleman from Texas takes that to be an indorsement of a bill that has not a line or a word or a syllable in it that in any way would tend to make available the coal resources of Alaska. They would be as completely locked up after the legislation is passed as they are to-day.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman is on the Committee on Appropriations and he is familiar with the financial status of the Government just now. Does the gentleman think this is the time for the Government to embark upon a business enterprise involving the risk of thirty-five millions of money to begin with for the benefit of, say, 35,000 people?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman disclaims any responsibility at all in the matter of income. The gentleman has had nothing to do, no influence whatever over questions of income, and therefore he feels entirely free to view questions of expenditure entirely on their merits, without regard to the question of income. I might almost be tempted to vote this thirty-five million in view of the certain deficiency staring our Democratic friends in the face, but I will not yield to that sort of temptation.

Mr. MOORE. There is a deficit staring the country in the face now, is there not?

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman reads the returns of revenues and expenditures every day and understands the conditions as well as I do, and probably better than I do. My understanding is we are facing a deficit for this year of about $25,000,000.

Mr. MOORE. In view of that fact, would this be the time to start such a business enterprise, which is purely an experiment?

Mr. MONDELL. If I were on the other side, that would be an added argument against the legislation, but occupying the position I do, with no responsibility for governmental income, I view the question entirely separate and apart from the question as to whether there is to be money to carry on this work, and I would not be any more in favor of it if there were millions of surplus in the Treasury.

Mr. TALCOTT of New York. I take it from the wording of the bill that payment is not made from the current revenues, but is to be by means of bonds.

Mr. MONDELL. If current revenues are lacking, we may have some difficulty in selling Alaska railway bonds, 3 per cent, at par. I think there might be some such difficulty.

Mr. MOORE. It is a fact that the Philippine railroad bonds are selling at a discount now.

Mr. MONDELL. That is true.

Mr. MOORE. There is a falling off of at least 35 per cent of the par value of those bonds, and they are, to a certain extent, Government-controlled bonds; that is, controlled by the Philippine Government.

Mr. FERRIS. What interest do they pay?

Mr. MOORE. Four per cent; and the Philippine Government is paying that.

Mr. MONDELL. I enjoy all this very much, Mr. Chairman, but my time is passing rapidly.

Mr. OGLESBY. I am sorry to interrupt the gentleman, but may I ask him a question?

Mr. MONDELL. A real question.

Mr. OGLESBY. Where does the gentleman get his information that if this bill is not passed, or if the coal situation was opened up, that there would be two railroads built in Alaska?

Mr. MONDELL. I get that from the logic of the situation. If I had a little more time I could illuminate the mind of my friend from New York on that point.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that I may have 10 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent that he may proceed for 10 minutes more. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman from New York [Mr. OGLESBY] knows that the Copper River & Northwestern now extends to Chitina on the Copper River. It belongs to the Alaskan Syndicate. The people who own that railroad must eventually build it through to the Yukon, whether they want to do it or not. As a business proposition, that line must be built on in order to secure business to make the present line, now unprofitable, profitable. Second, with a line built to the Matanuska coal fields, the distance to the Tanana is less by way of the Alaskan Northern than it is from Chitina by way of the Copper River, and, therefore, ultimately, if any of these glowing stories we have heard of agricultural possibilities have any foundation in fact, a line would be built north from Matanuska through the valley of the Susitna through the lignite coal fields and over the divide and into the valleys of the Tanana and Yukon. And so there would be two lines of railroad eventually in the Yukon Valley, where if this bill passes there never can be but one.

Mr. LANGLEY. Is the Republican Party on record in favor of this legislation?

Mr. MONDELL. No. With Republicans this is entirely a question of policy. I do not think it good policy to spend the people's money in this way.

Now, Mr. Chairman, the fact is there is no argument for this bill on the ground of necessity. Assuming that we have the right to do it, assuming that there is no principle in the way, and that is true so far as the gentlemen on this side are concerned, and it is purely a question of policy, the question is, Are we justified in spending $35,000,000 of the people's money as the beginning of an expenditure ultimately amounting to hundreds of millions for the development of Alaska? I say no, because it is not necessary; because, in my opinion, private enterprise will develop Alaska as rapidly as her resources will warrant.

Gentlemen who have read the hearings and who are familiar with the situation, know that private enterprise stands ready the moment you open the coal fields to build to the coal fields. Men who claim to speak by authority say they are in a position to build from Matanuska and from Chitina on into the valley of the Yukon, and stand ready to do so whenever the resources of Alaska are opened. What Alaska needs is a law that will open her coal fields. We will be no further along after this bill passes than we are now. If the Interior Department will insist on suspending the two coal laws that now apply to Alaska; persist in its refusal to issue any patents to the claims which have been heretofore initiated in Alaska, and we provide no further legislation, we will have appropriated $35,000,000 of the people's money for no purpose, because it will be utterly impossible to develop any of that coal, and thereby give tonnage to these railroads. And the gentlemen in Alaska who do not want leasing legislation, who hope ultimately we will go back to the old system against which there has been so much hue and cry in the last few years as to private ownership of coal lands, want this legislation passed without any leasing legislation attached to it.

At the proper time I shall offer an amendment in the form of a coal-leasing bill, and if such an amendment be adopted, we will then, at least, be in a position to do something after we shall have appropriated $35,000,000 of the people's money for the purpose of building railroads. We will then, at least, be in a position where the Government can secure some coal for the railroads that it proposes to build. But if you pass this legislation in its present form, the Government agents will go up into Alaska authorized to build hundreds of miles of road and with no legislation operating, under which a pound of coal can be taken from either the Matanuska or the Bering River field, for the operation of the railroad you propose to build. To me it is as extraordinary a proposition in legislation as I ever heard of. I can not understand the frame of mind of gentlemen who for years have been insisting that in Alaska, at least, we shall depart from the system of private ownership of coal lands; that we shall establish a leasing system; and now are supporting this legislation and refusing to take advantage of this opportunity to put upon the statute books a law which will establish a leasing system. On the contrary, they are supporting a law which, if it is placed upon the statute books, will prevent the passing of any leasing legislation so far as Alaska is concerned.

The result of this legislation will be to make the Puget Sound country temporarily very prosperous, to load upon the country $35,000,000 of indebtedness, to establish a condition under which the people of central Alaska will never have more than one line of railroad, and to establish a condition under which, after all of the agitation over the Cunningham coal claims, which has kept the country stirred up all these years, we shall return to the very system which led to that scandal. Many gentlemen are supporting this bill in the belief that its passage will put an end to all hope of the enactment of leasing legislation, of securing legislation which will establish a leasing system in Alaska. I hope that these gentlemen that believe in a leasing system in Alaska, who do not want to have the system of private ownership of coal lands reestablished there, will join hands with us in placing upon this bill an amendment which will establish a leasing system.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. BOOHER. I would like to inquire of the gentleman whether he thinks it requires any legislative action by Congress to open the coal mines of Alaska?

Mr. MONDELL. Not at all. I do not know what the views of the gentleman are, but perhaps he has the same views that some other gentlemen have, that if this bill passes without any new coal legislation the President will be compelled to withdraw his embargo on the coal laws now on the statute books, so that while the Cunninghams will not secure valuable coal claims other individual claimants will secure them. I will say to the gentleman that if you do not provide leasing legislation in this bill you will return to the very system that, I have no doubt, my friend from Missouri has been preaching against for years in connection with the so-called Ballinger-Pinchot controversy.

Mr. BOOHER. I am afraid the gentleman does not know what I have advocated on that subject. I do not think it is necessary to enact legislation to open these mines, but, as a matter of fact, it would require but an order of the President of the United States, revoking the order of a former President, to open the mines.

Mr. MONDELL. That is true. All that is necessary now is for the President of the United States to say that the two coal-land laws relating to Alaska may operate. If that is done, we would return to the very same condition of affairs that led to the Ballinger-Pinchot controversy, which gave his party a useful political slogan for some time.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. I am sure the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOOHER] does not want to pursue that policy.

Mr. BOOHER. I understood the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] to say that it would require action by Congress in order to get coal to run the cars while they were building the railroad. I do not understand that it requires any action. The President simply could declare the embargo off, and run the mines to get the coal to build the railroad.

Mr. MONDELL. I have heretofore stated the situation. If the President should say so, the laws allowing individuals to locate and secure title to coal lands in Alaska would again operate. If we do not now provide some other coal legislation, the President would ultimately be compelled to allow private ownership of coal lands in Alaska, a system which led to the Alaska controversy which agitated the country for years.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wyoming has expired.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, it is unfortunate for the Republican Party that the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], in opening the debate this morning against this bill, did not represent the Democratic Party, for if he did the Republican majority in the next Congress would be as large as the Democratic majority is in this. But it is fortunate, Mr. Chairman, for the Republican Party that the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE], in expressing the sentiments that he did, did not represent the Republican Party. Both of these gentlemen undertook to condemn this proposition of a Government railroad in Alaska by calling it socialistic.

Mr. Chairman, nowhere in the United States, other than in this Congress perhaps, can any matter or measure be condemned by calling it names, even by calling it socialism. The people of this country are thinking for themselves, and you may call a measure what you choose, but they are going to examine the proposition, and they will decide whether or not it is in the public interest and for the public welfare. And if they decide it is, they will be for it.

Now, Mr. Chairman, so far as this proposition is concerned, it does not involve the Government ownership of railroads in the ordinary sense at all. I am frank to say that I am against Government ownership and operation of railroads, generally speaking, Government ownership and operation in the States, especially so long as the Democratic Party shall be in power [laughter] and takes the attitude that it now does with reference to the civil-service question. [Applause.]

If it shall ever come—and I am one of those who believe that it may not be far distant—it can only be successful if we shall have a civil service that is honestly administered, and that shall be taken out of politics entirely. And yet you gentlemen across the aisle to-day, a large majority of you, if you had the power and dared to do it, would wipe out the civil-service system in this country from top to bottom. It is only because you fear the President of the United States and the wrath of the people of the United States in the next election that you do not do it.

But this question of a Government railroad in Alaska does not involve that question, because the people of the United States own all of the property in Alaska. We are in practically the same position with reference to Alaska that the directors of a private corporation are in with reference to their duty to the property owned by the stockholders of that corporation. It is their duty to administer that property for the best interests of the stockholders.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. I am very deeply interested in the gentleman's statement; but in order to have his statement true, clear on down to the last analysis, would not the Federal Government have to go on and operate every form of our property up there?

Mr. LENROOT. Not at all.

Mr. FERRIS. Why not?

Mr. LENROOT. I will come to that. If a private corporation owned Alaska, what would that private corporation do in order to get the best return for their stockholders? Does the gentleman say that that private corporation would continue to own every foot of land in Alaska and to operate every foot of the land? The gentleman knows better than that. But the gentleman knows that if a private corporation owned it, the first thing they would do would be to build a railroad into it.

Mr. FERRIS. Does the gentleman think the Government, in the disposition of their homestead land, in the disposition of their coal lands, and in the disposition of their mineral lands, could use the same scrutiny and the same judicious methods in disposing of it as a private corporation would, and does the gentleman think the public would tolerate that?

Mr. LENROOT. No, sir; they could not use the same scrutiny and they could not use the same judiciousness with reference to the disposal of it; but it is their duty to do the best they can, and the policy in the past and the policy that the opposition would pursue, whether you wish it or not, with reference to Alaska, is that there will be practically no judgment used, because the Government can not dispose of the property of the people of this country in Alaska to as good advantage as they can if it owns the railroad.

Mr. FERRIS. Just a word right there. The gentleman presents his proposition with seductive words, and he is clear headed, as he always is; but here is the proposition: In order to maintain what the gentleman now says and the assertions he now makes, we would have to withdraw every acre of public land—370,000,000 acres—up there from homestead entry. Otherwise the gentleman, myself, or any other citizen can go there and take up the property; so that, instead of spending $35,000,000 for all the people, you would spend $35,000,000 for the few selfish people who go up there and enter that land. That is the proposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. MANN. I ask that the gentleman have 10 minutes more.

Mr. FERRIS. I ask that the gentleman have more time, for I feel that I have trespassed upon his generosity.

The CHAIRMAN. Unanimous consent is asked that the time of the gentleman from Wisconsin be extended 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LENROOT. In reply to the gentleman from Oklahoma, I will say that, with reference to homestead lands, with reference to those things he has just suggested, it is proper to consider what is for the best interests of the people of the United States; and I believe, acting as one of the trustees of the people of the United States in the administration of this property, that it is for the best interest of the people of the United States that we give free access to homesteads in Alaska for agricultural purposes.

Mr. FERRIS. Does not that drive the gentleman from his original premises, wherein he said we occupy a position identical with that of a private corporation? At least for the moment does not that drive him away from that proposition?

Mr. LENROOT. It does not. It is the duty of the directors of a private corporation to administer the property for the greatest and best benefit of its stockholders.

Mr. FERRIS. But they usually administer it for themselves and for their own investment, do they not?

Mr. LENROOT. That is beside the question. I am speaking of what is the duty of the directors of a private corporation.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin yield for a suggestion or a question, I want to get his point of view, which I think is largely mine.

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Take the coal proposition; we own the coal and the ground there. No one can mine the coal or dispose of it without railroad facilities. If we offer leases now, no one could make use of the coal and dispose of it, unless they had a railroad built by some one. How can anyone build a railroad except the Government, unless they know that the coal will be available for transportation; how can anybody mine the coal unless they know that the railroad will be there? How is it possible, unless we turn it all over to a private corporation, for anyone to bring the two things together except ourselves, because we can build the railroad and lease the coal? [Applause.]

Mr. LENROOT. That is exactly the situation I was trying to present to the gentleman from Oklahoma. Now, pursuing our colloquy a little further, I think the gentleman from Oklahoma will admit that our duty to the people of the United States in the administration of their property is like unto that of the duty of the directors of a corporation with reference to administering the property of the stockholders.

Mr. FERRIS. I realize that I am using up a good deal of the gentleman's time, but we are developing the point.

Mr. LENROOT. I will yield.

Mr. FERRIS. If that is true, we ought to let the proposition alone, because it is not a paying investment. The hearings will show that Secretary Fisher said it would be a lean investment for many years.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman is speaking now of the railroad?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. In response to that I will say that if a private corporation has property worth a hundred million dollars with a railroad—and it is absolutely worthless without a railroad—and it is certain at the beginning of the operation of that railroad that it would not be a paying investment, but in the end would secure the vast amount of a hundred million dollars to that corporation, does the gentleman think that that corporation would hesitate to build a railroad because during the first three or five years it would not be a paying investment?

Mr. FERRIS. That is merely a business proposition whether it would or not.

Mr. LENROOT. A business proposition, exactly; and that is what the gentlemen on the other side are not doing with reference to this proposition. We are asking that it be considered as a business proposition.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman and I are together on the coal-leasing proposition?

Mr. LENROOT. We are.

Mr. FERRIS. We both believe that it should be leased, and we are going to pass a bill to that effect. But does not the gentleman think that it would be a little safer to pass the coal-leasing bill first and see how it works and whether or not it will be sufficient, and then, after a few years, try this if it does not accomplish it?

Mr. LENROOT. If the gentleman will apply to this proposition a few elementary business principles, he will know that that proposition can not and will not work out the way that he suggests. The gentleman from Oklahoma knows now that railroads in the United States that are gilt-edged propositions, concerning which there is no question as to the security behind the bonds, can not borrow money to-day for the purpose of making proper and necessary extensions and improvements. The gentleman knows as well as I know that you can not get capital to go to Alaska with the coal-leasing bill passed that I am in favor of, as he is, unless in addition you give to them such inducements that, instead of there being an ordinary and fair or even a handsome return, they will be demanding enormous and exorbitant returns or they will stay out.

Mr. FERRIS. What the gentleman says may be true, but I hope he will not say that I know it, because I do not know it.

Mr. MONDELL. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. Upon what does the gentleman base his statement? I do not so read the hearings. On the contrary, I find many things in the hearings containing assurances on the part of private capital that they stand ready to go into Alaska. Mr. Ryan, for instance, said that his company stood ready to spend $1,700,000, if necessary, to build to the Bering fields if the coal was open. Does the gentleman doubt that the Copper River people would build 38 miles if the Bering fields were open?

Mr. LENROOT. I will say in reply to the gentleman I have no doubt whatever that if these coal fields were open under the present law that this Alaskan syndicate will build.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman knows that I am myself in favor of their being opened under the leasing power.

Mr. LENROOT. But that is conditioned upon the building of the railroad.

Mr. MONDELL. I think not.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman knows that every one of the gentlemen who attempted to give assurances to the House committee or the Senate committee refused to give the names of their financial backers.

Mr. MONDELL. Well, Mr. Chairman, there is not time to discuss that, but the gentleman must not insist that I believe that to be a fair statement, because I can not agree to it.

Mr. LENROOT. The record shows for itself as to that. Now, with reference to the question of private capital building, I will say to the gentleman from Wyoming that except the statement of Mr. Ryan that his company would build to the Bering coal fields, there is not a word in the record of several hundred pages, either in the hearings before the Senate committee or the House committee, to give any assurance whatever as to the building of a railroad unless you give them the coal fields, too.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, does not the gentleman recall that those interested in the Alaska Northern, the Seward Railroad, said before the Senate committee, and I think before the House committee, that they would build to the Matanuska fields within a year if the fields were opened?

Mr. LENROOT. If the fields were opened under the present law.

Mr. MONDELL. Oh, no.

Mr. LENROOT. But those gentlemen never said, and there was never one before the committee who had authority to speak for them, that they would ever build to the Matanuska coal fields, and the gentleman knows that so far as the present railroads are concerned, pointing toward the Matanuska field, the Alaska Northern Railroad, the first thing that Frost and Osborne, its previous owners, did in building that railroad was to get 73 or 74 coal claims in the Matanuska field, and it was their plan to consolidate the railroad and the coal lands and put them together and have a monopoly.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, of course I do not read those hearings as the gentleman does, and therefore I can not agree with his conclusion.

Mr. LENROOT. But both of us understand the English language.

Mr. MONDELL. Because I understood the owners of the Alaska Northern to say that under any law that would make it possible to take coal out of the ground and ship they would build within a year, but the gentleman does not so understand it. The gentleman does not believe in the private ownership of coal lands in Alaska. Then why not, when we are proposing to build railroads to the coal fields, put into the law a provision that will open the coal fields in the way they ought to be opened.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may be permitted to continue for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman from Wyoming as to putting a leasing proposition on this bill, I would say that I would be in favor of that if that matter had been thoroughly considered by the committee, if we were prepared to act upon it now, but I am not in favor of doing it. I am not in favor of the gentleman's bill, because I do not believe his bill, which I assume he is going to offer as an amendment to this bill, properly guards the public interests, and it is a question of so much and so great importance that before we enact any legislation with reference to these coal lands it should be most carefully considered.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. MONDELL. The gentleman said he did not believe in my bill three years ago.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. But those who agree with him that we ought to open Alaska and ought to open it under a leasing bill have not in three years proposed anything else; and why?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I will say to the gentleman that there is a bill now pending before the Committee on the Public Lands, and while the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] and I are very much apart on this proposition, we are entirely together on that proposition, and I do not believe there is any question but that the Committee on the Public Lands will report at this session of Congress a leasing bill.

Mr. MONDELL. What assurance has the gentleman, if this becomes a law, that a leasing bill with the opposition there is against it will be passed through the two bodies?

Mr. LENROOT. I have the assurance of applying a little common sense to the subject. The gentleman knows full well that if we build a railroad in Alaska such as is proposed in this bill we are not going to open the coal fields under the present law, and the gentleman knows that if we expend this money we will have to provide for the development of Alaska and justify the building of the railroad. Therefore it is as certain as that night follows day that legislation will follow the enactment of this bill properly opening those coal lands, and in such a way as to safeguard the public interest.

Mr. MONDELL. But what are you going to do and what is going to happen if this bill becomes a law and you are not able to pass a leasing bill?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I am not going to assume, and the gentleman has no right to assume, that when we have directed the building of a railroad in Alaska the Congress of the United States is not going to follow it up with the necessary steps to make that a proper undertaking.

Mr. MONDELL. Congress may believe in spending $35,000,000 in Alaska, but a majority of both bodies will not believe in leasing coal lands, and then the country would be in this position, that after having agitated for years against private ownership of coal lands in Alaska, and having expended $35,000,000 to build railroads, it will be necessary to go back to those laws providing for private ownership in order to get the coal to operate the railroads which it is now proposed to build.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I would suggest that if this bill passes and the railroad could not be built in a year, nor perhaps in two, that would give ample time for the preparation and the passage of a proper leasing law, even if the one now before the Committee on Public Lands does not pass at this session.

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. And that in the meantime the President has ample power to withdraw from the coal fields, under the present Executive order, 40 acres, 80 acres, or any other amount he wants to withdraw, necessary for the operation of the railroads and the building, or even when completed.

Mr. OGLESBY. I desire to ask the gentleman if it is not a fact that the testimony shows that Mr. Ryan's proposition in regard to these coal fields was coupled with the proviso that he should contract with the Government for the sale of 400,000 tons of coal a year?

Mr. LENROOT. I think so; there were many other conditions attached to the passage of it.

Mr. SAUNDERS. If I understood the gentleman from what he said he is apprehensive that private capital would not build to these coal fields under a leasing law.

Mr. LENROOT. I am.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Suppose the Government should build a railroad into these coal fields, and they are not far from the coast and that expenditure would not be very great, it would be a tentative experimental road to try out Alaska as it were, does not the gentleman think if we built into those coal fields and operated the railroads and afforded the facilities for transportation and then the Government has such a leasing law as the gentleman has in contemplation, that private capital will go in and work the mines?

Mr. LENROOT. I think they would.

Mr. SAUNDERS. So we can try out even the value of the Alaskan coal fields without concerning ourselves with what most of the advocates of this bill seem to regard as an absurd agricultural proposition.

Mr. LENROOT. So far as the coal fields are concerned, that is true; but what I really think is, the Matanuska coal fields, about probably halfway to the Yukon——

Mr. SAUNDERS. It is about 100 miles.

Mr. LENROOT. One hundred and eighty miles.

Mr. FERRIS. Seventy and one hundred and ten.

Mr. LENROOT. One hundred and eighty miles, about halfway——

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. If the gentleman will permit another suggestion. In reply to what the gentleman from Virginia has stated I would say that the railroad to the Bering coal fields touches and taps absolutely nothing but the Bering coal. It does not reach any agricultural or other mineral opportunities other than the Bering coal field.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I understand that. I am speaking about the development of the coal fields, and suggest we can develop those coal fields at very little expense, and in connection with that ascertain if there is anything else of value in Alaska. My friend from Wisconsin has suggested that we should look at this thing in the light of common sense, and it looks to me that would be eminently the common-sense way of viewing it.

Mr. LENROOT. I want to say in reply to the gentleman that if we built to Matanuska, practically half way to Fairbanks, if the gentleman has read the reports of the railway commission he is aware of the fact that there is now certain to be a tonnage of 50,000 tons of coal to the interior of Alaska, and the gentleman must be aware that that tonnage upon those 180 miles will reduce the cost of operation, and, in addition to that, upon this other portion of the 180 miles as to its being a paying proposition we do not know and we can not know what the mineral possibilities are up in the interior until we have better facilities for transportation.

Mr. MONDELL. A moment ago the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] suggested——

Mr. LENROOT. If the gentleman will reply to the gentleman from Illinois in his time——

Mr. MONDELL. I merely want to understand the gentleman from Wisconsin. The gentleman suggested if we did not pass a lease law and pass this bill and no lease law should follow, the President could allow the present law to operate partially or as regards a limited acreage. I want to ask if the gentleman from Wisconsin believes that the President of the United States has authority to say that a law of general application made by Executive order be made to apply locally and not generally?

In other words, could he let Tom, Joe, and Dick file without letting the balance of the world file?

Mr. LENROOT. I understand what the gentleman has in mind, and, without expressing myself definitely on that, I will say I think it would be in the power of the President of the United States to restore very limited areas if he chose to do so. It certainly would be within the power of the President to permit the mining of such coal upon the Government land as would be necessary for Government purposes.

Mr. MONDELL. But the President has withdrawn all of the land. Now, the gentleman from Illinois suggests that the President relieve the embargo to a certain extent. In other words, he could allow a few individuals to make filings, but not allow filings generally.

Mr. LENROOT. I understand the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] to make the suggestion, that pending the construction of the road sufficient coal could be provided without restoring the lands to entry.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] has expired.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LENROOT. Now, I want to say a few words about the pending amendment, which has been largely lost sight of in the general discussion. I did not expect to agree with the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT] with reference to any phase of this bill after I read his minority report, but I am glad to say that I do agree with him with reference to this proposition of Government operation of railroads until Congress shall otherwise order.

Now, the gentleman from New York [Mr. OGLESBY] a few moments ago, in opposing this amendment, put it upon the ground that it would be necessary for the Government to organize and maintain a separate department for the operation of this road. Now, the gentleman must be aware, as well as every other member of the committee, that in the construction of this road it is going to be necessary in the construction itself to maintain a department of operation. Did you ever stop to think that in the construction of this road there will be more operation, there will be more men employed, than there will be for several years after the railroad is completed? Because, under the report of the railway commission, it is estimated that three trains a week will be sufficient to afford the transportation that it is expected will immediately follow. And, therefore, those who are in favor of leasing say that when this road is completed, when we have the road equipped, and we have it in actual operation, the moment the last spike is driven the President can not go on any further, although operation may have been eminently successful, but must stop there and find somebody to whom to lease the railroad.

Now, there are gentlemen who shudder at Government operation of railroads. We have heard during the general debate how wasteful and how extravagant Government operation of railroads is. Well, if that is true, and if those gentlemen are in good faith in that position, they have a splendid opportunity here to demonstrate that Government ownership is a failure, and they could furnish no stronger argument in the future than to be able to point to its failure in Alaska. They could say, "We tried Government operation there, and it failed." But I am suspicious, Mr. Chairman, that some of those gentlemen are opposed to Government operation of this railroad not because they fear it will be a failure but because they fear it will be successful.

Now, as to a leasing proposition, we can not expect to lease it for a less term than 20 years. And, again, I say, as a business proposition, you are not going to be able to get capital to come in when that road is completed, when it is unknown as to what the volume of traffic will be extending through the years, and make such a proposition to the Government as the Government ought to have later on if it shall then choose to lease the road after it has been developed as to what the traffic will be. So, from every standpoint, Mr. Chairman, until Congress shall otherwise order, the President himself ought to operate the road as well as construct it. And Congress can at any time afterwards take care of the matter of leasing the railroad. Now, Mr. Chairman, this same objection was made to the operation of the Panama Canal Railroad. When we started to construct the Panama Canal these same dire predictions were made. I hold in my hand, Mr. Chairman, the last annual report of the Panama Railroad Co., from which it appears that the gross revenue from operation last year was $4,509,000. Their operating expenses were $2,770,000, leaving a net revenue from operation last year of $1,828,000.

I find further, Mr. Chairman, from this report, that during the time the Government has owned this Panama Railroad, up to last June, this is the condition of its financial affairs: It has a capital stock of $7,000,000. Their other liabilities, including reserves for depreciation, are about $7,000,000. Their total assets are $29,000,000, and they now have in assets $15,000,000 over and above all liabilities. So that the operation of the Panama Railroad——

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield there?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. Certainly.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Can the gentleman state how much of those revenues have been derived from payments made by the Isthmian Canal Commission for the haulage of materials in connection with the construction of the canal?

Mr. LENROOT. I can not. I only secured this report this morning. I have been trying to get it for a considerable time.

Mr. FITZGERALD. I will say to the gentleman that the Isthmian Canal Commission pays a lump sum to the Panama Railroad for work done by it for the commission. My recollection is that the arrangement is very liberal, so far as the railroad is concerned.

Mr. LENROOT. That amounts to about $800,000 a year, as I read the report, out of a revenue of $4,000,000.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The amount is very large.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, I ask that the gentleman's time be extended for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] be extended five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FITZGERALD. If the gentleman has those figures at hand, I would be glad if he would state them. The Panama Railroad Co. makes an arrangement with the Isthmian Canal Commission by which a lump sum is paid for services rendered to the commission by the railroad company.

Mr. LENROOT. This is the item, "local," which I assume is the character of the work the gentleman refers to.

Mr. FITZGERALD. "Local" is on the Isthmus.

Mr. LENROOT. The Isthmian Canal Commission last year paid $342,293 on tonnage going from the city of Panama toward Colon, and on tonnage going from Colon to the city of Panama, $127,936.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Is there any statement there of the amounts paid for freight coming from New York?

Mr. LENROOT. No. That all seems to be bulked. There does not seem to be anything distinguishing Isthmian Canal Commission tonnage. I understand that pays the same rate as other freight does. I assume it does.

Mr. MANAHAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin yield to the gentleman from Minnesota?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. MANAHAN. I want to call the attention of the gentleman to the fact that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] is utterly mistaken in the suggestion that the Isthmian Canal Commission gives a favorable rate to the railroad. On the contrary, the Isthmian Canal Commission compels the Panama boats, belonging to this railroad company, to haul concrete to the Isthmus for a dollar a ton, while they have allowed other steamships $2.40.

Mr. LENROOT. I will say to the gentleman that the rate on the local tonnage on the Panama Railroad, as I recollect it is stated here, is about $1.50 a ton.

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MANAHAN] in the statement he makes seems not to be familiar with the facts. The United States Government purchased two vessels at a cost of nearly $1,400,000 and turned them over to the Panama Railroad Co. without cost, if I recall correctly, and put them into that service. The provision is that they are to be turned over to the Navy Department when the work on the canal shall have been finished.

Mr. MANAHAN. I will say to the gentleman that all of the boats that haul concrete—Panama Railroad boats—haul the concrete at the standard rate of $1 a ton. They have five boats, and they take a stupendous tonnage. When the rush is too heavy for those boats to get enough tonnage they allow other boats $2.40 per ton, and instead of the Isthmian Canal Commission giving a liberal rate to the railroad company they hold the railroad company down to the cost.

Mr. FITZGERALD. Oh, the gentleman is mistaken. I think the Panama Railroad has made money off the work done for the Isthmian Canal Commission.

Mr. LENROOT. You could take out all the money that the Isthmian Canal Commission has paid to the Panama Railroad, suggested by the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD], and it still leaves a profit of about 20 per cent on the capitalization of the Panama Railroad. In other words, they might have done this work for the Isthmian Canal Commission for nothing and still have made a handsome profit. [Applause.]

Mr. FITZGERALD. The Government paid more than the par value of that stock when it purchased it, according to my recollection.

Mr. LENROOT. I do not know as to that.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit me, I will say that the Panama Railroad before we acquired it was a very profitable enterprise. I think the last stock we bought we paid $500,000 a share for it, although that is no criterion to judge by.

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; that is no criterion.

Mr. MANN. While that is no criterion, yet we bought it very profitably in the main. The gentleman must remember that the Panama Railroad Co. does not do as much through business as it did before the canal was started, and much of the money that comes to the Panama Railroad Co. does not come at all out of freight. The lump sum that the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] speaks of is on account of the carriage of the spoil from the canal.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes; I so understood the gentleman, and I said we could take that out entirely.

Mr. MANN. The figures the gentleman from Wisconsin refers to were on freight.

Mr. LENROOT. I thought that referred to freight purely. I did not know.

Mr. MANN. Yes; that was freight.

Mr. LENROOT. I so understand it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can say, however, that the Panama Railroad Co., managed as it is as a separate corporation, owned by the Government and managed by Government officials, is as well managed as any railroad anywhere in the world. [Applause.]

Mr. LENROOT. That is the only point I desired to make with reference to that subject.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has again expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, if I believed in the Government ownership and operation of railroads, I would be body, breeches, and all a Socialist; but not believing in that fundamental doctrine of socialism, I am naturally opposed to the Government ownership and operation of railroads.

But the mere proposition of building a railroad in Alaska does not commit this Government, or those who favor it, to the proposition of Government ownership. There may be some special exigency that will warrant the Government in pursuing a policy of either bonding or building the road itself. Now, we know of the policy of the Canadian Government. Instead of pursuing the reckless policy that this Government pursued in giving away its national domain in land grants, that made these roads possible and also very profitable, the modern idea, the later policy of the Canadian Government has been to subsidize them. As a member of the Mann committee, the pulp and paper investigating committee, it was my good fortune to make a visit into the wilds of Canada, up into the Hudson Bay country, over what is known as the Temiscamingue Railroad, which I was surprised to find was built as if it were a Government trunk line; built for the freight of the future, and not according to the policy followed by some of our privately owned lines of the West, which were built merely on the prairie without ballast, with nothing but ties and rails.

Most of us agree that if there were no coal deposits in Alaska there would be no warrant and no demand for the Government to build a railroad there. There might be some demand, but there would be no favorable support for the building of this road from the seacoast up into the Yukon district.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield right there?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to my friend from Oklahoma.

Mr. FERRIS. If the statement of the gentleman is correct, $10,000,000 will build the 110-mile extension clear into the Matanuska field and the 25-mile road complete up to the Bering field, which would be the $48,000 per mile estimated for by the railroad commission. So that no one here contends, I think—at least I do not and, I assume from what the gentleman says, he does not contend—that there is any tonnage beyond there that will warrant any railroad.

Mr. STAFFORD. The tonnage stated by my colleague who has preceded me, of 50,000 tons——

Mr. FERRIS. Of what will that 50,000 tons consist?

Mr. STAFFORD. I can not say; but assuming that there is this tonnage——

Mr. FERRIS. We can not assume it. It is not there.

Mr. STAFFORD. He said that the hearings justified the assumption that there were 50,000 tons.

Mr. FERRIS. That is only a guess.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think it is more chimerical than real; but that would only amount to a trainload of 2,500 cars of 20 tons each, or 100 trains of 25 cars each. And how can you justify the building of a railroad for the accommodation of only 100 trains of 25 cars each for an entire year?

If no other Member of the House is going to offer an amendment, I intend to offer an amendment, when the time comes, to strike out that part of the bill which provides for the extension of this railroad from navigable waters to the interior, and only provide for the building from the ocean to the coal fields.

Mr. FERRIS. That is all.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I yield to my friend.

Mr. WILLIS. Does the gentleman agree with the contention made just a few moments ago by the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] that if we let this thing alone there is sufficient business to warrant private capital in extending the railroad from Chitina and from the Matanuska on to the Yukon Valley? Does the gentleman agree to that?

Mr. FERRIS. He does not say that.

Mr. STAFFORD. I might agree with it, and yet I do not approve of it; for the reason that while there may be sufficient private capital to build these railroads to the coal fields, they would have to be conducted with the expectation of getting inordinate returns. It is the very question that we had up before the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee some years ago when we were considering the regulation of the stock and bond issues of railroads. But that would be a digression. Permit me merely to say that we recognize that in a new country it would be rather impracticable to limit the stock and bond issues for the building of railroads. It would be a check to their development and extension.

Mr. WILLIS. What I want to get the gentleman's opinion about is this: If it is a fact that there are sufficient resources in the Yukon Valley and in the Tanana Valley to make it profitable for private capital to extend these two lines from Chitina and from the Matanuska, then why is the gentleman opposed to allowing the extension of the Government lines into that territory, if they are bound to be profitable?

Mr. STAFFORD. I understood the gentleman's query to be based merely upon the conditions in the coal fields. I misconceived the purport of the gentleman's question. If there are plenty of resources in the interior, and if we build these lines up to the coal fields because they are necessary as a naval adjunct, then naturally the lines will be extended by private capital if there is sufficient to warrant their extension. But why should we go into this frozen north up to the Yukon where there is no tonnage, except maybe a cargo of gold to which my friend has referred—ten millions or even a hundred millions of gold—that would be accommodated in one or two carloads?

Mr. Chairman, I have listened attentively to the debate; I deprived myself of a luncheon to follow every word of the exhaustive speech of the distinguished Delegate from Alaska. I listened attentively to the remarks of the chairman of the Committee on Territories, and to the speech of the distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS]. After listening attentively to those speeches I can not agree that the country up there is suitable for agriculture just because the Scandinavian Peninsula has produced large returns in agriculture. We can not say that a territory in a like latitude will yield the same agricultural products, because climatic and soil conditions may be entirely different.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. The gentleman does not claim that they are different?

Mr. STAFFORD. We have no information to show that they are the same. We do have information from the Agricultural Department showing it is impossible to profitably raise agricultural products there.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I want to say to the gentleman that it has been brought before the House time and again that so far as the climatic conditions are concerned they are as favorable in Alaska as they are in Norway or Sweden.

Mr. STAFFORD. I listened to the remarks about the temperature and the climatic conditions, and I have read carefully the report of the representatives of the Agricultural Department, from which I conclude that it is chimerical to expect any great cultivation of agricultural products in Alaska.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask to proceed for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks that his time be extended 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I want to ask if the gentleman had seen a statement anywhere to the effect that the conditions in Norway and Sweden are more favorable for agricultural purposes than they are in Alaska, except the single exception of southern Sweden? Take it in the interior, is it not the same as it is in Alaska and even more favorable?

Mr. STAFFORD. The proponents have presented no proof as yet as to the relative conditions of the Scandinavian Peninsula and the frozen fields of Alaska. But we had the direct testimony of the disinterested representatives of the Agricultural Department, who claim that it is impossible to grow profitably any kind of agriculture up there in the frozen north. What is the use of launching into this wild proposition of building over the ice fields over 700 miles to the Yukon, with no tonnage and little other traffic in sight?

That leads me to the proposition before the committee, and that is whether we should vest in the President the discretion to lease this railroad any time he sees fit, whether after the road has been built, after the rolling stock has been obtained, after an experiment has proven that it may be rather unprofitable for the Government to operate the road, whether we should vest the authority in the hands of the President to lease. As I read the bill I put a different construction on it from what my colleague does who has just preceded me.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. The gentleman stated that the Government representatives had practically stated that agriculture was impossible or at least impracticable in Alaska. What representatives of the Government so stated?

Mr. STAFFORD. I listened attentively to the statement of my friend, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], in which he gave the names, and that is my authority. I will yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

Mr. FERRIS. The names of the representatives of the Agricultural Department are Prof. Chubbock, Prof. Piper, and Prof. Georgeson, and a gentleman by the name of Mann that went up as the personal representative of the President.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. HOUSTON. I want to state to the gentleman from Wisconsin that there is no authority from any governmental officer to justify the comparison between Norway, Sweden, Finland, and Alaska as to the agricultural possibilities. I want to call his attention to this paragraph from Mr. Evanston.

Mr. FERRIS. Who is Mr. Evanston?

Mr. HOUSTON. He is one of the Government officers in charge of the agricultural station there.

Mr. FERRIS. He is not. Prof. Georgeson, Prof. Piper, and Prof. Chubbock are the three officers.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not say that he is superintendent of an experiment station, but he is an official and made an official report.

Mr. FERRIS. He must be a subordinate.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does it show that he is acquainted with the agricultural conditions?

Mr. HOUSTON. I will read the report.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, no; the gentleman can not take up my time to do that. He can do that in his own time. It was the report of some subordinate.

Mr. HOUSTON. Each one of those officials quoted by my friend the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] have stated that agriculture can be successfully carried on in the Territory.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, yes; and we can raise tea and coffee in the United States by hothouse methods. We can raise potatoes in Alaska, but can we raise them economically and profitably? This is a wild scheme to spend millions of dollars to get into the interior, way beyond the coal mines, with only conjecture to support it.

My colleague interpreted this phraseology to mean that it was mandatory upon the President of the United States to lease this railroad. As I read the phraseology, he is merely authorized and permitted to lease. It vests that discretion in him. If he thinks it is better under favorable terms to lease it to a private party, he can do so; but if he thinks it is not better, he need not lease it. Gentlemen say that we are afraid of Government ownership. In this case I favor the Government building the road, and then, if practicable, leasing it on favorable terms, the rates to be subject to the regulatory powers of the Interstate Commerce Commission. I do not wish ever to cite a railroad in the frozen fields of Alaska as a fair example of the futility of Government ownership. Great emphasis has been laid upon the successful operation of the Panama Railroad.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I told the gentleman that I would yield later. I would like to finish this statement. The gentleman has cited the Panama Railroad, which is the most favorable instance that can be cited; but that railroad is operated under military authority. It is not contended that this railroad in Alaska is going to be operated under military authority. Further than that, the Panama Railroad is the case of a short-line railroad, 45 miles in length, with a great density of traffic, where they have been obliged, ever since the Bates-Chesboro Line was established from San Francisco to Panama, to discourage shipments by way of the Isthmus because the Panama road lacked the facilities to carry it. If there is a density of traffic on 45 miles of railroad so great that it can not be handled, it may show a profit; but in the case of Alaska there is a tonnage to the great Yukon of only 50,000 tons for the year—125 trains of 20 carloads each—and you are going to ask the Government to build that road up there in the frozen north as an example of Government ownership. It will necessarily prove a failure. What is the practical business proposition that is before the House? It is to vest the discretion in the President to lease this railroad if, in his judgment, he believes it can be more economically operated and managed under private control than by Government officials direct. The only objection I have to this clause is to the provision limiting it to 20 years. Gentlemen here who have had any knowledge or acquaintance with the operation of railroads know that it will be rather difficult to get a proper organization—men, equipment, and the like—to operate this successfuly, and I think the term should be at least 10 years longer than it is. I would say not to take away from the President, whoever he may be—and I am willing to trust any President on this question—the discretion of leasing this railroad in case, in his best judgment, he thinks it proper.

Now, if there is any gentleman who desires to ask me a question, I would be very glad to yield to him.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. BRYAN. The gentleman says that he does not believe in taking away from the President the power to lease. I desire to call attention to the fact that the matter under discussion compels the President to lease.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish the gentleman would kindly point out that language.

Mr. BRYAN. The wording of the bill is that the President of the United States—is hereby empowered, authorized, and directed—

And then on further there is the language:

to lease the said railroad or railroads, including telegraph and telephone lines, after completion, upon such terms as he may deem proper, but no lease shall be made for a longer period than 20 years.

The only way under which he can operate the road is that he can not lease it.

Mr. STAFFORD. Then I would prefer to have words incorporated in the law so as to have it read that he is empowered and authorized to lease, and leave out the matter of direction. But even if there be left direction, I am not certain that I would not favor that. That would be in harmony with the policy of some modern Governments which grant to railroads aid in building them and leave the operation to private parties, subject to control as to rates and operation by a governmental commission. In a word, Mr. Chairman, I favor Government aid for the building of the Alaskan roads to the coal fields, and to have them operated under lease, if a favorable lease can be made, the management, rates, and control to be subject to the Interstate Commerce Commission.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I am not, as a rule, in favor of either Government ownership of railroads or Government operation thereof, but the proposition which is embodied in this bill rests on circumstances so exceptional as to be quite extraordinary. The American people believe, and correctly, that these railroads which it is proposed to construct by this bill are the keys which will unlock the stores of hidden treasures which Alaska possesses. I know there is a dispute as to the extent of these resources, but I shall not at this time discuss that question. I know, also, that those grasping hands that have sought to throttle Alaska have stopped at nothing, not even murder itself, in order to gain possession of these treasures. And when they set such an estimate upon them we can believe that their value is beyond calculation.

Mr. Chairman, there are three things that we can do in relation to this matter: We can bar the door to these treasures, as we have been doing; we can engage some private corporation or individual to build these railroads, at the price of their monopolizing these resources; or we can take up their construction ourselves. To continue to deprive Alaska of these resources is something we will not do. To turn these resources over to monopolies is something we must not do. The price they ask is too great. To take up the construction of these railroads is something that I believe is quite possible and reasonable under the circumstances, and the only proper procedure. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] has stated here that we can not assume that these coal fields will subsequently be opened to lease—that we do not know—but that the President will allow them to be opened under the present law; but why should we make such an assumption? What ground is there for believing that after we have constructed these railroads we will not preserve for ourselves the resources which others have thought sufficient to make them profitable?

What other plan could be open to us? What can we expect otherwise? The proposition seems to me entirely without foundation that there should be any danger of the old plan being adopted of opening this region to anyone who saw fit to take up these mining claims, so that they would eventually pass into the hands of some combination or monopoly—such a procedure is to me inconceivable. Nor do I think under the circumstances that the President has been vested with too great a discretion——

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Railroads can not be operated by debating societies. We can have no better illustration of that than we have had in the part taken in the debate this afternoon by the gentleman from Oklahoma, who has taken up more time than anybody else asking questions and submitting propositions that have been discussed over and over again——

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield for a short question?

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. For a question, but not for an argument.

Mr. FERRIS. I want to ask the gentleman—he was saying the President was not given too wide authority—has he observed, on page 10, lines 6 and 7, it forces the President to build clear up into that barren Territory, so there is not so much discretion given him after all.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. We ought to decide in a general way where this railroad should go, how far it should be built, and through what territory, but ought not to attempt to prescribe every rule for its operation. I do not think that the President is vested with too wide a discretion. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this bill and shall give it my vote. [Applause.]

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the general issues of this bill have been fully thrashed out in the Senate committee and in the Senate report, and likewise in the House committee and here before us in their report. Both of those committees, in whom we all have the utmost confidence, have seen fit to report favorably upon these bills. There are a few splendid men on the committee of the House who have seen fit to differ with the committee, and I believe those men are honest absolutely, but they do not understand the situation. It is like practically all early legislation that has been enacted in the country, where we find a great many of our very best men like Daniel Webster in reference to California, when he considered it nothing but a desert waste from the Mississippi River to the Pacific coast. Now these friends of ours say that there is nothing but a frozen desert waste from the ocean in through Alaska. They are without personal knowledge, but they believe this great enterprise ought not to be carried out. In other words, that this great Territory that so many men have been seeking to open—have been seeking to open the gold mines, have been seeking to open the coal and the timber lands—that the Government should not now step in, owning the land which has absolute control of the entire situation; that the Government should not be permitted to go in there and open it up, not even a trail or a road as are made in our reserves; but here is a proposition that, instead of an ordinary road or a trail, we should give the people a roadbed—make a construction on which they can put ties and rails and run trains instead of making a road on which to take a wagon. That is all. Just a difference in degree.

It is a business proposition, and that country is worth it. It has been shown by the reports of the committee and by the statistics as to the produce that has come from Alaska that there is no more worthy part of the United States, and that we ought to develop it. The same objection will come in practically all of these great matters, and I am afraid that some of our dear brothers here have not had an opportunity to go over this question. They do not really know what it means to have this country developed by a railroad. It has been said repeatedly here that the West could not have been developed if it were not for the railroads. We can see within the last few years, as the branch lines have gone from the main lines into these mountains and valleys, that where a few years ago land was worth $1.25 an acre—in other words, you could not sell it for the Government price—to-day it sells for $100 to $150 an acre, with prosperous homes scattered all over that country. And this in sections of the country where men have said, even out in my State, that the land was not worth the Government price and would not produce grain or fruit. But we find the finest of grain grown there now in abundance, as well as the finest of fruits. On that land is grown alfalfa which is worth $70 an acre.

We need transportation in Alaska, we need to have that country developed, and now is the time to develop it by providing for a railroad.

Mr. Chairman, I have an article here that is taken from the Washington Post favoring this proposition, and it so clearly presents the subject and the question of this legislation and the necessity for it and the right of the Government to step in and build the roads, and also states that the same objections have always been urged against the development of the outregions of this country, and harmonizes so closely with my views, and, in fact, clearly voices my idea on this great subject, that I ask unanimous consent to have the article inserted as a part of my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] asks unanimous consent that the article referred to may be inserted in the RECORD as a part of his remarks. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the bill and shall vote for it.

Following is the article referred to:

THE ALASKA RAILROAD.

The House of Representatives will have an opportunity this week to approve and make possible a work of real statesmanship. It can share with the Senate and the President the credit of providing for a railroad in Alaska, thereby opening up that vast and opulent Territory to settlement.

There need be no hesitation in favoring the Alaska railroad bill because of its provision for Government ownership. Alaska is a Territory, wholly within the jurisdiction and control of the National Government. It is not only within the power of Congress to "dispose of and make all needful rules and regulations respecting the Territory or other property belonging to the United States," but it is the duty of Congress to develop Alaska. There is no other authority with power to act.

Alaska is the property of the United States. Congress could sell it outright if it wished. Its power over Alaska is more absolute than its power over the Canal Zone. No question of State rights is involved.

The agricultural possibilities of Alaska have been demonstrated. The development of Siberia, a much colder country, is evidence of what could be done in Alaska with proper means of communication. Following the completion of the Siberian railroad, thousands of families flocked into the country and began the raising of wheat and other cereals. Siberia is now one of the great wheat-producing regions of the world, and its foodstuffs are marketed even in the United States. Railroad extension is going on in Siberia, and plains similar to those of Alaska are being transformed into wheat fields. In the interior of Alaska the climate is no more severe than in northern Canada, where thousands of American farmers are pouring in and developing the country.

Forty years ago the purchase of Alaska was ridiculed as a waste of money. Forty years from now the objectors to Alaskan development will have been proved to be as shortsighted as the Senators who opposed the acquisition of Oregon.

When Alaska shall have been developed and its people shall have demanded the right to erect a State of the Union, the question of the Government ownership of the pioneer railroad can be settled. There will be statesmanship in that day, we may be assured. The duty that confronts statesmen of this day is to look ahead and provide for present and future needs on a broad and liberal scale. The United States in building a railroad in Alaska will be building prosperity for itself and for its own people. It will be providing homes for home seekers. It will be opening up a great storehouse of wealth on equal terms to all.

A great opportunity is presented to the Members of the House—an inspiring opportunity to do a big thing in a big way.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD].

Mr. FITZGERALD. Mr. Chairman, in view of the discussion as to the profits of the operation of the Panama Railroad Co., I desire to call the attention of the committee to some facts developed in 1911 during the investigation of the estimates for the construction of the Panama Canal. It then appeared that the Panama Canal Railroad Co. apparently was earning money, and some inquiry was made regarding the expenditures that had been made in behalf of the company by the Government of the United States, for which no credit had been given and upon which no return was being made. I asked this question of Col. Goethals. I read from the hearings held on the Isthmus on November 20, 1911, in connection with the investigation into the estimates for the construction of the canal:

The CHAIRMAN. How much money has the Government spent on behalf of the Panama Railroad?

Col. GOETHALS. The commission expended on a second main track, in consideration for which spoils are hauled over the line free of charge, $1,123,477.93. The commission purchased the Panama and Colon at a net cost to October 31 of $1,235,754.70. The Government bought under specific appropriation and loaned to the Panama Railroad the steamships Cristobal and Ancon at a cost of about $1,444,000. The commission purchased outstanding Panama Railroad stock at a cost of $157,118.24, and also purchased the bonds at a cost of $2,148,217.50. In addition, Congress appropriated and charged to canal construction $4,835,000 for reequipment, etc., of the railroad. The Panama Railroad Co. was in such bad financial stress that we asked that they be relieved from the payment of the interest two years ago, and since then they have not paid it.

For the past four years the Panama Railroad Co. has not even been required to pay into the Treasury of the United States the interest upon the indebtedness incurred by the Government on behalf of the railroad, much less attempt to reimburse it for its expenditures, in the neighborhood of $9,000,000. In that connection, Col. Goethals was asked:

Now, they have accumulated a surplus, but instead of applying it to the account of the United States Government they are investing it?

And that appeared to be the fact.

In that year it appeared that the gross receipts of the Panama Railroad were $6,600,000, of which $1,400,000 was received from the Canal Commission; so that it not only received that much in money, but the Government had equipped it and purchased the vessels which the company is operating, bought in the bonds, and did other things which must be taken into account and must be stated in the accounts of the railroad company before any accurate knowledge can be had as to whether the railroad company is actually earning the money.

It would be easy to equip a railroad and relieve it of all responsibility for the cost of equipment and start it operating and then have it earn money. That is what is now being done by the Panama Railroad Co., because it has been relieved of responsibility for many expenditures on its account, including the cost of considerable equipment. While over $9,000,000 of expenditures were made on its account, about $1,200,000 was expended in return for services; but at least $8,000,000 at that time, and since then, if I recall correctly, over $3,000,000 additional, has been expended for it by the Canal Commission. So that in the neighborhood of $10,000,000 has been expended by the Federal Government on account of the Panama Railroad Co., for which the company has not been compelled to make any reimbursement and for which it is not even making payments in the nature of interest. If such elements be eliminated in stating its accounts, it is easy to show a profit.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from New York be extended two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. FITZGERALD] be extended two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LENROOT. I want to ask the gentleman whether or not that has not all been accounted for in assets—whether it has been returned to the Government or not?

Mr. FITZGERALD. The gentleman asks if these sums are included in the assets of the company? Of course the Government owns the assets.

Mr. LENROOT. Yes.

Mr. FITZGERALD. But the gentleman can see that if the Government pays $10,000,000 for equipment and various services for a railroad, and in computing the earnings no account is taken of that investment, the showing would be materially different in the statement of its profit-and-loss account from what it would be if such investment were taken into consideration.

Mr. LENROOT. If the Government has not contributed anything in a given year, and it is not shown in the value of the property, and the net earnings are a certain amount, that will show what the earnings are on the property, will it not?

Mr. FITZGERALD. I am not certain, because if the Panama Railroad Co. had borrowed this money instead of having it advanced by the United States Government, and if the Panama Railroad Co. were required to pay the interest on the amount invested, instead of being relieved of that burden by an act of Congress, it would show a materially different result in its earnings.

Mr. LENROOT. It would not show any difference in the earnings; only in the disposition of the earnings?

Mr. FITZGERALD. It would show a difference in the earnings, because there would first be charged off the amounts required to pay the interest on loans to the company and the operating expenses, and what was left would be profit. There is now shown in the profit account a very large sum of money that does not belong there. It should go into the Federal Treasury for advances made to the company, and the company should be charged with many millions of dollars of debt which apparently it has not.

Mr. CALDER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to his colleague?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Certainly.

Mr. CALDER. Was not most of the money the gentleman has referred to used for relocating this railroad?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. I have not spoken of the relocation.

Mr. CALDER. Did we not buy new equipment?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No; the Isthmian Canal Commission agreed to relocate the railroad for the Panama Railroad Co., because it would be wiped out when the canal work was finished.

Mr. CALDER. Have we not now an entirely new equipment, both rails, and cars, and engines, and everything else there?

Mr. FITZGERALD. Well, we have an up-to-date, modern equipment.

Mr. CALDER. Does not that account for most of the expense my colleague has referred to?

Mr. FITZGERALD. No. The price of four ships—the Panama, Colon, Cristobal, and Ancon—is not included. The $2,148,257 for the purchase of outstanding bonds is not included. These items alone aggregate $5,000,000. These facts should be in the RECORD for comparison with any estimate of the reported earnings of the Panama Railroad Co.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, this discussion has wandered far from the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT], and I shall not discuss that amendment at any great length, further than to say that as a practical proposition the committee thought, and I believe justly so, that it would be well to put this in the alternative, to provide for the leasing of these roads, or for Government operation in the event of failure to lease advantageously. Individually I would prefer to see this road leased to a company that would take charge of it and conduct it and carry it on without the Government itself having to operate it. Whether or not an advantageous lease could be made, especially during the first period of its existence, is a matter concerning which there may be considerable doubt. In that event, the Government can operate this road.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The language of the bill is—

In the event of failure to lease, to operate the same.

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. And the language in reference to leasing is not "in his discretion to lease," but "to lease."

Mr. DAVENPORT. It is absolutely mandatory.

Mr. MANN. Under that language, if it remains in the bill, has the President the discretion to operate the road? Is he not required to lease the road if anyone will lease it?

Mr. HOUSTON. In answer to that, I would say that the bill provides for the leasing of the road, but it provides the alternative; and that simply means that unless the President could make a lease that would be advantageous, that would be for the best interests of the people of the United States, then he should operate it. It gives him that discretion to exercise.

Mr. MANN. That is the question. The gentleman reads that language into the bill itself. I do not find anything in the bill that says if it is to the advantage of the United States to lease it he shall lease it, or that the President has any discretion about it. I think it is very important, at least, to have an expression of opinion from the gentleman and the committee as to what this means. The language of the bill authorizes the President to construct the road. I take it that the President would consider it binding upon him to start the construction of the road, at least. Then it authorizes him to lease the road. As I take it, under that, it is not left in his discretion to lease the road, but he is obliged to make some effort to lease it. How far he has discretion to refuse to lease it, I do not undertake to say. Of course, if he fails to lease it, then he can operate it; but, under the language of this bill, is he not required to advertise for bids for leasing, and to accept the bid if anyone will operate the road?

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, in response to that I would say that he would be required, I take it, to attempt to make a lease; but that certainly no construction could be put upon the language that would compel him to accept a lease that he thought was not advantageous. Supposing somebody should offer an insignificant sum, $1 or $5, or something of that sort. He would not be compelled to accept that. That would not be a lease that would take into consideration the interests of the Government; and, of course, this language contemplated that. That was the intention of the committee. I think every member of the committee who favored this bill desired that the leasing proposition should be put in the alternative; and while the majority of the committee favored that the leasing should be given preference, that that was the most feasible and most acceptable plan, yet in the event of a failure to lease then the Government was to operate it. And of course that meant the making of a lease that would protect the interests of the people of the United States. I think no other construction would be justified. If it would, no one would be more ready than I to correct that language.

Mr. SCOTT. Does not the bill as drawn vest in the President the discretion as to the terms upon which the road may be leased?

Mr. HOUSTON. The language of the bill is:

Upon such terms as he may deem proper.

Mr. SCOTT. Then, does not that carry the discretion of accepting or rejecting the proposition?

Mr. HOUSTON. Unquestionably, to my mind.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think that the President would have to determine in advance the terms upon which he would lease?

Mr. HOUSTON. Before the lease was consummated, of course.

Mr. MANN. Before he offered the opportunity for people to bid upon it.

Mr. HOUSTON. I take it that would simply be a business matter, and he would investigate fully and carefully, to know the value of the road and the amount that he ought to get in order properly to protect the interests of the Government. That would all be considered as part of the discretion, and would put the responsibility upon him of knowing the conditions and knowing what profitable amount should be accepted and what should not be.

Mr. BRYAN. Will the gentleman yield for a further question?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes.

Mr. BRYAN. By a further section the operation of the railroad is put in the hands of the Interstate Commerce Commission. Would not any lessee be perfectly safe in leasing the road and paying any reasonable amount for it because of the fact that he could appear before the Interstate Commerce Commission and get rates that would give him a return for the amount that he was paying?

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not see how the Government would be protected unless the terms or rate paid by the lessee would be sufficient.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be allowed 10 minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the time of the gentleman from Tennessee be extended 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. HOUSTON. Certainly.

Mr. HARDY. As I understand it, the whole House, those in favor of this bill and those not in favor of the bill, desire that if it be passed the President shall have the discretion to lease if it is desirable that a lease can be made, and to operate if a lease can not be made?

Mr. HOUSTON. That is the case.

Mr. HARDY. Now, having that purpose in view in common with the gentleman from Illinois, can not the committee thrash out the clause and relieve it of any ambiguity in that respect?

Mr. HOUSTON. The committee would only be too glad to do it.

Mr. HARDY. If the committee will bring in a committee amendment so as to clarify that, I think we need not bother about it any longer.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I shall not dwell longer upon that question, but I must be pardoned for discussing some of the main features of the bill, for the reason that some direct questions have been addressed to the chairman of the committee by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], in which he stated that he would like to know what engineer had reported on the feasibility of this route. This question is asked after making the statement emphatically that no engineers had surveyed this route, that no engineer had reported whether it was feasible or practicable to build the road.

On that point I will say that the gentleman from Georgia must be aware of the fact that in the Sixty-second Congress they provided for a railway commission to investigate and report as to the feasibility of a railroad from the southern coast of Alaska into the interior. That commission was composed of four distinguished engineers—one from the Army, one from the Navy, one from civil life, and one from the Geological Survey. They reported a feasible route.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes.

Mr. HARDWICK. They did not make any survey at all.

Mr. HOUSTON. They reported the routes that had been surveyed; the route from Chitina to Fairbanks that had been surveyed by Government engineers.

Mr. HARDWICK. For dirt roads.

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes.

Mr. HARDWICK. Does the gentleman think that is sufficient for a railroad survey?

Mr. HOUSTON. They gave all the data necessary for engineers to determine whether a railroad could be built. In addition to that, I think the railroad company that built from the coast to Chitina and the Copper River had a survey made through to Fairbanks. All of these were in the possession of the commission.

Mr. HARDWICK. Oh, I have read all that.

Mr. HOUSTON. They had all this data that showed the surveys that had been made.

Mr. HARDWICK. Let me ask the gentleman, How much of these thousand miles of proposed railroad has ever been surveyed for railroad purposes—that is, a survey made to determine the practicability and feasibility of the route?

Mr. HOUSTON. The engineers have not surveyed this line. Nobody knows yet where this line will be. We do not know, and we have not found it out from the Alaskan Commission; there are three or more routes, but a survey will be had.

Mr. HARDWICK. It is all guesswork.

Mr. HOUSTON. Not at all; there is no guesswork about it. Four distinguished engineers have said that it was a feasible route.

Mr. HARDWICK. I beg the gentleman's pardon; they have not said that.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think they have said that.

Mr. HARDWICK. We are all familiar with the report, and, while it recommends it, they do say it in a general way. I state, without fear of contradiction, that only a few miles of this proposed railroad has been surveyed in any way that any business man or any concern that ever contracted for a railroad would require it to be surveyed before any money was spent on it.

Mr. HOUSTON. Does the gentleman think that these distinguished railroad engineers would go over a route that had been surveyed by a commission, lay out a road from Chitina to Fairbanks, and not be able to give a correct answer?

Furthermore, as I stated, the Copper River Railroad has a survey to Fairbanks, and the same thing exists from Seward to Fairbanks by the Alaska Northern. They have made a survey that the engineers have reported feasible and practicable. The gentleman asked another question, and that is, What Democratic doctrine justifies this expenditure? I desire, in answer to that question, to read him what I think is really good Democratic doctrine, and that is the last platform adopted at Baltimore by the Democratic Party.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, would it interrupt the gentleman there if I asked him a question along the line of the survey?

Mr. HOUSTON. No.

Mr. HARDY. Was not the Alaska Northern Railroad surveyed with a great deal of minute detail for a long part of the way?

Mr. HOUSTON. That is my understanding.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Did not the Alaska Northern Railroad survey the right of way from the seacoast up to Fairbanks make a preliminary location of a road?

Mr. HOUSTON. That is, the Northern Alaska?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. HOUSTON. All the way to Fairbanks—it did.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. And they filed their maps of definite location for quite a distance—I have forgotten the number of miles—and then asked that the time be extended within which they could file their maps of definite location a little farther on. Congress did not pass that bill. The House did, but the Senate did not. So that they did not file their maps of definite location all the way through, but they made the preliminary examination, the preliminary survey, and did locate the route to that extent.

Mr. HARDWICK. It was only preliminary in that case.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. They never filed their maps of definite, final location.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I read now from the Democratic platform adopted at Baltimore, in answer to the question as to what Democratic doctrine will justify this expenditure, and I think this answers the question:

> We believe in the conservation and the development, for the use of all of the people, of the natural resources of the country. Our forests, our sources of water supply, our arable and our mineral lands, our navigable streams, and all the other material resources with which our country has been so lavishly endowed constitute the foundation of our national wealth. Such additional legislation as may be necessary to prevent their being wasted or absorbed by special or privileged interests should be enacted, and the policy of their conservation should be rigidly adhered to.

Mr. Chairman, I think that is authority and justification.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman read the Alaskan provision?

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I am going to read that now. It furthermore says:

> Immediate action should be taken by Congress to make available the vast and valuable coal deposits of Alaska under conditions that will be a perfect guaranty against their falling into the hands of monopolizing corporations, associations, or interests.

Mr. Chairman, I believe that both of those paragraphs constitute direct authority. You can not carry out the provisions of the paragraph I have just read and develop the valuable coal deposits of Alaska under conditions that will be a perfect guaranty against their falling into the hands of monopolizing corporations in any better way than by the passage of this bill. Furthermore, that is the construction to be given to both of those paragraphs.

The Democratic President considered that platform, and in construing that pledge and what it pledged the Democratic Party to decided it as meaning the support of a bill for the construction of railroads in Alaska, and he believes that would be in accordance with that platform, and in his interpretation of that plank and carrying out of that pledge he advocates the construction of this road.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman's time be extended for 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Chairman, why could we not—and I ask this question sincerely for the purpose of information——

Mr. HOUSTON. Oh, I do not want to yield for anything except a question.

Mr. HARDWICK. If the gentleman will not bother me, we will get through a great deal quicker. Why could we not open up all of these minerals and everything else for actual settlers without building a railroad, and then, as the business of the country justified it, why would not that itself induce the construction of a railroad when there was enough of it to warrant it?

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, that is a question that we have discussed a good deal during the general debate. I spoke upon that subject for an hour and forty minutes myself, and if I did not make myself clear at that time I will not be able to do it now.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman believe the Government ought to go into the coal-mining business in Alaska?

Mr. HOUSTON. No; unless it becomes necessary.

Mr. GARNER. How are you going to keep this out of the hands of monopoly any more by building the railroad than if you did not build a railroad?

Mr. HOUSTON. As has been stated already, a bill has been introduced in the Senate and in the House providing for the leasing of the coal lands in Alaska under such terms and provisions as will make it impossible for any corporation to monopolize that coal.

Mr. GARNER. If that bill were passed now and we did not build the railroad, would not that open up the coal mines?

Mr. HOUSTON. That will open up a few mines, and that is the theory upon which men stand who have opposed this bill. Talk about building a railroad by private interests! You can get some private corporation to build a road to some coal mine and exploit that one mine for its own benefit, but, then, what have you done for the development of the great Territory of Alaska? You may exploit private interests and let private interests go on and develop the mine, but that does not open up this great Territory for the purpose for which we advocate it, the building of homes for American citizens, for the rearing of families for the patriotic men and women of this great Republic of ours. We want Alaska developed along all lines.

I believe the conditions are such there as to support and justify that, but gentlemen oppose it here by making extravagant statements, calling it an absurd proposition. Why, the gentleman from Virginia just talked about absurd agricultural possibilities, and others have made quotations from some Government officials as to what conditions are up there, and those statements were made so as not to encourage the settlers to go there expecting too much, yet every one of those officials stated that agriculture can be successfully carried on there. They talk of agricultural exports from Alaska, and would have you infer that we claim that Alaska could raise products that would make exportation profitable. Our claim is that you can go there and make out of the soil of this great interior valley enough to support families; that a man can go there and clear up a home, and he can support himself and feed those who come in to work. It will sustain a large population. That has been proven. You do not have to take guesswork for that. We have the proof that farmers have gone in there and are at work now making a living. One farmer has 90 acres under cultivation. The figures are on record as to how much hay, potatoes, wheat, oats, rye, barley, and vegetables are raised. The contention is that the people can go there and make enough in that country to live upon. If one farmer can do this, a thousand can do so. That is what we contend. We have the statement of the agriculture officials here—I called attention to it awhile ago—and I want to read further from it. This is what Mr. Walter H. Evans, chief of the division of insular stations and officer of experimental stations—he has supervision of this work, and he says:

In order to further establish the possibility of agriculture in Alaska a comparison has been made of the countries of Norway, Sweden, Finland, and the Russian Provinces of Archangel, Vologda, and Olonetz. All these countries lie between latitudes 58° and 70° north, and for the most part they are north of 60°, the approximate latitude of the northern reach of the Gulf of Alaska. In Europe within the above limits are embraced over 985,000 square miles, or about 599,450,000 acres. Alaska, with its 570,390 square miles, or 365,049,000 acres, extends from latitude 54° 30′ in southeastern Alaska to more than 71° at Point Barrow. A study of the topography, climate, native plants, etc., shows that the conditions are not very dissimilar in the two regions, whatever advantage there is in climate being probably slightly in favor of the European countries. In these countries of Europe more than 11,000,000 people are living, while the census of 1910 reports 64,356 as the population of Alaska. Recent statistics show in the three countries and three Provinces in Europe, which lie mostly north of 60°, that 8,373,000 acres of land were producing cereals of all kinds, the total yield being: Wheat, 6,683,840 bushels; rye, 36,509,640 bushels; barley, 26,246,545 bushels; oats, 109,036,780 bushels.

Now, this report was made in 1913. That is a statement of an official among the very last that has been made. Now, this report from this experimental station officer shows what can be done. Gentlemen are continually talking about its being a cold country and talking about frost there every month in the year, when the facts are that frost does not come as late on the average at Fairbanks as it does in the United States in many parts of the Northwest. The figures are all here. You can pick out exceptional instances everywhere, as, for instance, the thermometer fell below zero in Florida at one time. Some men who oppose this bill say we are talking about raising bananas in Alaska. There is no such thing as that being claimed. Nobody maintains anything of that kind.

Then there was a proposition referred to that you can not clear this land for less than $200 an acre. Now, I would like to invite the attention of thoughtful, reasonable men to that proposition. One statement has been made that it costs $125 an acre, another statement that it costs $200, and that the labor costs $7.50 a day and $10 a day. Now, think about that for a moment. The labor cost is $10 a day, and it costs $200 to clear an acre of land; that is simply 20 days' labor—20 days' work in the clearing. What better opening for a hardy pioneer than to go into that country, clear an acre in 20 days, and put it in condition—just such condition as this land at this experimental station.

That is the cost when they went into it in the spring of the year. It was heavily timbered, and they paid an enormous price to clean it up in the spring, to get it ready for work that season. How did they clear the land of the West and of the Mississippi Valley? Men went in there and deadened the timber, and they let the trees fall; and perhaps the next year they burned up as much as they could, and they rolled the logs, and in a few years the man had a farm cleared up with but little cost. They can clear this easier, perhaps, than they could there.

My friend talks about the tundra or moss up there as though that were an estoppal of the agricultural possibilities in Alaska. It is shown here in this statement that if you set fire to tundra at the right time of the year, in the dry season, and burn it off smooth, it leaves the ground absolutely ready for cultivation. Not only that, but the roots run into the ground deeply, and it leaves an ash there that fertilizes.

They warn people from going there by saying that they do not want to cultivate the North Pole. But here are statements that show that men can live there in comfort and in health.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Can I ask my friend a question?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes, sir.

Mr. SAUNDERS. How many people are there in Europe who live in the latitudes that correspond to Alaska?

Mr. HOUSTON. Eleven millions.

Mr. SAUNDERS. What countries does that include?

Mr. HOUSTON. Norway, and Finland, and Sweden, I believe.

Mr. SAUNDERS. If you will look at the census with respect to the population of those countries——

Mr. HOUSTON. It adds to that Archangel, Vologda, and Olonetz.

Mr. SAUNDERS. Have you ever looked at the parallel of latitude that goes through southern Alaska and see what countries it strikes?

Mr. HOUSTON. I have looked into this somewhat.

Mr. SAUNDERS. I want to point out to you that all the populous portions of Sweden and Norway are above those parallels of latitude.

Mr. HOUSTON. These figures are all right, because they are taken from official authorities.

Mr. SAUNDERS. St. Petersburg is in the latitude of 60, and that is way above the populous portions of Norway and Sweden.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] is recognized.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand a table of the temperatures in Alaska, and I want to read three or four of them. I find that the lowest temperature at Metlakatla is 5° below zero; at Juneau, 10° below; at Sitka, 4° below; and at Valdez, 2° below. A few moments ago, when my distinguished friend from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] was talking about the frozen North, I walked out into the lobby and looked at the weather map, and I find that it is 12° below in Wisconsin this very day. And in Wyoming it is colder than it is to-day in southeastern Alaska.

Mr. MONDELL. Are these railroads to be built in southeastern Alaska?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. They all start in southeastern Alaska, but they do not end on deserts that are inhabited by rattlesnakes and tarantulas, coyotes, and jack rabbits, like they have in Wyoming. [Laughter.]

Mr. STAFFORD. I hope the gentleman from Washington does not claim that Wisconsin raises any cereals in midwinter. I would rather have him compare the temperature in Wisconsin——

Mr. WICKERSHAM. Why did not the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] do that?

Mr. STAFFORD. Do what?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I have the floor.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Washington yield?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I refuse to yield. The gentleman from Wisconsin ought to be an expert on temperature. There is colder weather in Milwaukee than they have out at Nome, up on the Bering Sea.

Mr. STAFFORD. Not in summer.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. He has asked as to whether they raised cereals up there in Wisconsin in the wintertime. I wish to say that they do not propose to raise them in Alaska in the wintertime, either.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the average temperature during the growing period?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. It is a little bit lower than it is in Wisconsin. If I may be permitted to proceed for a moment, I wish to say that these men who talk about that land ought to look at the weather map occasionally and see what the conditions are. It so happened that I visited Alaska at one time myself. Once, when I was over on Kodiak Island, I saw sheep there that had gone through the entire winter, and they had never been fed. I was there in the spring of the year.

Mr. STAFFORD. They were mountain sheep.

Mr. MONDELL. Does the gentleman have any doubt about sheep wintering on the ranges in Wyoming?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman refuses to yield.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I was talking the other day with a gentleman who had been up in Alaska, in the Tanana Valley, and he told me that in the fall two of his pack horses had gotten way from him and escaped, but that they found them the next spring, and they were in good condition. Now, you ask why there are no more people in Alaska engaged in agricultural and other pursuits, and I will tell you briefly some of the troubles. In the first place, as we know, the coal fields have been closed for several years, and they can not get the fuel they want. In the next place, the homestead law in Alaska makes it practically impossible for any man to take up a homestead. It requires him to do an amount of clearing that he can not do in that or any other country. In the next place, there is no way in which you can lease the pasture land of Alaska. For two years there has been a gentleman in Seattle urging me to find some way by which he could pasture sheep and cattle in that Territory.

I took it up with the distinguished gentleman from Alaska, Judge WICKERSHAM. We knew of no way that it could be done. He was ready for two years to go into the sheep and the cattle business if he could only find the way.

Now, take up the question in regard to other products. Take it in regard to forestry. I remember about four years ago a gentleman from Seattle came to me and told me that he had a million dollars of his own which he was ready to put into the wood-pulp business in Alaska. He really had it, and I went down to the Forest Service and tried to get some arrangement made so that he could go up there and manufacture that forest into pulp. I asked the Forester on what terms he would allow that gentleman to invest his money and manufacture wood pulp,

I told him he would buy it outright or lease it, or do it in any way the Government said. I said to the Forester, "What will you do?" He said, "I will give it consideration." We waited another year, and then I went back——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I asked the Forester again if there was not some way by which he would permit this forest to be manufactured into wood pulp. I told him that it was rapidly decaying. He said he would take it under advisement. He did take it under advisement, and then he said he would do what was right. But this man said he refused to invest his million dollars on any such statement as that. He could get nothing definite from the Forest Service.

A year ago I wrote to that same gentleman and asked him if he was still thinking of going into the wood-pulp business in Alaska. He wrote me that he had abandoned the project. He said they had waited so long that a large part of the timber had died and the country had been reforested by timber that was not fit to be manufactured into wood pulp. He refused to consider the proposition further.

Now, those are some of the conditions that you meet in Alaska. Of course people are not going to go up there if they can not take up farms, if they can not get pasture lands, if they can make no use of the coal fields or of the forests. Why would anyone go into Alaska under those conditions? And what would anyone go up there for except only to mine gold?

Now, you talk about the agricultural possibilities and about all that is going to happen in that line. It is all in the realm of prophecy. You do not know anything about what is going to happen in Alaska when the railroads are built there, so far as agriculture is concerned. When I went to Washington, 20 years ago, I rode over the Great Northern Railroad from Spokane to Seattle, and from Spokane down to Wenatchee, a distance of 150 miles, there was scarcely a dwelling to be seen along the line of that railroad. That land was selling for 50 cents an acre. They said it was a barren desert covered with sagebrush. They said that it could never be farmed. Yet to-day that is one of the greatest wheat-producing regions in the world, and tens of thousands of acres of that land which even the people who lived out there thought 15 years ago was worthless is to-day as valuable as any equal number of acres of land in Oklahoma. And so far as that is concerned, they now have garden patches in that country which will produce as much agricultural stuff as any county in Wyoming. [Laughter.]

What are we going to do in the way of agriculture in Alaska? We do not know; but those who have been there and studied this question know something about it. My distinguished friend from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] is usually very careful in his statements, and usually studies the questions he speaks on; but he made the statement awhile ago that there had been furnished no comparison between the agricultural possibilities of Alaska and Norway and Sweden. Why, it is written right in the report itself.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Washington yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I will say to the gentleman that I have read that report, and it is based upon hypotheses and mere conjectures. Will the gentleman read the language?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I have read it, and I know what the report says. I can quote the language of it now, and the gentleman can see whether I am correct or not. It says that the conditions between the two countries, from an agricultural standpoint, are not dissimilar, and it says, if anything, there is a slight disadvantage in the agricultural conditions of Europe.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Washington has expired.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I ask for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY] asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I shall not object, but I would like to know if we can reach some agreement about this amendment.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Which amendment?

Mr. MANN. About striking out the leasing clause. There are other amendments that will be offered. We ought not to spend all our time on this single amendment.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman from Washington want five minutes more?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Yes; I would like to have five minutes. After that I shall not talk any more to-day.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think we have given nearly enough time on this amendment already.

Mr. MANN. I myself would like to have five minutes on the amendment. The amendment itself has not been discussed very much. The gentleman from Ohio would like to have five minutes.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have five minutes. I expect to address myself to the amendment.

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the debate on this amendment close in 20 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] asks unanimous consent that all debate on the pending amendment close in 20 minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. PAYNE. Mr. Chairman, this question of agriculture is very interesting to me, but I shall break into it later. [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the debate on this amendment close in 20 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I thought my distinguished friend from New York [Mr. PAYNE] had already broken in to-day. [Laughter.]

Mr. PAYNE. Of course no one who is against this project for the benefit of the great city of Seattle, of which I am very proud, has a right to say anything. [Laughter.] The gentleman is from that city. I wonder if the gentleman has spoken before to-day?

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. No; the gentleman has not.

Mr. PAYNE. I mean in the discussion of the bill before to-day. Has the gentleman broken in before? [Laughter.]

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I have. Has not the gentleman from New York?

Mr. PAYNE. No.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. I enjoyed the gentleman's speech to-day, only I hope this is not to come out of my time.

Mr. PAYNE. I hope the gentleman may have the whole five minutes.

Mr. HUMPHREY of Washington. As far as its benefiting the city of Seattle is concerned, I never noticed the gentleman from New York [Mr. PAYNE] opposing anything simply because it happened to benefit his community.

I want to say just a word in regard to the report which has been made upon this project. There has been considerable criticism here that we are acting without information. We have more information now in regard to the location of these railroads than we ever had when we voted a land grant to a railroad to be constructed. I happen to be a member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee, and we vote annually a good many millions of dollars upon reports; and the report that has been furnished in regard to this railroad is about as definite and about as certain and furnishes as much exact information as the majority of reports that we act on in the Rivers and Harbors Committee. I think that the criticism that we have no information and have not investigated this question, when compared with other questions upon which we vote money, is not well founded.

Just one more proposition. I want to go back to agriculture a moment, since my genial friend [Mr. PAYNE] has mentioned it, and that is in regard to the cost of clearing the land that has been mentioned here. I picked up a paper from Seattle to-day and I discovered that we have cleared an acre of land near Seattle and it has cost us $10,000; but that was cleared under what we call the lazy-husband law, under which they sentence a man to jail and try to make him work to help support his family. You might just as well say that that is a fair measure of what it costs to clear land in the State of Washington as to say that $200 is a fair measure of the cost of clearing land in Alaska where it is done by the Government under an eight-hour contract when the timber is green. My distinguished friend from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] stated the fact about it. If you will run a harrow over that tundra in certain seasons of the year, you can burn it off, and the average cost of clearing in Alaska in the way a farmer would clear it would amount to not more than $20 an acre. [Applause.]

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, I wish to discuss the amendment that has been offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT]. I am glad to find myself in accord with him on at least one proposition in the consideration of this bill. I think his amendment ought to be adopted; but in view of some discussion that has taken place here, and in view of what I have heard gentlemen say in private conversation, I believe there is some misunderstanding as to the provisions of the pending bill and the purpose of the amendment introduced by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT].

I understood the gentleman from New York [Mr. OGLESBY] to say that he was opposed to the amendment because he wanted to leave the matter discretionary with the President. I want to invite the attention of the gentleman and of the committee to the fact that if you defeat this amendment you do not leave it discretionary with the President at all. In order that that may be perfectly clear——

Mr. OGLESBY. I should just like to say that a few moments ago the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BURGESS] asked the chairman, if there was any ambiguity on that subject, whether the committee would be willing to take the matter up and insert such language as to make it perfectly clear that it was intended to leave the matter discretionary with the President, and the chairman of the committee replied that they would. If the gentleman thinks it is not clear, I am sure the committee will be very glad to consider any suggestion as to amendment.

Mr. WILLIS. I certainly think that the language does not clearly convey the meaning that the gentleman from New York [Mr. OGLESBY] thinks it conveys. Let me read what it says here. It says:

The President of the United States is hereby empowered, authorized, and directed—

Now go over to the next page. He is authorized, empowered, and directed—to lease the said railroad or railroads, including telegraph and telephone lines, after completion upon such terms as he may deem proper, but no lease shall be for a longer period than 20 years, or in the event of failure to lease, to operate the same until the further action of Congress—

And so forth.

In other words, this bill as it stands says that it is the duty of the President of the United States, after we build this railroad, to lease it, and that he shall have authority to operate the road only in the event of the failure to lease. Now, we want to have a perfectly clear understanding as to what we are doing here. If we adopt the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma—and I am in favor of that amendment—it does not give the President any discretionary power at all. If that amendment is adopted—and I think it ought to be adopted——

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIS. I yield to the chairman of the committee.

Mr. HOUSTON. Does not the gentleman think that the language which provides that he shall lease the road upon such terms as he deems proper gives him the absolute right to accept or decline to accept any lease that he thinks advantageous?

Mr. WILLIS. In response to that very pertinent and proper suggestion of the chairman of the committee, let me say this: I think if we pass this bill as it has come from the committee, we shall have given instructions to the President. We shall have said to him, "It is the opinion of Congress that this road that we have built ought to be leased, and it is your duty to lease it, and you shall not operate it unless you are unable to lease it." In other words, the bill as it stands takes the discretion away from the President and compels him to lease it. If we adopt the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT], we take the discretion away from the President and compel him to operate the road. I think that is what ought to be done. There is no good reason why, after building this road and paying for it, the Government should be compelled to lease it to anybody; let the Government operate it as it does the Panama Railroad, for the benefit of the people of the United States. I am in favor of the amendment; but if gentlemen think it ought to be left discretionary, there ought to be still a different amendment proposed than any one that has been suggested. I hope the amendment will be adopted just as it has been presented by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT]. But I want to call attention——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WILLIS. I ask for one minute more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that his time be extended one minute. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WILLIS. In that minute I want to call attention simply to this peculiar situation: We have got to a place where the arguments of the gentlemen who are opposing this bill are knocking each other down. The gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] is opposed to this bill because he says he is confident that there are sufficient resources up in central Alaska to induce private capital to build railroads if you let them alone. The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] are opposed to the bill because they say that is a frozen region inhabited only by polar bears, icebergs, and ptarmigan, and that there is nothing there which will furnish tonnage.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not opposed to the bill, but only to certain features of it.

Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman is opposed to the extension of the railroad to the Yukon. In other words, gentlemen are basing their arguments on exactly opposite and conflicting premises. I am in favor of this bill because I believe in the development of Alaska. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, the question propounded by the gentleman from Illinois, to which the chairman of the committee has made reply, and which question has also been asked by the gentleman who has just taken his seat, addresses itself to a very important provision in this bill. I wish to call the attention of the committee to the fact that the language sought to be amended by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT] is a very important part of this bill, and in the judgment of many members of the Committee on Territories embraces an important principle.

Mr. Chairman, some gentlemen are willing to support this proposition to build a railway in Alaska because they are honestly in favor of embarking the Government upon a great many activities which heretofore have been confined to individuals. Other gentlemen are willing that this railroad should be built, notwithstanding the Government is to build it, because they feel that a great public obligation is due to the people of Alaska and to the people of the United States in regard to this proposition.

I think I am right in saying that the chief objection to this bill has been waged by gentlemen who object to Government operation of railroads; and as one of those interested in the particular language employed in this provision of the bill, I will say that the language employed was for the express purpose of making a declaration of preference on the part of this Congress that the President of the United States, before he undertook to operate this railroad on Government account, should first try to lease it.

I would say to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that there is nothing in the language employed which makes it obligatory on the President to lease it in the absence of reasonable terms. The Congress tells him to lease it, provided it can be done under such terms as he may deem reasonable and just, not, as the gentleman would construe it, as if it authorized the President to operate the road only in the event of his inability to lease; but in the event of his failure to lease upon reasonable terms he shall operate it as a Government institution.

If the language had been that the President was authorized to lease the railroad upon such terms as he deemed reasonable and proper, and that in the event of his inability to lease, then it should be operated by the Government, there would be no question that what the gentlemen say is true, and their objection to this provision of the bill would be legitimate.

As I construe this proposition, it is an expression of preference on the part of Congress that this railroad when constructed should be committed to private hands for operation, provided the President is able to find an operating company which is willing to undertake it on terms which to him may seem reasonable and proper. But in the event he shall be unable to find private operators who are willing to take the conduct of this business upon terms he deems reasonable and just, then he shall operate it for the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Virginia has expired.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman have three minutes more.

Mr. DAVENPORT. And I ask that it shall not be taken out of the 30 minutes that was allowed for debate upon this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Virginia may have three minutes more by unanimous consent, and that it shall not be taken out of the 30 minutes allowed for debate on the amendement. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I dislike to be ungracious to the gentleman who has taken his seat and to whom I am somewhat indebted for the privilege of further addressing the committee on this amendment; but I deem it my duty to call the attention of the committee to the fact that this amendment comes from a gentleman who is opposed to this bill and who wishes to see it defeated on this floor. I must express some surprise when I find a gentleman, opposed to the Government operation of railroads in every particular, offering an amendment which makes it absolutely necessary for the President to operate this road whether he deems it wise to do so or not.

Turning to the committee report signed by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT] I find in section 6 of his report this language:

> We are opposed to launching the Federal Government into private enterprises at all too extensively, for the reason that we do not believe it properly belongs to the functions of a republican form of government, and we believe that constantly launching the Federal Government into private enterprises will finally undermine, overload, capsize, and ultimately destroy the real functions of a republican form of government if not the overthrow of the Government itself.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. What is the gentleman reading from?

Mr. WATSON. I am reading from the report of the minority of the Committee on the Territories, where the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT] states that the exercise of this function by the Federal Government will ultimately destroy the Government; and yet he comes in here to-day with a proposition that the President of the United States shall be deprived of all discretion in the premises and compelled to operate this railroad on Government account.

I look upon this amendment as playing the part of the wooden horse that the Greeks carried into Troy; and I fear that this offer of the gentleman from Oklahoma is armed with weapons intended to destroy the bill, and I hope the committee will vote the amendment down. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I shall offer two amendments to perfect the text of the bill which the gentleman from Oklahome [Mr. DAVENPORT] moved to strike out. One is to insert after the word "lease" the words "in his discretion," so as to leave it discretionary with the President. The other is to insert, after the word "railroads," line 23, the words "or any portion thereof," so that the road may be operated in some fashion before it is entirely completed. Under the terms of the bill if they built 50 miles of railroad and they had 60 to build they could not lease or operate the part that they had constructed, and I think no one desires that.

Mr. Chairman, after all, in dealing with these questions, one of the most important is to so provide as not to involve the Government in scandal. The most dangerous thing with which we have to deal in connection with enterprises of this character is the danger of graft or charges of graft. I do not believe that we ought to put any such burden upon any administrative officer or upon the President. When this road is constructed, if it is desirable to lease it, as very likely it may be, it ought to be leased when the proposition is submitted to Congress, and we ought not to put upon the President the responsibility of making a lease, if he makes one, so that some one will charge him with ulterior motives, or so that if he declines to make the lease some one will charge him with ulterior motives. Suppose he has the authority to lease the road that touches the Guggenheim road. He makes a lease to the person who can best afford to take the lease, and that is to the Guggenheim road owners, and if he be a Democratic President, which is rather unlikely, Republicans will charge him with attempting to back up the Guggenheims, and if he be a Republican President, the Democrats of the country will charge him with selling out Alaska to the Guggenheims. Why do we fear to take the responsibility when it arises in Congress of determining the terms upon which the lease can be made? There is time enough; the road is not built yet.

If they go ahead building the road there and can operate what is being built as it is constructed, when the road is completed far enough so that it reaches the coal fields and we have opened up the coal mines, under leases or otherwise, so there is business for the road, the President may make a recommendation to Congress as to the terms upon which a lease is desirable and we can act upon that in the open, and not put the President in the position where whatever he does he will be damned for it. [Applause.]

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, I shall not take up even five minutes' time. Ever since this matter has been under consideration on every occasion I have asserted I was going to oppose this lease proposition. I do not believe it is right. I do not believe for a moment that we ought to construct the railroad and then direct the President to lease it. If upon compromise it is concluded that we may authorize the President to lease it in his discretion it would not be so bad, but to direct him to lease it if he receives a good offer, I think, is absolutely wrong, and would be destructive of the policy we wish to institute in Alaska in building the road.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Amend, on page 11, line 22, after the word "lease," by inserting a comma and the words "in his discretion."

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, you will pardon me for referring to some of the references to the Democratic platform. I only want to say this to gentlemen on both sides of the House, that I am not unmindful of the language in the Democratic platform which was adopted at Baltimore. When any national issue purely of Democratic principles is involved I want to say to you that you will find me every time standing by Democratic principles. I challenge any man on this floor or any man in the United States to show where I when a Democratic candidate was nominated on a Democratic platform where I was a legal voter I was not in favor of him and that I did not stand by him, and I have never bolted my ticket on any occasion, nor did I ever run on any independent ticket in any place where I was a legal voter. I dismiss the matter with that. I want to say to the gentleman further that when national issues are involved the President of the United States, my President, will have no more ardent supporter than I will be for him and his principles, but I concede to every man the right if he honestly disagrees on a local matter that is not in continental America to present his views upon it and he should not be condemned or damned for it.

I know the influence at work, and yet I will be found fighting in the ranks, and it will not cause me to deviate one way or the other or to accept an independent nomination or anything else.

I want to say one word in conclusion upon the amendment which I offer. My friend from Virginia [Mr. WATSON], one of the most genial men, and one of the most pleasant that I have had the pleasure to meet in this Congress, said that he was surprised at my offering the amendment. I am sorry that I surprised him, yet I offered the amendment for this purpose: If the Government of the United States is going into the construction of a railroad, then let the Government have a little bit of business experience and operate it until we can tell whether it is successful. I agree with the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that if the Congress of the United States is not competent after a report of the operation of the road has been made to it, to say whether or not it shall be leased or operated by the Government of the United States, we better go out of business; and if the amendment that I offer prevails, it will require the Government to operate it until when? Until Congress otherwise directs; and if Congress has sense enough, and if the Members of this body have sense enough to pass a law authorizing the President to construct a railroad, is it not reasonable to believe that they are intelligent enough when the report is presented to them to act wisely and lease it if it is deemed best to do so?

The message says to administer the road. How are you going to administer it? What is the English interpretation of that? It means in the English interpretation to run it. I do not know how the gentlemen of this House feel. Since this discussion began, and since Mr. FERRIS and I along last fall, before the report was made, notified the committee that we were sorry we could not agree with them, I have never gone voluntarily to any man a Member of this House and asked him to vote against this measure. I have never gone to him and asked him to do one thing against it other than as his conscience dictates, according to the investigation that he has made. If any gentleman desires to campaign and try to get men to support the bill, be he an officer or a layman in the ranks, it is his privilege to do so, and I love him for it. I love any man who is honest and conscientious in what he advocates. Take sinister motives out of it, and I say to him, even though I can not agree with him, "My brother, there will be no ill feeling when it is through," and if this bill passes and becomes a law, as a citizen of the United States I shall do my best to make it a success; but I am going to urge, as long as I have the opportunity, that if we undertake to construct that road by Government aid, under Government supervision, that we undertake to operate it under the same supervision until we have succeeded or failed.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is first on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will ask to have that amendment go before the words "to lease."

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I want to have the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois reported again in order that I may get the exact status.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

Mr. MANN. I ask to insert the language of the amendment before the words "to lease," so it would read "in his discretion to lease."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment as modified.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. My colleague, Mr. MANN, also suggested an amendment, in line 23, after the word "railroad."

Mr. MANN. I shall offer that later.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. It is not pending now?

Mr. MANN. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 22, before the words "to lease," insert the words "in his discretion."

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not think there will be any objection to that amendment at all.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman permit me? Could that be construed as leaving it optional with the President to lease or operate or to do nothing, in his discretion?

Mr. HOUSTON. This leaves it in his discretion to lease the road. It carries out the idea as we intended to have it in the committee.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I offer a further amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 11, line 23, after the word "railroads," insert "or any portion thereof."

Mr. HOUSTON. That is all right.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, on page 10, line 6, I move to strike out "one thousand" and insert in lieu thereof "two hundred."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, line 6, strike out "one thousand" and insert "two hundred."

Mr. FERRIS. Now, Mr. Chairman, I do that with the intention of later, when we reach section 3, to move to strike out "$35,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$10,000,000," which would be the amount required, at $48,000 per mile, to build up to the only two known coal fields, to wit, the Bering and the Matanuska coal fields. The record from one end to the other teems with testimony to show that the only two known coal fields in Alaska are the Bering and the Matanuska coal fields. The record also teems with the fact that the interior of Alaska has nothing of value other than a low-grade lignite coal, which can not stand the shipment from the interior, a distance of 300 and more miles, to the coast, and the additional shipment of from twelve to fifteen hundred miles by water down to the Puget Sound country in the States. The testimony of ex-Secretary Fisher also discloses the fact that any railroad which passes beyond those two known coal fields on into the interior of Alaska will go through a lone, lean, long period that can not be justified by any sort of reason on the part of this House, this Congress, or anyone else. I do not know how the House may feel. It is possible they may vote down this amendment. I know my views are not indorsed by perhaps a majority of this House, but what I ask the Members to keep close in mind is that if they are going to build the railroad at all they ought to build it somewhere to justify it from the standpoint of tonnage.

The elementary consideration in this, as in every other railroad scheme, is one of tonnage. The fact that somebody wants to build a railroad in order to promote some town-site scheme ought not to move this Congress to reach their hand into the Treasury and drag out $35,000,000. If we do anything, we ought to appropriate only enough to build to the Bering field and the Matanuska field.

Now, one word as to what it will cost. It will not be disputed by either friend or foe of this bill that within 25 miles from deep water on the coast they can reach the Bering coal fields. It will not be disputed, because the record discloses, and it is not disputed anywhere, that by the construction of 110 miles on the end of the 70-mile spur that now reaches up from the town of Seward to a place called Knik Junction, you can go clear up there to the Matanuska coal field. If these coal fields are of any value to the Navy, although the record teems with the fact, and a recent report says, that the Navy does not want the coal, that it is no good, but if it was they are no longer using coal in the Navy. But even if you are going to thrust aside these reports of your own Secretary of the Navy, these two lines, embodying 125 miles, at $48,000 per mile, will constitute all that need be appropriated for. If my friends in this House, on both sides of the Chamber, are right on the proposition that Government ownership is a good thing, this amendment ought to be in their interest.

If you launch out on this Government ownership proposition and carry this railroad up through a barren, treeless, and worthless country, that costs from $100 to $200 an acre to clear, then Government ownership, from necessity, from reason, and from common sense, as well as other reasons, will fall flat. The real friends of Government ownership ought to vote for this amendment, for if this amendment is adopted it will be the end of public ownership. I am personally opposed to Government ownership, but, if I was for it, this is not a feasible proposition, to go beyond Bering coal fields and beyond Matanuska. So, for those who are opposed to Government ownership nothing need be said; this ought to be enough to induce them to support the amendment. For those who are in favor of it, it is nonfeasible and should not be supported by them, if they hope to preserve the principle.

Mr. WILLIS. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. FERRIS. I do.

Mr. WILLIS. Does the gentleman concur in the view of the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] that private capital would extend these roads up to the Tanana Valley?

Mr. FERRIS. I do not think they would at the present time, nor do I think it now justifies it.

Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman differs, then, with the gentleman from Wyoming?

Mr. FERRIS. I do not think the gentleman said that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to proceed for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I hold no brief for the gentleman from Wyoming, but I think, at least, what he ought to have said was that private enterprise under a leasing law would develop Alaska as long as her resources would entitle her to be developed.

Mr. LENROOT. Is the gentleman aware that 200 miles would not reach either coal field under any possible calculation?

Mr. FERRIS. One hundred and twenty miles on the end of the spur will go clear to Matanuska, and 25 miles will go clear to the Bering field.

Mr. LENROOT. The gentleman contemplates, then, the combination of the Alaskan Syndicate with the Alaska Northern?

Mr. FERRIS. If they do not want to do it for the extension of 110 miles, some 20 miles farther will connect with deep water at a better point than Seward and about 70 miles of railway could be saved.

Mr. LENROOT. But 200 miles would not reach tidewater.

Mr. FERRIS. It will reach tidewater and you will have mileage to spare.

Mr. LENROOT. It will not.

Mr. FERRIS. It will.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, I wish to take the floor particularly in order to ask the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] a question.

Mr. FERRIS. I am not going to set myself up as a bulletin board, but if I can answer you I will be happy to do so.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. The gentleman has studied this question and I am sure he has valuable information to give. The gentleman's statement was that Mr. Fisher was opposed to building the roads beyond the coal fields?

Mr. FERRIS. I did not say that.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. I understood the gentleman to say that Secretary Fisher said it would be impossible to build through that barren and treeless waste?

Mr. FERRIS. He did say it would not be profitable, but let me give the gentleman the circumstances under which he said it. I can turn to it in a moment. He was before the committee which was considering this bill at the Senate end of the Capitol, and they asked him to consider the matter from the viewpoint of their being a board of directors, and they asked him, assuming that they were sitting as a board of directors of a private corporation, what he would say to them that would induce them to go beyond the coal fields.

His reply was that you would have to go through a long lean period, and that he could not say anything to you except to advise you to build it from patriotic motives, expecting to lose on it for a considerable time. That is the substance of what he said.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Mr. Chairman, my recollection of Secretary Fisher's statement was that he was very much in favor of building railroads in Alaska; and when Congress passed a law extending the time in which the Alaska Northern Railroad might file its maps of definite location, Secretary Fisher induced the President to veto the bill, because he thought the Government ought to construct a road from a point on Cook Inlet up the Tanana Valley to Fairbanks, through this treeless waste.

Mr. Chairman, since I have been in Congress I have heard many speeches here in opposition to the admission of States into this Union for numerous reasons, and some of them in the cloakrooms, to the effect that the people of the Territories seeking admission to statehood were not capable of maintaining self-government. That argument was made in regard to Oklahoma, for instance. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. And it was true, too. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. And in all the history of the past, in answer to pleas for the development of the vast areas west of the Mississippi River, we have been met with the argument that it was a barren and treeless waste, and a useless undertaking, and a waste of the public funds. Just as a matter of interest I want to refer to some of these speeches.

When, for instance, the question was up as to whether or not we should acquire the territory known as the Louisiana Purchase, one distinguished gentleman, a Representative from the State of Massachusetts, the Hon. Josiah Quincy, opposed it, and he used these words—and in view of the fact that the Speaker is not in the chair, I make bold to read them. I might not read them if the Speaker occupied the chair. He said, among other things:

> It was not for these men that our forefathers fought. It was not for them this Constitution was adopted. You have no authority to throw the rights and liberties and properties of this people into hotchpot with the wild men on the Missouri—

[Laughter.]

Mr. BRYAN. That is good sense. [Laughter.]

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. And in view of the fact that my colleague, Mr. HARRISON, is now occupying the chair, I hesitate somewhat to read the balance of it, but I will take my chances:

> nor with the mixed though more respectable race of the Anglo-Hispano-Gallo-Americans who bask on the sands in the mouth of the Mississippi.

[Laughter.]

He said further:

> I oppose this bill from no animosity to the people of New Orleans, but from the deep conviction that it contains a principle incompatible with the liberties and safety of my country. * * * This bill, if it passes, is a deathblow to the Constitution.

[Laughter.]

> It may afterwards linger; but, lingering, its fate will at no very distant period be consummated.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from Illinois?

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Is the gentleman reading from an old speech in Congress or from a recent speech by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS]? [Laughter.]

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I suggest that the gentleman from Illinois is rather a new recruit in this class himself.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. A distinguished Senator from South Carolina, Senator McDuffie, referred to Oregon as "a vast and treeless waste, where agricultural development is impossible."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. HARDY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman be given 10 minutes longer.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think we had better reach some agreement as to how long this debate shall run on this amendment.

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, that the debate on this amendment close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that the debate on the present amendment be closed in five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS] will proceed.

Mr. HUMPHREYS of Mississippi. Senator McDuffie, speaking of Oregon, said:

> Why, sir, of what use will this be for agricultural purposes? I would not for that purpose give a pinch of snuff for the whole territory.

[Laughter.]

> Who are we to send there? Do you think your honest farmers in Pennsylvania, New York, or even Ohio or Missouri, will abandon their farms to go upon any such enterprise? God forbid.

[Laughter.]

> What will they return us for this enormous expense, after we have tempted them by this bill to leave their pursuits of honest industry, to go upon this wild and gambling venture, in which their blood is to be staked?

[Laughter.]

Then Senator Dickerson, of New Jersey, said:

> We have not adopted a system of colonization, and it is to be hoped we never shall. Oregon can never be one of the United States. If we extend our laws to it, we must consider it as a colony. * * * Is the Territory of Oregon ever to become a State, a member of the Union? Never! The Union is already too extensive.

[Laughter.]

Later on Daniel Webster said this, speaking of Texas in this instance, and of California and of New Mexico:

> I have never heard of anything, I can not conceive of anything, in itself more absurd and more affrontive to all sober judgment. Mexico and California are not worth one dollar.

[Laughter and applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois rose.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] is recognized.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I can not agree with the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], that the question of Government ownership or Government operation of railroads is in any way involved in the question now before us.

We are dealing with an exceptional case, and we must meet it with an exceptional remedy, and we would not meet the situation fairly if we stopped at the Matanuska coal field. The situation requires that we shall go on to the navigable streams and tap the Tanana Valley and the Yukon.

I happen to have at hand the words of Secretary Fisher when he returned from his trip to Alaska. It was not a haphazard statement. It is a written one. He said:

> What Alaska needs more than all else is a trunk line from the ocean to the great interior valleys of the Yukon and the Tanana, opening the country so that its future development may be really possible.

He went further, and advocated the building of the road by the Government. It is as clear and plain as anything can be that if it is to be built, the Government must build it, and that unless it is built, that great valley will not and can not be developed. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired. All time has expired; and the question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out, on page 10, line 8, the following language:

> With the navigable waters in the interior of Alaska and—

So that there will not be words of limitation upon the President in the event he deems it unwise to go on.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Page 10, lines 8 and 9, strike out the words "with the navigable waters in the interior of Alaska and."

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, much has been said about this bill with reference to giving the President an absolutely free hand. No one trusts the President more than I do. No bill was ever drawn or presented to this House that gave the President such wide latitude. The words undertaken to be stricken out are words of limitation and even words of compulsion that really force the President to do something which may or may not be feasible when he reaches it. All through the bill it is formulated on the theory that the President may quit at any time. I call attention to the fact that if this language is left in the bill the President can not quit at any time. The President has no discretion in the matter, but must build clear up through into the Tanana Valley, irrespective of what the tonnage or other conditions may warrant at the time.

Mr. LENROOT rose.

Mr. HOUSTON. Does the gentleman from Wisconsin desire any time?

Mr. LENROOT. I should like about two minutes.

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in three minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] is most ingenuous indeed in this amendment, but when he says that it will strike out a limitation imposed upon the President and give to him a free hand he certainly does not mean that.

Mr. FERRIS. I do.

Mr. LENROOT. For if the gentleman's amendment be adopted, the President of the United States will have no authority whatever to build a railroad to the interior of Alaska, but we will limit his authority to building railroads to the coal fields.

Mr. FERRIS. I do not agree with the gentleman about that at all.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, on page 10, line 17, I move to strike out the words "standard gauge."

Mr. MANN. Why does not the gentleman also move to strike out those words in line 5.

Mr. FERRIS. In line 5 also. My first amendment is on page 10, line 5, I move to strike out the words "standard gauge."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 10, line 5, strike out the words "standard gauge."

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, this bill authorizes the President not only to build railroads anywhere and everywhere he desires to do so, but it also authorizes him to buy any fragment of railroad that he desires to buy. It also authorizes him to build any main-line railroad, any spurs, any sidetracks, or any other railroad that he may see fit to build under this $35,000,000. I submit that in many instances there may be cases where he could practice great economy by building a short spur or a short track up to a small coal field, and give additional advantages to a community if he could build a narrow-gauge railroad, which would cost only $18,000 or $20,000 a mile, instead of building a standard-gauge railroad at a cost of $48,000, or ever more, per mile.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman's amendment is adopted, it does not preclude the President from building a standard-gauge road.

Mr. FERRIS. Not at all. It simply means that he is not obliged to build them all of standard gauge.

This amendment should be adopted.

Mr. MANN. How long does the gentleman from Tennessee want to debate this amendment?

Mr. HOUSTON. Two minutes will be all I care for. How much time does the gentleman from Illinois want?

Mr. MANN. I can say all I know in two minutes.

Mr. HOUSTON. I ask that debate on this amendment be closed in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] asks unanimous consent that debate on this amendment close in five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I hope this amendment will prevail. The bill confers enormous powers upon the President of the United States, which he will exercise, of course, through competent men employed by him. We give to him the location of the railroad. We give to him complete jurisdiction of everything, except to say to him that he must build a road of a certain width. I can not imagine anything which seems to me more ridiculous than to say to engineers who start out to determine where a road shall be built, "You can have your way about everything except the width of a road in a country where there are practically no railroads to deal with."

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MANN. I have only two minutes.

Mr. HOUSTON. I give the gentleman one of my two minutes. I merely want an expression from the gentleman on this. Does the gentleman understand that if this amendment is adopted the gauge of the road will be left entirely to the discretion of the President to determine?

Mr. MANN. Absolutely; and I have no doubt that he would build a standard-gauge road, unless at some particular place it was practically impossible to build a standard gauge, in which case he might build a narrow gauge. I think the President and his engineers, who are to be given complete authority over everything else, ought to be trusted as to the gauge of the road.

Mr. OGLESBY. I should like to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. OGLESBY. The gentleman has stated that he believes the President will build this road of standard gauge.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. OGLESBY. But that it might be necessary at some place to build a narrow-gauge road.

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. OGLESBY. Does the gentleman realize that that would require a separate equipment, and that the equipment of a narrow-gauge road could not be used on a standard-gauge road?

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is not familiar with narrow-gauge roads, or he would know that there is no difficulty about that. Why, you propose to build this road with Panama Railroad equipment, and that is not standard-gauge equipment at all.

Mr. OGLESBY. I do not think there is any serious disposition to build this with Panama equipment.

Mr. MANN. What have you got it in the bill for?

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Oklahoma.

The amendment was rejected.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I assume that it is not necessary to offer the same amendment below, but I will offer the following amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 13, line 18, after the period——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, we have not read the full section yet.

The CHAIRMAN. Only the first paragraph. The Chair will state to the gentleman from Oklahoma that it is agreed that the bill shall be taken up by paragraphs instead of sections.

Mr. FERRIS. That is perfectly agreeable to me. I thought the first section had been read. I ask to withhold the amendment.

Mr. HELGESEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from North Dakota offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. HELGESEN. Mr. Chairman, I hope I shall be able to vote for this bill. I believe that the Government ought to build this railroad, but I have never believed that there was any excuse for building a railroad in Alaska unless the Government operated its own road. Therefore I hoped the amendment of the gentleman from Oklahoma would prevail, but the committee has seen fit to vote otherwise, and so there is no use of further discussing that feature. I think the amendment striking out the word "lease" is an important amendment. The bill says:

To lease, purchase, condemn, or otherwise acquire any other line or lines of railroad in Alaska which may be necessary to complete the construction of the line or lines of railroad designated or located by him in the first instance, upon such terms as he may deem proper.

Now, as soon as the President goes to Alaska to build a railroad, the Alaskan Syndicate finding it is going to be built will say, "We do not want to compete with the Government in the railroad business. We have harbors, docks, and wharves and a line of railroad, and we are going to turn them over to you, as the bill says, upon such terms as you may deem proper." That seems perfectly fair. The President makes the lease on his own terms. The syndicate accepts the terms for 20 years. And then the President may lease it or not, as the case may be. It will be operated for 20 years. Then what happens? If there are such resources in Alaska as has been stated, after 20 years there is going to be developed an immense business, and at the end of 20 years the syndicate will still own the harbor, the docks, and the wharves, and their roads, and they will have an immense business there developed by the Government.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HELGESEN. Certainly.

Mr. HOUSTON. The gentleman understands that this applies to some other road. For instance, the road built by the President might arrive at some point where it might be profitable to join in with some other line of road.

Mr. HELGESEN. I understand that, but it also embodies the lines owned by the Alaskan syndicate.

Mr. HOUSTON. It authorizes the President to lease any road that he thinks profitable.

Mr. HELGESEN. At the end of 20 years the syndicate is in control of the terminals, the docks, the wharves, and the harbor, which would be of immense value, and whether at that time, if it be taken by condemnation proceedings or otherwise, you would have to pay its value then. It would be a business of immense value, and after the Government had built up that immense business the syndicate would take charge of it or else the Government would have to pay enormous prices. Now, if you would strike out the word "lease," they would buy existing lines, if they buy them at all, at their present value. As the existing lines are practically bankrupt, they can no doubt be purchased now for not to exceed the physical value of the property involved, but if the purchase is delayed for 20 years, we would at least have to pay a price based on the value of the property after being developed by the Government at Government expense. It looks to me absolutely ridiculous after the Government has built up this business that we should place ourselves in a position where we will have to pay for the values we have put into the property at our own expense. If we are going to take it, now is the time to do it.

Mr. HOUSTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HELGESEN. Certainly.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have no objection to the word "lease" alone going out.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I move to amend the bill by striking out all after the word "Congress," page 12, line 2, down to and including the word "proper," in line 7, page 12. I would like to have the language reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 2, strike out all after the word "Congress," down to and including the word "proper," in line 7, which is the following language: "to lease, purchase, condemn, or otherwise acquire any other line or lines of railroad in Alaska which may be necessary to complete the construction of the line or lines of railroad designated or located by him in the first instance, upon such terms as he may deem proper."

Mr. MANN. Now, Mr. Chairman, if we did not have the power to compel through rates and through routes on railroads it would be necessary to have this provision in the bill. All the terms of this bill are expressly under the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission. That commission has the power to require any two railroads in Alaska which meet to carry on through business upon terms to be named by the Interstate Commerce Commission. Why should we buy a railroad to make the end of a line; why should we buy more of a railroad after we build one? We can require the other road, upon terms fixed by the Interstate Commerce Commission, to carry on business with the road that we build; or, if we lease it, with the lessee of the road. Why should we put more money into a road than necessary when nothing good can come out of it? We all know that this road for years will be operated at a loss. Why should we put money into the purchase of a road to operate when we know it will be of no benefit?

Mr. OGLESBY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes; for a question.

Mr. OGLESBY. I want to ask the gentleman, assuming that the other road which you might connect with was not being operated, the Interstate Commerce Commission would have no power to compel it to.

Mr. MANN. If they are not operating the road, and refuse to operate it under the direction of the Interstate Commerce Commission, we can take it away from them. The gentleman might as well assume to me that the moon is made of green cheese, and, therefore, this amendment should not prevail.

Mr. OGLESBY. Does not the gentleman know that already there are one or two roads that are in the line contemplated that are not being operated?

Mr. MANN. I know this, that if there is any business there to run on our roads or their roads, both roads will be operated, or they will lose their rights. We can require them to operate, if we furnish any business to them, under the interstate-commerce law.

Mr. OGLESBY. Could we take their property away from them?

Mr. MANN. We can take their property away from them; certainly.

Mr. OGLESBY. Without authority in this bill?

Mr. MANN. Without authority in this bill.

Mr. OGLESBY. I do not agree with the gentleman.

Mr. MANN. We have power over all those railroads in Alaska. If anybody seeks to build a railroad there and not run it, then he loses his rights.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], but am strongly in favor of the amendment proposed by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. HELGESEN]. In my judgment, the word "lease" should be stricken out and the rest of the sentence left unchanged.

Mr. HOUSTON. Is the gentleman directing a question to me?

Mr. COOPER. No; I have taken the floor in my own right. I say that I am opposed to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois, but strongly in favor of the amendment of the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. HELGESEN].

Mr. OGLESBY. The chairman of the committee intended to say to the gentleman that the committee had no objection to striking out the word "lease."

Mr. MANN. The Guggenheims would rather have you buy it than lease it.

Mr. COOPER. I think that the gentleman from Illinois is entirely mistaken in his suggestion. If the word "lease" be stricken out, the President will be authorized to "purchase, condemn, or otherwise acquire" any other line or lines of railroad in Alaska "which may be necessary to complete the construction of the line or lines of railroad designated by him in the first instance." It is my opinion that the reasons urged by the gentleman from North Dakota in support of his amendment are unanswerable.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I think the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] ought not to be adopted. I think it better to leave this discretion with the President to purchase, condemn, or otherwise acquire any other line or lines of railroads to make this connection. I can see no reason why, if they should come up to a given point and connect with another road, they should not have the right, if it was thought advisable or if he deemed it proper to purchase that road to make it one connecting line rather than to have part of a line owned by the Government and part owned by a private corporation. If an advantageous deal could be made, it would be better for the Government to own it all.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HOUSTON. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. A few moments ago we adopted the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to put the power in the prior clause in the discretion of the President by inserting the words "in his discretion." As I follow the argument of the gentleman he believes that this power should also be in his discretion. Should we not have the words "in his discretion" precede the word "to" in line 2, because in fact this paragraph dates back to the beginning, which directs the President to lease, purchase, condemn, or otherwise acquire. I think the same argument applies and that the words "in his discretion" should precede this clause as in the prior one.

Mr. HOUSTON. I would have no objection to that amendment, though I do not think it is necessary.

Mr. STAFFORD. If it were necessary in the prior clause, it is necessary here.

Mr. HOUSTON. The end of this sentence is "under such terms as he deems proper."

Mr. STAFFORD. But there is positive direction here as the phraseology now stands for him to lease, purchase, condemn, or otherwise acquire. When this question was being debated in general debate, it was stated by gentlemen connected with the committee that the President was not directed in this bill to purchase these lines. I think it should be left to his discretion to purchase these existing lines.

Mr. HOUSTON. I have no objection to that.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee has the floor.

Mr. HOUSTON. I yield to the gentleman from Virginia.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that if he will inspect that clause carefully, he will see that it was simply intended to authorize the President to purchase, condemn, or otherwise acquire such railroad or railroads as might be found necessary to complete a connecting line. The necessity of purchase, of course, is in the discretion of the President.

Mr. STAFFORD. But previous language directs him to lease, purchase, or condemn. There is a positive direction on the part of Congress. It is the intention of Congress to leave it discretionary with the President whether he should purchase these existing lines or not. To insert the words "in his discretion" will meet that difficulty.

Mr. WATSON. The necessity of the purchase is bound to be within the discretion of the President.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Tennessee has expired.

Mr. SCOTT rose.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer that amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa is recognized.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I wish to speak to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, is not the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota now pending?

The CHAIRMAN. That is true. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SCOTT] rose and obtained recognition.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman pardon me until I can make a request for unanimous consent that debate on this amendment close in 10 minutes?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee asks unanimous consent that debate on this amendment close in 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SCOTT. Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota should prevail, and the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] should not prevail; that they each essentially involve one proposition, one the converse of the other. The amendment of the gentleman from North Dakota, if it prevails, will take from the President the discretion and power to lease from the owners the existing roads, and the adoption of the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois will not only relieve the President of that power but takes away the power of the President to acquire any of the existing roads.

I have prepared an amendment which I expect to offer later which contains a clause identical with the amendment of the gentleman from Illinois, but it was in connection with another provision, which is in the nature of a substitute and identical with an amendment that was adopted in the Senate and is known as the Bristow amendment, making it mandatory upon the part of the President if any line located and designated by him, taken together with an existing line, shall constitute a continuous through line from tidewater to the inland waters before beginning construction to acquire the existing line. In other words, it goes directly to the argument which I made upon the floor of the House three weeks ago, namely, that if the Government goes into the railroad business in Alaska it should acquire a continuous line from tidewater to the interior and not a portion of a line commencing at Chitina or at some other point, leaving the present trunk lines, harbors, terminals, and so forth, in the possession of the Alaska Syndicate. The amendment of the gentleman from Illinois takes even the poor privilege that now exists in the bill on the part of the President away from him. The President under the existing conditions of the bill may, in his discretion, acquire an existing line if he decides to extend his line from a point at an inland terminal to one or the other of these lines, but he would not have that discretion if the Mann amendment should carry. Now, the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota merely operates to this extent: It takes away from the President the discretion and power to lease the Guggenheim roads for the Government, or the same with respect to the Alaska & Northern if that route should be adopted. Now, I am fully in accord with the gentleman from North Dakota, and I believe that if the Government is to own the railroads in Alaska we should not own a road beginning nowhere and ending nowhere, but we should own a road down to the harbor; that we should control the harbor and terminals as well. That question was argued out in the Senate after a full discussion, and the Bristow amendment was adopted——

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. SCOTT. May I ask for one minute additional?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to continue for one minute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. SCOTT. Which is in the following language:

If any railroad now in existence shall, with any line which may be designated and located hereunder, constitute a continuous main line of railroad from the interior to tidewater, such existing railroad, with its appurtenances, shall be acquired by purchase or condemnation as hereinafter provided before construction is entered upon, or the line to be constructed hereunder shall be so relocated as that construction shall begin at tidewater and be carried forward so that, in any case, the United States will at all times be the owner of a continuous line or lines from tidewater.

That ought to be the case. [Applause.]

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I am entirely in sympathy with the views just expressed by the gentleman from Iowa, and I have myself prepared such an amendment as he expects later on to offer. I am opposed to the amendment proposed by the gentleman from Illinois, and I am very much surprised at the position that he has taken which, if I understand it, is that a railroad because of the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission to enforce through rates or joint rates is in as good a position if it did not own the terminals as if it did. Why, Mr. Chairman, there is not a railroad management in the United States that would think for a moment that it was in as good a position not owning the terminals as if it did.

We know there are a great many ways in which a railroad may discriminate, notwithstanding the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission, if it owns wharves and owns the terminal facilities. And for that reason it seems so clear to me that this amendment should not be adopted that I do not think there can be any question concerning the attitude of the committee.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is, first, on the adoption of the amendment offered by the gentleman from North Dakota [Mr. HELGESEN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is now on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to offer an amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. TOWNER. I desire to ask the attention of the committee to this amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend by striking out, on page 10, line 3, all after the semicolon following the word "him" in said line, down to and including the word "locate," in line 20, on said page, and to insert in lieu thereof the following:

"To locate and designate a route for a main line of railroad in the Territory of Alaska, from Resurrection Bay on the southern coast, or from Portage Bay (sometimes designated as Passage Canal), opening into Prince Williams Sound, or using both such points for its southern termini, thence running in a northerly direction into and through the valley of the Susitna, thence into and through the valley of the Chulitna, thence through Broad Pass, thence following generally the course of the Nenana River into the valley of the Tanana to the city of Fairbanks as the northern terminus of said line; also to locate and designate a route for a branch line of said railroad from the main line thereof to the Matanuska coal fields; also, if necessary, to locate and designate a route for a branch line of said railroad from the main line thereof to the Nenana coal fields; also to construct and build a standard-gauge railroad, with the necessary branch lines, feeders, sidings, switches, and spurs, along such route as he may so designate and locate, said main line and the branches thereof to provide transportation for coal for the use of the Army and Navy of the United States, for the Postal Service, and for other governmental uses, and for other National, State, Territorial, or other public uses, and for the use of the people for general transportation purposes."

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment close in 10 minutes.

Mr. TOWNER. I want to use that time myself.

Mr. HOUSTON. Well, I will make it 15 minutes.

Mr. MANN. And let the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] have 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. HOUSTON] asks unanimous consent that debate on this amendment be closed in 15 minutes, 10 minutes of the time to be used by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire of the chairman how late he expects to run this afternoon?

Mr. MANN. I hope the chairman will run until we get through with this paragraph.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I think that will be impossible. We have other amendments, and one which I propose to offer will provoke 40 minutes if not an hour's discussion.

Reserving the right to object, I would like to suggest to the chairman that when the debate is finished on this amendment the committee rise.

Mr. HOUSTON. I do not think I could agree to that now, but after this amendment is disposed of I will confer with the gentleman and see if we can reach an arrangement about that.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Tennessee that debate on this amendment be closed in 15 minutes?

There was no objection.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to speak as a friend of the bill. I desire to see some legislation pass this House in reference to this matter. The object of this amendment, as I believe, will materially assist not only in the passage of the bill here, but in the other Chamber. I desire to call the attention of the members of the committee especially to this fact, that after a long debate in the Senate and after a careful examination of this question the Senate determined that they would not allow these contemplated fractions of a road to be built. They determined that they would at least require that if any railroads were built in Alaska they should constitute an entire system from tidewater to the interior. And yet this bill as it now stands, as reported from the committee, is practically the same proposition and is substantially the report of the Alaskan commission. It contemplates the building of 733 miles of railroads at a total cost of $35,611,000. One of these lines consists of a line from Chitina to Fairbanks of 313 miles. The other is a branch, leaving the main line of what has been called here the "Guggenheim line," 38 miles north of Cordova and reaching to the Bering coal fields. It will be seen by the gentlemen of the committee that this consists of two parts of lines, neither of which can be completed without some arrangement being made with what is known as the Guggenheim line. The northern end is 132 miles north of Cordova, on the seacoast, at the little mountain village of Chitina, and thence extends on to Fairbanks.

The other line leaves the Guggenheim line 38 miles north of Cordova and extends to the Bering coal fields. So it is impossible to build these two fractions of line and make them effective unless we either lease or purchase or condemn or enter into partnership with the Guggenheim line, and the same is true with regard to the other proposition. It consists of three sections. The first extends from Kern Creek to the Susitna Valley, a distance of 115 miles. The second consists of a 38-mile extension to the Matanuska coal fields, and the other consists of a line from the Susitna Valley to the Kuskokwim, a distance of 229 miles, at a cost of $12,760,500.

There are three separate lines, none of which can be made effective or useful to the people because all of those lines end 72 miles from the seacoast. The proposition is that in some way, after those lines are built, we shall secure the right to use the 72 miles of road that are now built by the Alaskan Northern Railroad. We must either lease that line or purchase it or make some kind of an arrangement or enter into some kind of a partnership with the Alaskan Northern Railroad in order to make this effective.

I submit to the gentlemen of the committee that that is not contemplated by the bill. None of those lines reach from the seacoast to the interior without the use of other lines, and there is no provision made here, so far as the cost is concerned, to acquire them. To acquire the one line that is now owned by the Guggenheims, with their terminal facilities, from Cordova up to Tanana, will cost about $20,000,000, according to their estimates. To acquire the other line will cost between $6,000,000 and $7,000,000 if it is purchased, according to their estimates. So that we are left with all of these propositions high and dry—hung up, as it were—and something must be done in order to make them effective. That condition was seen by the Senate, and they made this amendment which has been read to you by my colleague from Iowa [Mr. SCOTT], and they put into the bill a provision to the effect that no line should be built unless it was a complete line. I embodied that proposition in this amendment, that we shall build one complete line and only one.

The best one that can possibly be built will have for its southern terminus either Resurrection Bay or this newly discovered bay, Portage Bay, which opens into Prince William Sound. Either one of them offers a good opportunity for a southern terminus.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit an interruption?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes.

Mr. HAMILTON of Michigan. What survey is the gentleman following?

Mr. TOWNER. The Government surveys, all of them; and this last survey that I have is made by the Geological Department as of this year. The report upon it is of date January 14 of this year, as I remember it.

If this amendment is adopted we will provide a line that will carry out every proposition that gentlemen have advocated on the floor of this House—a line that will reach the best harbors on the coast; a line that will reach the Matanuska coal fields; a line that will go through the Nenana coal fields; a line that will open up the best land in Alaska, the Susitna Valley and the Tanana Valley, and the waters of the Yukon and the Tanana. All of those objects can be accomplished by the building of this one line, and the cost will be only $20,000,000 instead of $35,000,000 or $40,000,000.

Why should we build these various branches of roads unless we expect to enter upon the building of a large general system? Certainly that is not the desire of Members of this House. They desire, they all say, to do the things that this bill provides, and only those things, and you can accomplish them by building this one proposition that every one favors.

Gentlemen will say, of course, "We leave that to the discretion of the President." But ought we to leave this to the discretion of the President? He will think, if this bill as it is is passed, based upon the recommendation of the Alaska Commission, that what the House really desired was to do this thing; and if we know now what we want, why do not we do what we ought to do? Why not act here and now, without leaving it to the discretion of the President? We did not leave to the discretion of the President the selection of a route for the Panama Canal. We determined it here in the House. When we make other appropriations we do not leave it to be determined at the discretion of the President what we shall do, except in a most general way. Here we are called upon to vote an enormous amount of money, and it will be for you gentlemen who really favor this bill, as I do, if it can be limited, to determine whether it shall be subject to criticism or not.

As was well said by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] in his remarks a short time ago, if you do not want to involve the President in action which may subject him to criticism, if you say now that you will build these parts of roads which can not be used and operated unless you make some kind of terms and conditions with the Guggenheims and the Alaskan Syndicate, you do that which will cast upon the President the duty of doing the thing that will almost certainly bring reproach upon him.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Iowa has expired. The gentleman from Virginia [Mr. WATSON] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, many of the members of this committee have perhaps reached the conclusion that in the consummation of the plans provided for in the bill there will be a single line of railway constructed from the seaboard to navigable waters of the interior of Alaska. But I have not yet had the good fortune to be associated with any Member of this body who has been able to settle satisfactorily for himself the exact route upon which that line should be projected or the termini of that route.

The situation in Alaska is largely one of engineering, and I take it that scarcely any Member of this body has sufficient information respecting the topography and the geography of the country to guide him safely to a conclusion upon this very important question.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman allow an interruption?

Mr. WATSON. Yes.

Mr. TOWNER. If we can not do it with all of these reports before us and the testimony taken by these two committees, can we expect the President to do it?

Mr. WATSON. Mr. Chairman, in reply to the gentleman's question, I would say that it would surprise me very much if in the execution of this authority the President should undertake to construct a railway into the interior of Alaska without a very much more elaborate and extensive report upon the subject than any available record in this case furnishes. I take it that the first step he would take in this matter would be to select men with scientific experience to make a thorough investigation of the situation, and to locate a route which would be not only practicable from an engineering standpoint, but which in his judgment also would fairly develop the resources of the country in such a way as would be of most benefit to the population of the Territory present and future.

If I understand the amendment of the gentleman, it is to fix one terminus of this railway, and from that fixed point proceed into the interior. I humbly submit, gentlemen, that we ought not to undertake to limit the discretion of the President in this manner. We have no sufficient information at present by which to determine what port on the seaboard ought to be the starting point on the south; and I would have great hesitancy in selecting Portage Bay or Resurrection Bay as the only terminus on the southern seaboard.

In addition to that I have not discovered that the action of the other branch of Congress indicates that it has taken the view of this matter which the gentleman has expressed. The Senate bill, as I read it, provides for "the construction of such main line or lines of railroad from a point or points on the seaboard to the navigable waters of the interior as shall," and so forth.

There has been no adjudication by the Senate of this proposition advanced by the gentleman. The bill as passed by that body, like the one under consideration, provides for the construction of one or more than one road, as the exigencies of the case may require.

Mr. TOWNER. If the gentleman will pardon me, I will make the suggestion that it can not be done if they build two lines.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman's time has expired. All time has expired. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

The amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, I was hoping that when we got through with this amendment the chairman would move that the committee rise. We began the consideration of this bill at 10 minutes after 12, and it is now 20 minutes before 6. I myself feel like quitting before we finish this paragraph, because we can not finish it unless we run beyond 6 o'clock.

Mr. LENROOT and Mr. SCOTT rose.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think we might run 20 minutes longer—until 6 o'clock.

Mr. STAFFORD. There is not a very large membership present here at this time.

Mr. BUCHANAN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I think we ought to try to push this bill to a conclusion. It has occupied the time of the House during four or five Calendar Wednesdays now, and there is other legislation on the calendar.

Mr. STAFFORD. I think we can undoubtedly finish it next Wednesday.

Mr. DAVENPORT. If gentlemen desire to stay here until a quorum appears, all right. I make the point that there is no quorum present.

Mr. HOUSTON. I hope the gentleman will not make that point.

Mr. DAVENPORT. If the chairman of the committee desires to move that the committee rise, I withdraw the point.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment, but I yield to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SCOTT], who wishes to offer a similar amendment.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD at this point in the proceedings a bill introduced in the Thirty-first Congress by one of the greatest Democrats and greatest statesmen who ever lived in this country, Thomas Hart Benton, a bill providing for the building and equipping of a railroad from St. Louis to San Francisco, to be owned by the Government.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting the bill which he has indicated. Is there objection?

Mr. FERRIS. Reserving the right to object, what action was ever taken on that bill?

Mr. BOOHER. I will tell the gentleman, when we get around to talk about it.

Mr. FERRIS. Was the bill ever acted upon.

Mr. BOOHER. No, sir; it never was acted on. It was debated.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. FINLEY. I object.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, it seems that we have gone as far as we can this evening, and if the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SCOTT] will yield to me, I will make a motion that the committee rise.

Mr. SCOTT. I should like to offer my amendment and have it pending.

Mr. BRYAN. I ask that it be considered pending without being reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as pending, but not reported.

Mr. HOUSTON. I think the amendment had better be read.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. SCOTT].

Page 12, after line 15, insert:

"Provided, That if any railroad now in existence shall, with any line which may be designated and located hereunder, constitute a continuous main line of railroad from the interior to tidewater, such existing railroad, with its appurtenances, shall be acquired by purchase or condemnation as hereinafter provided, before construction is entered upon or the line to be constructed hereunder shall be so relocated, as that construction shall begin at tidewater and be carried forward so that in any case the United States will at all times be the owner of a continuous line or lines from tidewater."

Mr. TAVENNER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. On what topic?

Mr. TAVENNER. On the pending Alaska railroad bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois having taken the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. HARRISON, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 48) to authorize the President of the United States to locate, construct, and operate railroads in the Territory of Alaska, and for other purposes, and had come to no resolution thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. J. I. NOLAN, for 10 days, on account of important business.

To Mr. BURKE of Wisconsin, for 4 days, on account of sickness.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees as indicated below:

S. 797. An act to establish auxiliary fish-cultural stations in the State of Minnesota; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

S. 2674. An act to define certain crimes and to provide punishment therefor; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

S. 2830. An act making appropriation for the correction of the acoustics of the United States Naval Academy chapel and auditorium; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

S. 3210. An act to establish a fish-cultural station at some point in the State of Louisiana; to the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that this day they had presented to the President of the United States for his approval the following bill:

H. R. 8667. An act to promote the efficiency of the Naval Militia, and for other purposes.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. HOUSTON. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Thursday, February 12, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Acting Secretary of the Navy submitting a supplemental estimate of appropriation to continue the work of collecting or copying and classifying the naval records of the Revolutionary War (H. Doc. No. 730) was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the several calendars therein named, as follows:

Mr. UNDERHILL, from the Committee on Industrial Arts and Expositions, to which was referred the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 204) authorizing the Secretary of Agriculture to make exhibits at forest products expositions to be held in Chicago, Ill., April 30 to May 9, inclusive, and in New York May 21 to May 30, inclusive, 1914, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 248), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. LEVER, from the Committee on Agriculture, to which was referred the bill (S. 3439) appropriating funds for the purpose of the investigation, treatment, and eradication of hog cholera, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 246), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HAYDEN, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11102) providing that the marriage of a homestead entryman to a homestead entrywoman shall not impair the right of either to a patent, after compliance with the law a year, to apply to existing entries, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 247), which said bill and report were referred to the House Calendar.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. METZ, from the Committee on Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 963) for the relief of Mrs. Andrew Riganopolous, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 245), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, committees were discharged from the consideration of the following bills, which were referred as follows:

A bill (H. R. 1180) granting an increase of pension to Ida M. Fiala; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 12616) granting an increase of pension to Andrew Pletz; Committee on Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

A bill (H. R. 10772) granting an increase of pension to Susan Stewart; Committee on Invalid Pensions discharged, and referred to the Committee on Pensions.

SENATE.

THURSDAY, February 12, 1914.

Rev. John McNeill, pastor of Cooke Memorial Presbyterian Church, of Toronto, Canada, offered the following prayer:

O God our Father, Thou art the fount of all grace and strength and wisdom. We look to Thee. Look upon us, and in that look we are lightened and our faces shall not be ashamed. Grant Thy blessing to Thy servants. Uphold them this day in all they may do and say. May we seek Thy glory, and through our labors here may this day write its own chapter in the great history of Thy redeeming purposes in this land. Through Jesus Christ our Lord. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

SUPPLY OF OIL FOR NAVAL USES.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Secretary of the Interior, stating, in response to a resolution of the 13th ultimo, that the Interior Department has had some correspondence with the Secretary of the Navy with respect to the acquiring by the Navy Department of Indian oil lands in the State of Oklahoma and giving the opinion that such an investigation as is proposed in the resolution would be of great benefit in arriving at a satisfactory conclusion and in working out a definite plan, and suggesting that an appropriation of at least $5,000 be provided for the purpose; which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

A message from the House of Representatives, by D. K. Hempstead, its enrolling clerk, announced that the Speaker of the House had signed the enrolled bill (H. IMPORTATION OF EGGS FROM CHINA.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, a good deal has been said in the newspapers of late about the large importation of eggs into this country from China. It is a matter of public interest and is likely to affect very seriously some of the industries in my own State.

I have here a short letter from the Chamber of Commerce of Petaluma, Cal., bearing upon the question that I would like to have printed in the RECORD and appropriately referred.

There being no objection, the letter was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

CHAMBER OF COMMERCE,
Petaluma, Cal., February 4, 1914.

Senator JOHN D. WORKS,
The Kenesaw, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: There have arrived recently in the markets of the coast cities large shipments of eggs imported from China. These eggs cost the importers, we are informed, about 15 cents per dozen at this season of the year, enabling the importer to market them freely and at a handsome profit. They have been selling in San Francisco, Portland, Los Angeles, and other coast cities at a few cents under the price of American eggs and are used largely by restaurants and bakeries.

The continued importation of Chinese eggs at the low cost quoted will, we are convinced, seriously affect, if not entirely destroy the very great poultry industry of this section of California. Poultrymen in the Petaluma district alone produce annually upward of 12,000,000 dozen eggs, having a market value of $3,000,000.

Our poultrymen have established the fact that the average cost of producing 1 dozen of the highest quality, large white eggs is 18 cents. To this cost must be added profit for the poultrymen as well as for the retailer. Thus it will be seen that whenever the producer has to sell his eggs under 20 cents he is losing money. He therefore can not compete with the Chinese eggs, and unless some means is found of preventing their importation, the California poultrymen must face bankruptcy.

Our information is that the Chinese eggs are produced under conditions that render them unfit for human consumption. The object of this letter is to invite your cooperation in an investigation of this allegation, the purpose being, if the Chinese eggs are found to be unfit for use by the white race, to invoke the pure-food laws and have their importation prohibited.

This is a matter that affects the people of this community vitally, and your active cooperation in the movement here outlined will be fully appreciated.

Very truly, yours, J. E. OLMSTED.
President Petaluma Chamber of Commerce.

LANDS IN MISSISSIPPI.

Mr. SMOOT, from the Committee on Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (S. 785) to relinquish, release, and quitclaim all right, title, and interest of the United States of America in and to certain lands in the State of Mississippi, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 249) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. WARREN:

A bill (S. 4455) granting an increase of pension to Emma Mallory (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CLAPP:

A bill (S. 4456) for the relief of R. B. Whitacre & Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. WILLIAMS:

A bill (S. 4457) granting a pension to Eva A. Trager (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 4458) for the relief of the legal representatives of George J. Campbell; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. SMITH of Michigan:

A bill (S. 4459) to amend chapter 360S of volume 34 of the United States Statutes at Large; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. SHIVELY:

A bill (S. 4460) granting an increase of pension to Richard Riggs (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. BRISTOW:

A bill (S. 4461) to correct the military record of Isaac Cogswell; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 4462) granting an increase of pension to Morton B. Fitts;

A bill (S. 4463) granting a pension to Julia J. Bishoff; and

A bill (S. 4464) granting an increase of pension to Charles F. Reed; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. SWANSON:

A bill (S. 4465) for the relief of Joshua C. Mastin;

A bill (S. 4466) for the relief of the heirs of William E. Mastin;

A bill (S. 4467) for the relief of Thomas S. Marden;

A bill (S. 4468) for the relief of Dennis McCormick, executor of the estate of John Morgan, deceased;

A bill (S. 4469) for the relief of Howard Clements; and

A bill (S. 4470) for the adjustment of damages and legislative enactment, repudiating the treatment of certain Confederate officers, to which they were subjected by the military authorities of the United States Government while being held as prisoners of war during the late Civil War between the States, 1864–65; to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 4471) to give effect to the provisions of a treaty between the United States and Great Britain concerning the fisheries in waters contiguous to the United States and the Dominion of Canada, signed at Washington on April 1, 1908, and ratified by the United States Senate April 13, 1908; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

By Mr. NEWLANDS:

A bill (S. 4472) to provide for the erection of a statue at the Panama Canal to be symbolic of universal peace, and to appropriate money therefor; to the Committee on the Library.

A bill (S. 4473) to provide for the purchase of land and the establishment of homes for the Indians of the Washoe Tribe, and making appropriation therefor; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

By Mr. BRADLEY:

A bill (S. 4474) to correct the military record of Alfred Dunn (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Military Affairs.

A bill (S. 4475) granting an increase of pension to Mary F. Helmer (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. CHAMBERLAIN:

A bill (S. 4476) granting a pension to Thomas Jordan; to the Committee on Pensions.

AMENDMENT TO INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. MYERS submitted an amendment proposing to increase the appropriation for support and civilization of the Indians at the Fort Belknap Agency, Mont., from $20,000 to $25,000, etc., intended to be proposed by him to the Indian appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs and ordered to be printed.

BOARD OF RIVER REGULATION.

Mr. NEWLANDS. I ask for the adoption of a resolution to have printed as a Senate document, for the use of the Senate document room, 10,000 copies of the substitute for Senate bill 2739, for which there is a great demand. The printing will cost $49.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will have the resolution referred to the Committee on Printing, the committee will report it back as quickly as possible.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Very well; I make that request.

The resolution (S. Res. 271) was read and referred to the Committee on Printing, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed, for the use of the Senate document room, 10,000 copies of the substitute for Senate bill 2739, the Newlands-Broussard river-regulation bill, and that title be printed at the top of said bills.

THE CALENDAR.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed, and the calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed with the consideration of Order of Business 120, the bill (S. 156) for the relief of R. W. Branson, that being the number on the calendar that we reached at the close of its consideration under Rule VIII yesterday. In this way it will not be necessary to go over the bills that were objected to on yesterday, but it will allow us to finish the calendar to-day.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there any objection to the request of the Senator from Utah?

Mr. MYERS. I will not object to that particular measure being called up by the Senator from Utah, if he is interested in it, but there were some other matters passed over——

Mr. SMOOT. I think the Senator from Montana will agree that we ought at least to go through with the calendar, and then we can return to the bills he desires to have considered. He will remember that the calendar has been up within the last week three times, and we have reached about Order of Business No. 120 each time.

Mr. MYERS. I will state the circumstances, Mr. President. Yesterday, at just about 2 minutes of 2, we reached Order of Business No. 85, the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 41) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell or lease certain public lands to the Republic Coal Co., a corporation. As it evidently could not be disposed of in that short length of time, and would require more argument, it was passed over because the time was not sufficient. I would request that we call at least Order of Business No. 85, and then begin at Order of Business No. 120, for Order of Business No. 85 has been passed over several times because there was not time left in the morning hour to consider it.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask the Senator if he will not allow us to begin at least with Order of Business No. 120. I do not believe it will take very long to go through the calendar from that point, and he can then ask that the Senate take up Order of Business No. 85. I think that is the sensible and the just way of proceeding this morning.

Mr. FLETCHER. What was the request of the Senator from Utah?

Mr. SMOOT. That we begin the consideration of the calendar, under Rule VIII, with Order of Business No. 120, the bill which was reached yesterday when 2 o'clock arrived. I will say to the Senator that during the three days we have been on the calendar under Rule VIII we have reached about Order of Business No. 120 and then the hour of 2 o'clock arrived, and all beyond that point on the calendar has never been considered at all.

Mr. KENYON rose.

Mr. CLAPP. I desire to state to the Senator from Montana that if we now take up Order of Business No. 85, it will probably lead to debate and some one will insist that it go over. If we can first go through with the calendar and dispose of cases that will not lead to debate, there will be no difficulty, all unobjected cases will be considered in that way, and if we then take up Order of Business No. 85 no one would object on the ground that it would lead to debate.

Mr. MYERS. I am willing to consider the views of others. I will ask the Senator from Iowa what he rose to say.

Mr. KENYON. I was trying to get an opportunity simply to say that there would be debate on Order of Business No. 85, and also there will be a larger attendance of the Senate. There will have to be a quorum here, and the bill will take some time.

Mr. MYERS. Order of Business No. 85 has gone over for some time. I hope that it will be reached soon.

Mr. KENYON. I wish to say to the Senator from Montana that as far as I am concerned the consideration of it will not be delayed at all, but if it comes up now it will certainly be debated.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask unanimous consent to begin with Order of Business No. 120, which is Senate bill 156.

The VICE PRESIDENT. There being no objection, the calendar will be proceeded with at that point.

R. W. BRANSON.

The bill (S. 156) for the relief of R. W. Branson was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments, on page 1, line 12, to strike out "$250" and insert "$230," and on page 2, line 1, to strike out "$250" and insert "$230," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and directed to pay, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to R. W. Branson, of Blackland, Okla., formerly postmaster at Cherokee, State of Kansas, to reimburse said R. W. Branson for damages suffered by him on account of the destruction caused by the blowing open of the safe in which were deposited the postal funds, stamps, etc., of the post office at Cherokee, State of Kansas, it appearing that said loss was without fault or negligence on the part of the said postmaster, the sum of $230; and the sum of $230 is hereby appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to pay said claim.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DR. THOMAS B. M'CLINTIC, DECEASED.

The bill (S. 661) for the relief of the legal representatives of Thomas B. McClintic, deceased, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The preamble recites that Thomas B. McClintic, late passed assistant surgeon and a commissioned officer in the United States Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service, contracted the Rocky Mountain spotted fever while performing his duty as assistant surgeon in the special work of investigating the causes of Rocky Mountain spotted fever in the State of Montana, and in which special work he had been exclusively engaged for the best part of two years last past, and in which he was engaged when he contracted the disease of Rocky Mountain spotted fever, of which he died in Georgetown University Hospital, in the city of Washington, on the 13th day of August, 1912.

The bill proposes to pay to the legal representatives of Thomas B. McClintic, deceased, $5,760, being the amount of salary and allowances for two years.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator who reported the bill if the Committee on Claims has any report from the department in relation to this particular case?

Mr. MYERS. Yes. I am not upon the Committee on Claims, but the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] reported the bill from that committee and he can doubtless speak of the departmental report.

Mr. BRYAN. The bill was referred to the department and the department reported the facts stated in the report which accompanies the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Can the Senator state how the sum appropriated, namely, $5,760, was arrived at?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes; it is equal to the salary and allowances which Dr. McClintic would have received for two years. It is two years' salary and allowances.

Mr. SMOOT. That is, the salary and the expense of his illness?

Mr. BRYAN. No; the allowances that went with the salary. He was brought from Montana to Washington. I am of the opinion that the department paid for the hospital expenses here. He was brought back by the Government after having been stricken in Montana.

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to the bill.

Mr. BRYAN. I was going to make a suggestion to the Senator from Montana, and I should like to call the attention of the Senator from Utah to it. It is on page 2, line 2, to strike out the words "legal representatives" and insert "widow," so as to read "to the widow of Thomas B. McClintic, deceased."

Mr. MYERS. I will offer that amendment. I move, in line 2, on page 2, of the bill, to strike out the words "legal representatives" and insert in lieu thereof the word "widow." I believe that is better, as suggested by the Senator from Florida, because the circumstances of this case are very lamentable and deplorable. The doctor was a comparatively young man, and he left a young widow with only one child; I believe an infant in arms.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator know the given name of the widow?

Mr. MYERS. I do not know her given name; but there can be no mistake, as certainly she is the only widow. I offer that amendment.

Mr. BRYAN. That will identify her, undoubtedly.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, lines 2 and 3, strike out the words "legal representatives" and insert in lieu thereof the word "widow."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I believe after the bill is passed the preamble ought to be stricken out.

Mr. WALSH. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Utah why he desires to have the preamble stricken out?

Mr. SMOOT. Because I do not believe any bill is passed in the Senate of the United States with a preamble.

Mr. MYERS. It is put in merely by way of explanation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Chair is informed that preambles to Senate bills have been passed for the information of the House, and they have been stricken out in the House.

Mr. SMOOT. That may be the case, but I can not recall such a case in my time. I know that in my early experience in this body I brought in bills with preambles attached to them and invariably they were taken out of the bills before they passed the Senate.

Mr. MYERS. If there is no strict requirement about the procedure, I believe it would be better to pass the bill with the preamble and let the preamble go to the House so as to be explanatory to the House, and let it be stricken out by the House.

Mr. SMOOT. When the bill has passed I shall move that the preamble be stricken out.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill for the relief of the widow of Thomas B. McClintic, deceased."

Mr. SMOOT. I move to strike out the preamble.

Mr. MYERS. I would ask the Senator from Utah what is his reason for making that motion? Is any good to be accomplished by it?

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah will pardon me, I think that it is proper to have the preamble stricken out. After that motion is carried, if it shall be carried, then I shall ask that the bill be printed in the RECORD, so that Members of the other House by reading the RECORD may ascertain all of the stages in the consideration of the bill.

Mr. MYERS. Will the Senator ask that the bill be printed in the RECORD with the preamble?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I make this request because of the fact that the other House would not pass this bill unless there was a report from the department giving the absolute facts in the case. Therefore there is no reason why there should be a preamble in the bill as it passes the Senate. That is why I ask that the preamble be stricken from the bill.

Mr. MYERS. The preamble, however, was in the bill when the bill was referred by the Senate to the department, and it seems to me that it would be better for the House to have the information contained in the preamble.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is, Shall the preamble be stricken out?

The preamble was rejected.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I ask that the bill, including the preamble, may be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The bill, together with the preamble, is as follows:

Whereas Thomas B. McClintic, late passed assistant surgeon and a commissioned officer in the United States Public Health and Marine-Hospital Service, contracted the Rocky Mountain spotted fever while performing his duty as assistant surgeon in the special work of investigating the causes of Rocky Mountain spotted fever in the State of Montana, and in which special work he had been exclusively engaged for the best part of two years last past, and in which he was engaged when he contracted the disease of Rocky Mountain spotted fever, of which he died in Georgetown University Hospital in the city of Washington on the 13th day of August, 1912: Therefore

Be it enacted etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the widow of Thomas B. McClintic, deceased, the sum of $5,760, being the amount of salary and allowances for two years.

TELEGRAMS SENT BY SENATORS ON PUBLIC BUSINESS.

Mr. WILLIAMS. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. President. Was Calendar No. 101, being Senate resolution 156, limiting expenditures for telegrams sent or received by Senators, called this morning?

The VICE PRESIDENT. It was not called this morning, for the reason that, by unanimous consent, the Senate began the consideration of the calendar with Order of Business No. 120.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Of course, that resolution could not be interfered with. It was under consideration and under discussion the last time we were sounding the calendar, and was the unfinished business.

Mr. SMOOT. Not the last time we considered the calendar. It was under consideration last Tuesday; but yesterday we considered the calendar, and the resolution was passed over, I will say to the Senator from Mississippi.

ELLA O. RICHARDSON.

The bill (S. 388) for the relief of Ella O. Richardson was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Interior to issue patent to Ella O. Richardson for the east half of the southwest quarter of section 36, township 19 north, range 10 east, of the Louisiana meridian, in the State of Louisiana, containing 68.00 acres, upon payment to the United States of the sum of $1.25 per acre, the purchase to be made within one year from the date of the approval of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

AGRICULTURAL ENTRIES ON COAL LANDS IN ALASKA.

The bill (S. 2511) to provide for agricultural entries on coal lands in Alaska was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments. The first amendment was to strike out section 1, as follows:

That from and after the passage of this act unreserved public lands of the United States in Alaska which have been withdrawn or classified as coal lands, or are valuable for coal, shall be subject to appropriate entry under the homestead laws by actual settlers only, and all applications to make entry under the homestead laws upon such lands shall state that the same are made in accordance with and subject to the provisions and reservations of this act.

And in lieu thereof to insert:

That from and after the passage of this act homestead claims may be initiated by actual settlers for public lands of the United States in Alaska known to contain workable coal deposits, or that may be valuable for the coal contained therein, and which are not otherwise reserved or withdrawn, whenever such claim shall be initiated with a view of obtaining or passing title with a reservation to the United States of the coal in such lands, and of the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same; and any settler who has initiated a homestead claim in good faith on lands containing workable deposits of coal may perfect the same under the provisions of the laws under which the claim was initiated, but shall receive the limited patent provided for in this act: Provided, however, That should it be discovered at any time prior to the issuance of a final certificate on any claim initiated for unreserved lands in Alaska that the lands are coal in character, the patent issued on such entry shall contain the reservation required by this act.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I am very much interested in this kind of legislation; but I have not had time to examine the bill, and so I ask that it go over.

Mr. SMOOT. I can state to the Senator in a very few words what the bill is. The bill simply provides as to coal lands in Alaska which have been withdrawn, that entrymen may enter those lands for agricultural purposes, and that they may receive title to the surface of the land, but that the coal shall be reserved to the United States. A similar law has been passed affecting all the States in the Union.

Mr. GRONNA. It does not in any way dispose of the coal?

Mr. SMOOT. It reserves the coal to the United States, but disposes of the surface of the agricultural lands.

Mr. GRONNA. Then I have no objection to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Utah a question. I notice this bill was reported by the Committee on Public Lands. I ask the Senator if it was a unanimous report?

Mr. SMOOT. It was, as I remember, Mr. President.

Mr. SIMMONS. Can the Senator state that the reservation of the coal rights is the same as is usual in such cases?

Mr. SMOOT. The reservation is the same as is usual in such cases in the United States. I will say to the Senator from North Carolina that the bill is recommended by the Secretary of the Interior. It simply gives entrymen in Alaska the right to enter agricultural lands that have been withdrawn as coal lands, but it does not give them the right to the coal. That is reserved to the United States.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I shall not oppose this measure. At the same time, however, I wish to record the statement that, in my judgment, the reservation here is one which the Government of the United States ought not to make. If a citizen of the United States settles upon a piece of land which is agricultural in its classification and he complies with the statutes of the United States concerning it, he ought to have a title in fee simple for everything contained within the boundaries of that entry, whether it be on the surface or underneath the surface.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Colorado that this bill only applies to lands that have already been withdrawn as coal lands.

Mr. THOMAS. I understand. I was simply making a statement. I shall not oppose the enactment of the measure, but I do not think it is one which does justice to the man who has bona fide sought to take advantage of the privilege given by the land laws of the country for the acquisition of 160 acres of land.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I desire to call attention to the fact that in some legislation of this sort which has been passed by Congress it has been provided that a determination may be had as to whether or not the land withdrawn is actaully coal land or whether it is more valuable for coal than for agriculture; and in the event that the hearing should result in the establishment of the fact that it is not coal land, then the law allows the full patent.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, there is a bill which, I think, has been reported from the Committee on Public Lands that is now on the calendar with reference to North Dakota covering the very subject matter of which the Senator from Wyoming speaks.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Does not the Senator from Utah think that in sections where there are very large areas of land withdrawn for classification and appraisement as to coal, when it shall be determined that there is no coal or that the land is more valuable for agriculture, the full fee title ought to be granted to the land, and that where there is, as a matter of fact, no coal underlying the land, there ought not to be a limited title, but that the entryman should have full title, the same as to other land which has not been withdrawn for coal?

Mr. SMOOT. I fully agree with the Senator from Wyoming; and when that question is determined in Alaska—which I believe will be in the far-distant future—then, of course, there could be a bill passed removing any limited title that the entryman may have received; and I think that will be done, Mr. President, the same as it has been done by the committee in cases in North Dakota.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I look with a good deal of suspicion upon the possibility of voluntarily restoring lands to full entry. I think they can only be restored when there is an actual hearing had to determine whether or not they are agricultural lands or whether or not they are more valuable for coal. It does seem to me when these great withdrawals are made—and of course they must be made from a superficial examination—and when it is afterwards determined that, as a matter of fact, they are not valuable for coal lands, that in every such bill there ought to be included a provision that the full title should pass. Certainly the easiest way and the best time to determine that question is when the hearing is being had for the patent. It seems to me that the withdrawal under the possibility that the land might contain coal might be determined then and there by competent evidence given by the entryman and opposed by the Government if it so desires.

I shall not oppose this bill, Mr. President, even in its present form, but when any other bills of that nature come up for consideration I shall hope to submit amendments which will cover the point suggested. I think it just and right that some such provision should be made.

Mr. SMOOT. In this connection, Mr. President, I desire to say that it is admitted that some of the very best agricultural lands in Alaska are underlain with coal, and the people there thought that such lands should not be withheld from agricultural entries on account of the coal underneath. It was to accomplish that purpose that the bill was drawn, and for that reason it was hoped that the bill, after its passage, would allow people to enter such land for agricultural purposes, reserving the coal underneath to the United States.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, if the Senator will bear with me, I shall not object to the passage of this bill at this time or offer an amendment for the very reason the Senator has urged. While I am not much of a prophet, I do not think I would risk anything in hazarding the guess that after the passage of this bill very large areas will be withdrawn for coal in Alaska in addition to those already withdrawn.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, can that be done in the absence of affirmative legislation in view of existing law?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Oh, yes.

Mr. THOMAS. Then I think the sooner we, by affirmative legislation, inhibit the exercise of such power the better.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. We have already given to the President, by affirmative legislation, that very right. That was done two years ago; but even if we had not given that power to him, he would have had it, so far as Alaska is concerned.

Mr. THOMAS. My purpose in making the inquiry was because of my understanding that there can be no withdrawal of lands for the purpose of carrying out the present intention of securing a complete supply of radium in the absence of affirmative legislation by Congress. I am very glad that that is so; and I only regret that such is not the provision with reference to all land on the public domain.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. In view of the fact that the right of the President to withdraw lands without affirmative legislation was questioned, we passed an affirmative act in 1910, as the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] informs me, authorizing the President, in his discretion, to withdraw temporarily for classification and appraisement coal and other mineral lands of the United States upon the public domain.

Mr. THOMAS. May I inquire if that was before or after the enactment of a measure between the passage and the signature of which the President of the United States withdrew about 11,000,000 acres of the public domain?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. No; it was long after that.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say, however, that in that same law the question of the withdrawal of lands for forest purposes was prohibited in certain States, among which was the State of Colorado.

Mr. GRONNA. Mr. President, I shall not oppose the passage of this bill; but I simply want to state that the bill referred to by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], which was passed by the Senate the other day, applies to the whole United States and not to North Dakota alone. The bill which was drawn by me provides that where lands have been withdrawn as coal lands and patents have been issued giving a limited title to homesteaders, and it has later on been discovered that the land does not contain coal, full patent shall be given to such land. That bill was passed the other day by the Senate and is now before the House.

Mr. SMOOT. The reason I spoke of North Dakota was that the bill had particular reference to North Dakota.

Mr. GRONNA. Yes.

Mr. SMOOT. And North Dakota was the only State, as I remember from the evidence, that was involved in the proposition.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I think some change should be made in the language of this bill. It provides:

> And any settler who has initiated a homestead claim in good faith on lands containing workable deposits of coal may perfect the same under the provisions of the laws under which the claim was initiated, but shall receive the limited patent provided for in this act.

But the act does not make any reference to any patent at all.

Mr. SMOOT. Section 2, I think the Senator will find, if he will read it, provides for that.

Mr. WALSH. I do not see it there.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will read section 2 of the bill he will find this provision:

> SEC. 2. That upon satisfactory proof of full compliance with the provisions of the laws under which the entry is made and of this act the entryman shall be entitled to a patent to the lands entered by him, which patent shall contain a reservation to the United States of all the coal in the land so patented, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same.

Mr. WALSH. I have before me simply the report.

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; the Senator was reading from the report.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, does the bill allow a patentee to mine and sell coal?

Mr. SMOOT. No; the bill provides that the "patent shall contain a reservation to the United States of all the coal in the land so patented, together with the right to prospect for, mine, and remove the same."

Mr. LANE. Then it reserves to the Government the control and ownership of the coal under the surface?

Mr. SMOOT. The bill simply grants a patent to the surface, and reserves the coal underlying the surface to the Government of the United States.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Except so far as the patentee may desire to use it for himself.

Mr. SMOOT. There is, of course, that provision in the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Then, Mr. President, I desire to call the attention of the Senate to another feature. I again refer to the report, which gives us section 1 of the bill as it is proposed to be amended, and recites:

That from and after the passage of this act homestead claims may be initiated by actual settlers for public lands of the United States in Alaska known to contain workable coal deposits—

Then follows:

or that may be valuable for the coal contained therein—

That is to say, there are two classes of land that come under the provisions of the act. Then it continues:

And any settler who has initiated a homestead claim in good faith on lands containing workable deposits of coal may perfect the same under the provisions of the laws under which the claim was initiated.

Leaving the other class of lands entirely unprovided for so far as perfecting title is concerned. The settler may initiate a claim to two classes of land, but he can have a patent only if his land falls within one class. I therefore move to amend the amendment by inserting after the word "coal," in line 13, page 2, the words "or that may be valuable for the coal contained therein."

Mr. SMOOT. I have no objection to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The SECRETARY. On page 2 it is proposed to amend the amendment reported by the committee in line 13, after the word "coal," by inserting the words "or that may be valuable for the coal contained therein."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. I likewise invite the attention of the Senator to the second amendment proposed by the committee, the concluding clause of the bill:

Provided further, That nothing herein contained shall be held or construed to authorize the entry or disposition of withdrawn or classified coal lands or lands valuable for coal under section 2306, United States Revised Statutes, or acts amendatory thereof or supplemental thereto commonly known as soldiers' homestead entries.

Really, you are referring to the soldiers' homestead law.

Mr. SMOOT. No, Mr. President; I want to say to the Senator that this would be the entry itself. The homestead entries, of course, would not apply to this. The department recommended that. I will say that in all of the other laws passed for the same purpose here in the Senate that provision has not been inserted, but the department felt that it was necessary as far as Alaska was concerned.

Mr. WALSH. The Senator will understand that I am in entire accord with the idea of preventing the utilization of the soldiers' additional homestead rights under the pretended protection of this act. That is not the point I am speaking of. The word "entries" there has no proper place, however, because you are referring to the making of an entry or the disposition of these lands under the provisions of the sections which are appropriately referred to as the soldiers' homestead law, not soldiers' homestead entries.

Mr. SMOOT. I agree with what the Senator says, and I think the department was wrong in that. I am perfectly willing to have the word "entries" stricken from the bill and the word "law" inserted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to strike out the word "entries" in the committee amendment in section 2, page 4, line 10, and to insert in lieu thereof the word "law."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment in section 1 as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3863) granting lands to Hot Springs Lodge, No. 62, Ancient Free and Accepted Masons, of Hot Springs, Ark., was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice that the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] is not in the Chamber, and I wanted to ask him if he would not accept an amendment to this bill. For that purpose I ask that the bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

RECONVEYANCE OF LANDS IN NATIONAL FORESTS.

The bill (S. 2904) for the relief of certain persons, their heirs or assigns, who heretofore conveyed lands inside national forests to the United States, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments.

The first amendment was, in section 1, page 2, to strike out lines 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15, and 16, in the following words: "Provided, That such person or persons, their heirs or assigns, make satisfactory proof of the conveyance of such lands to the United States by submitting to the Commissioner of the General Land Office an abstract of title to such lands and the deed of conveyance of the same to the United States, which deed and abstract or abstracts shall be retained in the files of the General Land Office," and to insert in lieu thereof:

Provided, That such person or persons, their heirs or assigns, shall within five years after the date of this act make satisfactory proof of the conveyance of such lands to the United States by submitting to the Commissioner of the General Land Office an abstract of title to such lands and the original deed of conveyance of the same to the United States, or, if such deed should be lost or destroyed a true copy of the record thereof, which deed or copy and abstract or abstracts shall be retained in the files of the General Land Office.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I wish to ask the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] a question with reference to this bill. As I understand, where under former acts of Congress lands within forest reserves have been deeded to the Government and the former owners have not received the lieu lands the remedy lies in this bill. Is that it?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes. The purpose of it is to have the Government deed back to the former owners the lands which were conveyed to the Government with the expectation that the parties would be entitled to indemnity selections, but they never got anything.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It seems to me this proviso is a little uncertain. It seems to indicate that the land mentioned in it never was conveyed.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is what the proviso indicates—that the land was not conveyed.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The proviso is intended to require that proof of the conveyance of the lands by the individuals to the Government shall be submitted as a condition precedent to having the lands deeded back to them.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes; but if the land was deeded to the United States, in order to make the conveyance the United States must have accepted the conveyance and the deed itself must be in the hands of the United States. This proviso presupposes that there is no record anywhere of any such deed or conveyance having been made.

Mr. FALL. And, if the Senator will permit me a moment, it presupposes that the deed executed must have been recorded by the man executing it, instead of the United States receiving it, and it is going to hold the man executing the deed responsible for its nonrecord. He can not furnish a certified copy of it if the United States, by its negligence, did not record it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. It presupposes that there never has been a conveyance, because there can not be a conveyance without the delivery of either the land or the deed.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not agree with the Senator's contention about the construction of the proviso. Where land is conveyed to the Government, the deed is supposed to be placed on record in the county where the land lies; otherwise, the United States does not get any title.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I beg the Senator's pardon. The United States gets title whether the deed is recorded or not.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. As against anybody but an innocent purchaser for a valuable consideration.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. If I convey a piece of land to the United States, and the United States does not put its title on record, I can go to you, who may not have any notice of my transfer to the United States, and sell you a perfectly good title.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes; but you can not convey land simply by making out a deed and putting it on record. You must convey it to me; you must give to me the deed, and I must protect myself by putting it on record.

Mr. FALL. If the Senator will permit me, the abstract of title will show whether the individual has deeded the land to anybody else or not.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The title does not pass without the conveyance being consummated by delivery. This language would seem to indicate that there are some of these conveyances, at least, as to which there is doubt whether or not they ever did convey the land. It seems to me it ought to be amended in some way.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no objection to any amendment which will carry out the purpose of the act. The purpose of the act is simply to require the individual to furnish proof of the transfer; that is all.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, it seems to me that we can rectify it if we will strike out the following words, beginning with the word "lands," on page 2, line 21:

And the original deed of conveyance of the same to the United States.

If those words were stricken out, I do not see that there could be any objection to it. If the original deed were delivered to the United States, and the United States has recorded the deed, of course it would show on the abstract of title, and there would be no necessity of having the deed delivered.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. There would be no necessity of having this proviso in that case.

I wish to ask the Senator from Oregon if he knows anything about the facts upon which the proviso is based. Has there been a dispute as to the conveyance, or have some of the deeds been lost? The report itself does not show.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I do not know. The only information I have in reference to the matter is from the department.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The department say nothing about it in their letter.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, it does seem to me that the individual who is seeking now to have the Government reconvey these lands to him ought to be required to present an abstract of title which will satisfy the authorities of the Government that the lands really had been deeded to the Government. He is coming to the Government and making a request. That request is: "Heretofore I deeded to you some land in the hope that I might get land somewhere else. I did not get that land. Now I come to you as an applicant to have you deed back to me the land which I deeded to you in the hope that I might better my condition."

If a man makes that request, it seems to me there is nothing unreasonable in the Government saying to him: "As a condition to having this land conveyed back to you, you must give me a chain of your title in the form of an abstract. You must show to me that you have deeded to me the land which you claim to have deeded to me. Then, on that contingency, I will execute a deed to you." That is all the bill does.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is not what this proviso says, however.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. That is the way I understand it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Why, no. The proviso says that the man must present the original deed which he has already given to the Government, and which, in the regular course of business, would now be in the hands of the Government.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes; "or, if such deed should be lost or destroyed, a true copy of the record thereof."

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am only seeking to protect the people.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. The Senator and I both have in view the same purpose. We both want to protect these men. The Senator knows, however, as a resident of a public-land State, that when these transfers were made to the Government by the individuals who were seeking the benefits of the indemnity selection law, the deeds were not placed on record, as a matter of fact. They were sent, with the abstracts of the individuals' titles, to the Attorney General of the United States or to the Land Department before the deeds were recorded. In most of the cases the deeds and the abstracts of the individuals' titles had been sent to and were in the hands of the Interior Department or the Department of Justice when the indemnity selection law was repealed.

The Government may have possession of those deeds. It probably has. It ought to have if they have been cared for. Suppose, however, the deeds have been recorded and the originals have been lost. This provision is intended to protect cases where the deed has been lost.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I can not imagine how the entryman can furnish to the Government a deed which is already in the hands of the Government. If the Senator is satisfied with the provision, however, I am.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. It is barely possible that to strike out the words suggested by the Senator from Utah might meet the objection of the Senator. We have the same object in view.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. There is no question about that. I know the Senator wants to protect these individuals. They are entitled to have the land back. There is no question about that, either. They deeded the land to the Government. We want to protect them and we want to have the Government deed the land back with as few restrictions as possible—just enough to protect the Government.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey in the chair). Does the Senator from Oregon yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I yield.

Mr. WALSH. I confess that I do not like the provisions of section 2 of this bill, and I very much fear that the admirable purpose which is embodied in section 1 has blinded the Senator from Oregon to the very great significance and consequence of the later provision of the bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Is the Senator discussing the section we were discussing a moment ago?

Mr. WALSH. No; but I am now going to say a word with respect to it.

I do not know why such language as is found in the proposed substitute for the proviso should be therein. I think there is a very well established presumption of law that the grantee accepts a grant made to him when the deed evidencing the grant is placed of record; so, if there is a deed upon record, the presumption is that the Government of the United States has accepted that deed. In any case, if a grant has been made at all, the original deed naturally will be found in the hands of the officers of the Government and not in the hands of the man who made the deed. When he is called upon to assert the fact that he has made a conveyance of the land to the Government, why should he be called upon to present to anybody the original deed? It is not available to him unless he goes to the Government and by some means or other extracts it from the files of the Government and gets it into his possession and then delivers it back into the hands of the Government. Of course he can furnish an abstract of title; but why, under any circumstances, require him to deliver to the Government the original deed, which, presumably, has been delivered to the Government already and is now in the possession of the Government?

Then, if you strike that out, why do you want to assume that there are any lost deeds? If the man has made a conveyance and that conveyance is of record, it does not make any difference whether the deed is lost or not. What reason have we for assuming that the Government receives deeds and that those deeds have been lost? I should think we might very well await the occurrence of such a condition of affairs, which might possibly justify the enactment of a special act. I do not see why you want to make a provision upon the assumption that a deed of property conveyed to the Government is not on file with the proper Government officer.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I want to say to the Senator that I think this presupposes that these deeds have been lost, but there is nothing in the report of the committee or from the General Land Office or from the Secretary of the Interior to state that fact. For that reason I made my inquiry.

Mr. WALSH. That is what I am afraid of. I am always fearful about a claim of a conveyance of land by a lost deed, because then you have to have parol evidence that the deed at one time was in existence, and then you are always confronting an embarrassing situation. Indeed, centuries ago these acts were passed requiring conveyances of real estate to be evidenced by instruments in writing, because it was recognized that it was not safe to intrust the transfer of title to oral testimony. So I do not think there ought to be any provision there at all in relation to lost deeds.

But, Mr. President, I want to invite the attention of the Senate to the provision of section 2, which is really the one that ought to have our special attention and care. The provisions of section 1 are absolutely all right. A man has made the conveyance of his land to the Government of the United States upon the expectation under the forest-reserve act that he would have a right to go upon the public land and select an equal number of acres of land in lieu of it, but before he got around to it the act was repealed. Now, the Government has the land and he has nothing in return, and of course the Government ought to give him back the land. But under the provision of section 2, if the Government has in the meantime devoted that land to public uses, he is then permitted in the same way to go anywhere upon the public domain and select any public land in the place of that.

I object to that, Mr. President. We had a bitter experience with the act, in the first place, under exactly such a provision. We had a further bitter experience in connection with the more or less notorious act creating the Mount Rainier National Park, under which the Northern Pacific Railroad Co., the owner of every alternate section in that park, was authorized to go anywhere upon the public domain and select lands in lieu of the lands surrendered by it within the bounds thereof. For the greater part the lands surrendered were located along the sides and tops of high peaks of the Cascade Mountains, worth on an average, it is said, not to exceed 2 cents an acre. Under the provisions of that act that company came down into my State and selected the richest agricultural lands within our borders, lands of immense value, because of the timber upon them, and even undertook, under the authority of the Secretary of the Interior, to grab up some of the most valuable coal lands in our State. I had the honor to have a part in procuring a decree of the Supreme Court of the United States for the annulment of patents issued to them for lands of the last-mentioned class. So that was saved.

But I object now, Mr. President, to granting to anyone who conveyed under the provisions of the act of 1897 to the Government of the United States the right to go anywhere upon the public domain and gather up anything he may be able to find in exchange for lands that may possibly have been absolutely worthless, giving those situated to take advantage of the act the free scope of the whole public domain to select lands in lieu of lands originally surrendered.

But if you are going to do it at all, Mr. President, I submit, sir, that you do not want to do it upon any such general proposition as that lands surrendered have been by the Government of the United States devoted to public purposes.

What does that mean, Mr. President. The forest reserves themselves are created for public purposes. These lands which have been surrendered are of course within the exterior bounds of a forest reserve, and the Government of the United States has been making use of the forest reserve during all of this time for public purposes.

So the bill really means, as I read it, that any man who has conveyed to the Government of the United States prior to the date named in the act any land and has not been enabled since to select lands in lieu thereof is entitled to go anywhere upon the public domain and select such land.

Mr. President, if the Government of the United States has not put those lands to any other purpose than forest-reserve purposes, I submit that they ought to be conveyed back. The parties ought to be placed simply in statu quo. The donor simply granted to the United States a certain tract of land within a forest reserve. He was denied the opportunity to go and select the lieu land, and, being so denied, he ought to get his land back.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Will the Senator permit a question?

Mr. WALSH. Certainly.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I should like to ask the Senator if he is informed, or if the Senator from Oregon [Mr. CHAMBERLAIN] is informed, as to how much land would be subject to the provisions of this act; that is, how many acres or how many thousand acres or how many hundred thousand acres, and by whom it is held? I suppose there is probably some record in the Land Office, some list of those who deeded the land to the Government who had not received other land instead. My recollection is that there was at one time a report made to the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Wyoming that the Committee on Public Lands had this question up for consideration, not in this form but on a bill granting to all those who had transferred their lands to the Government by actual deed, the right of lieu selection. At that time, as I remember, there were some 45,000 acres involved from one railroad company, and, as I remember, the other parties involved, I believe, brought the amount up to over 100,000 acres. I have not the figures and I have not thought of the matter for some four or five years, but, as I remember it, the amount was nearly 100,000 acres.

Mr. THOMAS. Will the Senator state why?

Mr. SMOOT. The reason was this: The deeds had been already transferred to the Government under the old lieu land-selection law, and before the Government could receive the same and check it up and pass upon it the law repealing lieu selections passed Congress, and the Government could not do that which would have been done if the law had not been passed.

Mr. WALSH. So, Mr. President, I submit that if the land has been put to any other public purposes than forest-reserve purposes no restitution of any kind should be made except the return of the land; but, however, if the land has been put to some other public purpose, as, for instance, it has been set apart for a military reservation or for a naval reserve or for experimental purposes in connection with the work of the Forestry Bureau, or any other purpose of that character, and it is desired to continue to use it for that purpose, then, of course, we should pay for it. But I submit that we should pay what the land is actually worth, and we should not give the owner a roving privilege to go anywhere over the public domain and select any land that he may find available in exchange for land that may be for all practical purposes simply worthless.

Accordingly I think that section 2 should be stricken from the bill.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, there is much force in what the Senator from Montana suggests in reference to section 2. There might possibly be some danger that it would practically revive the old indemnity-selection act which was intended to be repealed by the act of 1905; that is, to the extent of the lands which are now hung in the air, so to speak, between the original owner of the land and the department, which has not yet acted upon the applications for indemnity selections because of the repealing act of 1905.

This section 2 was prepared by the Land Department itself, and the bill in its general purposes and scope had the indorsement of the department. In reading it I supposed that the words "public use" had reference only to the actual use of the lands for some active governmental purpose, not in the way of a national highway.

I do not know but that at least that portion of the amended section 2, from line 21 to the end of the section, might safely be stricken out. Then if a refusal were made by the head of any department to convey the lands back to the individual the matter would be open to subsequent action by Congress.

So, Mr. President, to that extent I am in accord with the suggestion of the Senator from Montana. I think there would be danger of reviving the indemnity-selection law if that provision is left as it is.

For the purpose of bringing the matter to the attention of the Senate, I move that lines 21, 22, 23, et sequitur to the end of the bill be stricken from it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 3, line 20, after the word "reconveyance," strike out the semicolon and the remainder of section 2, down to the period at the end of the section.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be agreed to, without objection.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Page 3, section 2.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It is the latter part of section 2, including the proviso on page 4.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That leaves in section 2, down to the end of line 20?

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Yes; down to the end of line 20.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Does that meet the view of the Senator from Montana?

Mr. WALSH. That meets my objection fully, I think.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. In order to meet the objections of the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. CLARK] and the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT]—and we all want to accomplish the same thing by the bill—we should help these Western States. I think possibly those objections might be met by striking out, commencing on page 2, in line 21, after the word "lands," near the middle of the line——

The VICE PRESIDENT. That has been agreed to.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I did not understand that it had been agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is it to be reconsidered?

Mr. THOMAS. I move to reconsider, if necessary.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I think it ought to go further than the original amendment. I think in striking out the words that were stricken out, down to the words "United States," we ought also to strike out the words following:

Or if such deed should be lost or destroyed a true copy of the record thereof, which deed or copy.

So that it would read:

That such person or persons, their heirs or assigns, shall within five years after the date of this act make satisfactory proof of the conveyance of such lands to the United States by submitting to the Commissioner of the General Land Office an abstract of title to such lands, and abstract or abstracts shall be retained in the files of the General Land Office.

If that is agreed to, then I think the word "the" ought to be inserted after the word "and," in line 24, so as to read:

And the abstract or abstracts shall be retained in the files of the General Land Office.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I think that would meet the objection that is made. I have no objection to it myself.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In the committee amendment, on page 2, line 21, after the word "lands," strike out down to and including the word "copy," in line 24, and in line 24, before the word "abstract," insert the word "the," so as to read:

By submitting to the Commissioner of the General Land Office an abstract of title to such lands, and the abstract or abstracts shall be retained in the files of the General Land Office.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. There ought to be another amendment made there. After the word "lands," in line 21, there should be inserted the words "showing title in the United States."

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no objection to that.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, after the word "lands," in line 21, insert the words "showing title in the United States."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Recurring now to section 2, it reads:

That if it shall appear that any of the lands conveyed to the United States for the purpose stated in the preceding section have been appropriated to a public use.

And so forth.

I suggested a while ago that the mere incorporation of the lands within the forest reserve constituted a devotion of those lands to a public use, at least in a very large sense. If the act is given that meaning, you could not reconvey at all, because all the lands would have been devoted to public use. I suggest to the Senator from Oregon that after the word "use," at the end of line 17, the following language, or language equivalent thereto, ought to be incorporated:

Other than the general purposes for which the forest reserve within the bounds of which they are situate was created.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. I have no objection to that amendment, because all these lands are within forest reserves.

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I move to insert after the word "use," in line 17, the words "or otherwise disposed of."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment to the amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. After the word "use," at the end of line 17, preceding the amendment just agreed to, insert the words "or otherwise disposed of."

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the committee as amended.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

FISH-CULTURAL STATION IN THE STATE OF WASHINGTON.

The bill (S. 824) to establish a fish-cultural station in the State of Washington was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Fisheries with an amendment, on page 1, line 7, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$25,000" and to insert "$50,000," so as to read:

That the Secretary of Commerce be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to establish a fish-cultural station in the State of Washington on the Quiniault River or its tributaries, or on Lake Quiniault, and for said purpose the sum of $50,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the purchase of site, construction of buildings and ponds, and equipment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILLS PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 4167) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and of other wars than the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors, was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

The bill (S. 4168) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

DUTIES OF REGISTERS OF LAND OFFICES.

The bill (S. 3023) relating to the duties of registers of United States land offices and the publication in newspapers of official land-office notices was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments, on page 1, line 8, after the word "on," to strike out "some certain stated day" and insert "Saturday," and in line 10, after the words "issue for," to strike out "such day" and to insert "each Saturday," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That whenever the law requires the register of a United States land office to publish a notice for a certain period of time in a newspaper to be designated by him, such publication may be made by publication each week, successively, in a weekly newspaper of general circulation for the prescribed period of time, or by publication once a week on Saturday of each successive week in the daily issue for each Saturday of a daily newspaper of general circulation until such prescribed period of time shall have elapsed from the first day of publication in such daily newspaper.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I see this bill was introduced by my colleague [Mr. MYERS] and reported by him from the Committee on Public Lands. My colleague is not here, and I should like some explanation of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask that the bill go over at this time, because I was not altogether satisfied with the bill when it was reported out of the committee. I therefore think that the chairman of the committee ought to be here to answer questions in reference to it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

CONDITION OF TRADE IN CHINA.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 94) to authorize the Secretary of Commerce to investigate the condition of trade in China, for the purpose of determining the desirability of establishing there a permanent exposition of the products of the United States of America was announced as next in order.

Mr. OVERMAN. Let that go over for the present, until I can look into it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution goes over.

Mr. OVERMAN subsequently said: Mr. President, I desire to withdraw my objection to Order of Business 144, Senate joint resolution 94, and ask that it be taken up. I objected to its consideration when it was reached in regular order, as I did not understand it at that time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution has been read.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have not read the report in that case, and if there is no real necessity for the immediate passage of the joint resolution, I wish the Senator in charge of it would allow it to go over, so that I may look into it and read the report.

Mr. SIMMONS. Certainly, Mr. President; there is no urgency about it, if the Senator desires that it go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The joint resolution will be passed over.

AIDS TO NAVIGATION IN LIGHTHOUSE SERVICE.

The bill (S. 789) to authorize aids to navigation and other works in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments. The first amendment was, on page 1, line 8, after the name "California," to strike out "$75,000" and to insert "$80,000," so as to read:

Light and fog-signal station at or near Point Vincente, Cal., $80,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 1, line 9, after the name "California," to strike out "$30,000" and to insert "$29,000," so as to read:

Necessary improvements at Point Pinos Light Station, Cal., $29,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The next amendment was, on page 1, line 12, after the name "California," to strike out "$40,000" and to insert "$43,000," so as to read:

Repairs and improvements to Goat Island Lighthouse Depot, near San Francisco, Cal., $43,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. PERKINS. Mr. President, I ask that the report in reference to the bill just passed be printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, it will be so ordered.

The report referred to, which was submitted by Mr. PERKINS January 26, 1914, is as follows:

The Committee on Commerce, to whom was referred the bill (S. 789) to authorize aids to navigation and other works in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes, having considered the same, report it with an amendment, and as amended recommend its passage.

The bill thus amended has the approval of the Department of Commerce, as will appear by the annexed report, the amendment referred to therein having been incorporated in the bill as reported.

The amendments are as follows:

In line 8 of the bill strike out the figures "75,000" and insert the figures "80,000."

In line 10 strike out the figures "30,000" and insert the figures "29,000."

In line 12 strike out the figures "40,000" and insert the figures "43,000."

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE,
Washington, January 7, 1914.

MY DEAR SENATOR: Receipt is acknowledged of letter, dated December 30, 1913, from the Committee on Commerce, inclosing, with request for suggestions thereon by this department, a copy of Senate bill 789, Sixty-third Congress, first session, "to authorize aids to navigation and other works in the Lighthouse Service, and for other purposes."

LIGHT AND FOG-SIGNAL STATION AT OR NEAR POINT VINCENTE, CAL.

Point Vincente is the most prominent point of the California shore line between Point Loma and Point Conception, a distance of 220 nautical miles. Practically all steamer traffic on the Pacific coast south of San Francisco, both domestic and foreign, passes this point. Point Fermin Lighthouse, 6½ miles to the southeastward, is cut off from steamers approaching on the usual courses from the northward until within 4 miles of Point Vincente by that point itself. This leaves an unlighted gap of 32 nautical miles on the usual courses of coasting vessels between Point Hueneme Light Station and Point Fermin Light Station. Freight and passenger traffic is very heavy along this part of the coast and will be materially increased with the opening of the Panama Canal. Point Vincente is a bold rocky point, and practically no warning can be had by the lead in approaching it in foggy weather, as the 100-fathom curve lies within one-half mile of the shore. The importance of this point is increased by the fact that it is a point of change of course for all passing traffic. Petitions dated September 21, 1907, September 3, 1909, and October 28, 1909, signed by masters and shipowners, requested that a light and fog signal be established at this point. It is proposed to establish a flashing light at an elevation of 170 feet and a first-class compressed-air fog signal.

Detailed estimate.

Tower, including site and water supply	$31,000
Illuminating apparatus	5,500
Fog-signal apparatus and building	9,800
Dwelling for 3 keepers	19,000
Outbuildings, fences, oil storage, piping, etc	7,000
Contingencies	7,700
Total	80,000

This item is included in the estimates for the Lighthouse Service for 1915, group 1, item No. 2, Book of Estimates, 1915, page 466, among works considered urgently necessary for the safety of navigation. As the cost of the project is estimated at $80,000, it is recommended that line 8 of the bill be modified by striking out the figures "75" and inserting in lieu thereof the figures "80."

NECESSARY IMPROVEMENTS AT POINT PINOS LIGHT STATION, CAL.

Improvements to the combined tower and dwelling at this station are required to keep them in a serviceable condition. Fog is of frequent occurrence at this point, and a first-class compressed-air signal, together with quarters for two additional keepers, is urgently required. Traffic into Monterey Harbor is steadily increasing, and a number of large oil-carrying steamers now run regularly to this port, where oil is piped from the oil fields in the interior of the State.

Detailed estimate.

Fog-signal building	$3,000
Fog-signal apparatus	7,000
Dwellings for 2 keepers	12,000
Improvements to present station	4,500
Contingencies	2,500

This item is No. 33 of group 3, Book of Estimates, 1915, page 472, being included among works considered essential for the needs of navigation and the equipment of the Lighthouse Service, and which is recommended be undertaken as resources permit. On account of the expense involved and the greater urgency of many other items, an estimate covering this work was not submitted by this department for the fiscal year 1915. The work, however, is deemed worthy, and if Congress, considering the needs in other localities, should appropriate necessary funds for this item, this department could expend the money advantageously in the interests of navigation. As the cost of the proposed work is estimated at $29,000, it is suggested that line 10 of the bill be changed by striking out the figures "30" and inserting in lieu thereof the figures "29."

REPAIRS AND IMPROVEMENTS TO GOAT ISLAND LIGHTHOUSE DEPOT, NEAR SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

The depot occupies a small area gained by cutting down the steep bluff at the southeast point of Goat Island, in San Francisco Bay, and filling in along the shore line with the material thus secured. This area and that afforded by the present wharf is now inadequate to afford a proper disposition of the property required to be stored there. This is the only depot in the district. An additional area should be filled in with excavated material to afford room for new storehouses and additional room for storing buoys. The present storehouses are merely wooden sheds, old and poorly constructed.

The present wharf should be extended to afford room for working two tenders alongside at the same time and to permit landing and loading supplies without having to shift material already stored on the wharf. The quarters provided for the depot force are old and insanitary in arrangement and location. New quarters should be provided on higher ground and the site of the present quarters utilized for the needs of the depot proper.

Detailed estimate.

Retaining wall and fill	$5,000
Storehouse, reinforced concrete	18,000
Wharf, additional, on iron piles	12,000
Dwelling	8,000
Total	43,000

This item is No. 35 of group 3, Book of Estimates, 1915, page 473, being included among works considered essential for the needs of navigation and the equipment of the Lighthouse Service, and which is recommended be undertaken as resources permit. On account of the expense involved and the greater urgency of many other items, an estimate covering this work was not submitted by this department for the fiscal year 1915. The work, however, is deemed worthy, and if Congress, considering the needs in other localities, should appropriate necessary funds for this item, this department could expend the money advantageously in the interests of navigation. As the cost of the proposed work is estimated at $43,000, it is suggested that line 12 of the bill be changed by striking out the figures "40,000" and inserting in lieu thereof the figures "43,000."

It is recommended that the bill be passed subject to the amendments suggested herein.

Very truly, yours,

WILLIAM C. REDFIELD, Secretary.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON COMMERCE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

SANTA BARBARA LIGHT STATION, CAL.

The bill (S. 790) to authorize the improvement of Santa Barbara Light Station, Cal., including a fog signal and a keeper's dwelling, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, in line 6, after the word "exceed," to strike out "$23,000" and to insert "$29,000," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of Commerce be, and he is hereby, authorized to improve the Santa Barbara Light Station, Cal., including a fog signal and a keeper's dwelling, at a cost not to exceed $29,000.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SANTA CRUZ LIGHT STATION, CAL.

The bill (S. 791) to provide for improvements at the Santa Cruz Light Station, Cal., was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, in line 5, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$35,000" and to insert "$32,000," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That there be, and the same is hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $32,000 for improvements at the Santa Cruz Light Station, Cal.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE DALLES (OREG.) POWER PROJECT.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 86) authorizing the Secretary of War to detail two Engineer officers to cooperate with engineers of the Interior Department or the States of Oregon and Washington in investigating The Dalles (Oreg.) power project was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with amendments, on page 1, line 3, after the word "authorized," to insert the words "and directed"; in line 4, before the word "officers," to strike out "Engineer"; in line 5, before the word "Engineers," to strike out "Army," and, after the word "Engineers," to strike out "to" and to insert "United States Army, who, as part of their regular duties, will," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and is hereby, authorized and directed to detail two officers from the Corps of Engineers, United States Army, who, as part of their regular duties, will act with the engineers from the United States Department of the Interior or the States of Oregon and Washington as a board of consulting engineers in connection with the investigation of the Columbia River power project, near The Dalles, Oreg., for which investigation $15,000 has been appropriated under chapter 374, Laws of Oregon for 1913, and an equal amount allotted by the Secretary of the Interior from the United States reclamation fund; the intent being to have the States and the various interested departments of the United States Government join in the conclusions, to the end that the final plans for development may take into account the various uses of water for navigation, irrigation, and power purposes.

The amendments were agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

DAM ACROSS ROANOKE RIVER, VA.

The bill (S. 2425) to authorize the Roanoke River Development Co. to construct and maintain a dam across the Roanoke River, in Mecklenburg County, in the State of Virginia, approximately 20 miles below the town of Clarksville, in said State, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that go over, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill goes over.

Mr. MARTIN of Virginia. I ask the Senator from Utah why he objects to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. SMOOT. I want to look at the report in that case, and I have not had time to do so.

SEVERIN AND BERTHE L. EVENSEN.

The bill (S. 135) for the relief of Severin and Berthe L. Evensen, dependent parents of Sigurd Evensen, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 12, after the words "sum of," to strike out "one thousand" and insert "three hundred and sixty," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Severin Evensen and Berthe L. Evensen, dependent parents of Sigurd Evensen, who was killed on the U. S. S. Neptune while employed in coaling the same at Melville, R. I., on the 18th of October, 1911, through an accident which occurred without negligence or misconduct of said Sigurd Evensen, the sum of $360.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

RAILWAY BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER.

The bill (S. 1618) granting to the Inter-City Bridge Co., its successors and assigns, the right to construct, acquire, maintain, and operate a railway bridge across the Mississippi River was announced as next in order.

Mr. VARDAMAN. I ask that that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

HEIRS OF SAMUEL H. DONALDSON.

The bill (S. 1881) for the relief of the heirs of the late Samuel H. Donaldson was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Order of Business 196, being House bill 3468, be substituted for Senate bill 1881. The bill as passed by the House has been reported by the Senate Committee on Claims with an amendment, making the bill identical with the Senate bill reported by the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In the absence of objection, the House bill will be substituted for the Senate bill on the calendar. Is there objection to the present consideration of the House bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 3468) for the relief of the heirs of the late Samuel H. Donaldson, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I have not before me the report on House bill 3468.

Mr. BRYAN. House bill 3468, as passed by the House, carries an appropriation of $1,500. Senate bill 1881, as reported by the Committee on Claims, carries an appropriation of $840. When the House bill passed and came to the Senate the committee reported the House bill back with an amendment, making it identical with the Senate bill.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator proposes to offer an amendment decreasing the amount from $1,500 to $840?

Mr. BRYAN. That is the amount reported by the amendment of the committee.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment reported by the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In line 8, after the words "sum of," it is proposed to strike out "$1,500" and to insert "$840," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to the heirs of the late Samuel H. Donaldson, who died from injuries received in the performance of his duties under the appraiser of merchandise at the port of New York, the sum of $840.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. BRYAN. I move that Order of Business 153, being the bill (S. 1881) for the relief of the heirs of the late Samuel H. Donaldson, be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

JOEL J. PARKER.

The bill (S. 2226) for the relief of Joel J. Parker was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

LAWSON RENO.

The bill (S. 175) for the relief of Lawson Reno, collector for second district of Kentucky, was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It directs the Secretary of the Treasury to credit Lawson Reno, collector of internal revenue for the second district of Kentucky, and his accounts, with $96, being the value of 19,200 1-ounce tobacco stamps totally destroyed by fire in the office of Stamp Deputy George R. Mayo, in the Warren County Hardware Co., in the McCormack Building, in Bowling Green, Ky., by reason of the accidental burning of the building.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MARGARET M'QUADE.

The bill (S. 1922) for the relief of Margaret McQuade, was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 7, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$2,500" and insert "$840," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Margaret McQuade, widow of the late Edward McQuade, alias Edward Quade, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $840, as compensation for the death of the said Edward McQuade, alias Edward Quade, caused by and in the performance of his duties as an employee in the Government service in the War Department.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BELLEVADORAH STEELE.

The bill (S. 3843) for the relief of Bellevadorah Steele was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, in line 6, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$10,000" and to insert "$1,248," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Bellevadorah Steele, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,248, in full compensation for injuries received by Horatio N. Steele, husband of the said Bellevadorah Steele, while performing his duties as a master mechanic in the gun-carriage shop of the navy yard at Washington, D. C.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Florida if in all these cases the committee had a report from the department giving a description of how the accident occurred?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice that a copy of the letter from the department is not set forth in the report, and I wondered whether the chairman had actually received a report from the department.

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator will notice the report states that the Acting Secretary of the Navy, Mr. Winthrop, writes, among other things—

That the accident was clearly without his fault, and the Government was negligent.

We did not insert the entire letter, but that was taken from the letter.

Mr. SMOOT. In reading the report of the committee I did not take the statement "that the accident was clearly without his fault, and the Government was negligent," to be from the report of the Acting Secretary of the Navy. I thought that was a statement made by the Senator who wrote the report.

Mr. BRYAN. That is probably so. I notice that I was mistaken as to that; but if the Senator will read the paragraph preceding that he will see that the case was referred to the department and that they reported on it.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator says that a report was made by the department showing the facts to be as the report states, I have no objection to the bill.

Mr. BRYAN. That is my recollection. I do not think a bill of this character is ever reported by the committee without a report from the department.

Mr. HUGHES. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Florida a question. I notice that in a bill just passed the amount of $840 was fixed for the death of the husband of the beneficiary under the bill, while under a bill passed just prior to that the amount was $5,000.

Mr. BRYAN. The larger amount was carried by the bill when it was introduced, but it was reported with an amendment reducing the appropriation. In the case of accidental death of departmental employees due to the fault of the Government, and without negligence on the part of the employee, the amount is fixed at one year's salary. That was the amount allowed in the case to which the Senator refers and the amount allowed in this particular case.

Mr. HUGHES. Yes; I see that $5,000 was the amount originally carried by the bill to which I had reference, but a smaller amount was substituted by amendment.

Mr. BRYAN. Five thousand dollars was the amount asked for.

Mr. HUGHES. Is it the fixed policy of the committee not to allow more than a year's salary?

Mr. BRYAN. It is.

Mr. HUGHES. Even if the death is without negligence on the part of the employee?

Mr. BRYAN. The committee follow the act of 1898, allowing a year's salary to Government employees on certain works of the Government. Departmental employees, of course, are not covered by that act; but it has been the custom of the committee for a number of years, almost ever since that act was passed, in meritorious cases to apply it to other employees.

Mr. SMOOT. The act to which the Senator from Florida refers is the act granting the relief of a year's salary to those employed on the Panama Canal.

Mr. BRYAN. On the Panama Canal, in navy yards, and places of that character.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

CHARLES C. CROWELL.

The bill (S. 2590) to reimburse Charles C. Crowell for two months' extra pay in lieu of traveling expenses was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

SAMUEL HENSON.

The bill (S. 1171) for the relief of Samuel Henson was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Claims with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay to Samuel Henson, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $1,000, as compensation for injuries received while employed under the Superintendent of the United States Capitol on the 19th day of September, 1911.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

SNARE & TRIEST CO.

The bill (S. 1369) for the relief of the Snare & Triest Co. was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes that the claim of the Snare & Triest Co. for reimbursement for all losses to them, including damage to pier growing out of a collision by the U. S. S. Colorado on the night of February 9, 1905, at League Island Navy Yard, be referred to the Court of Claims, with jurisdiction to hear and determine the same to judgment and provided the petition is filed within six months from the date of the act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 3971) to provide for a permanent exhibit of the resources of the States of the Union in or near Washington, D. C., was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask the Senator from Montana if he is particularly interested in the passage of this bill to-day. If not, I should like to have it go over.

Mr. MYERS. I should not mind having it go over for one day.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask that it be passed over.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill will be passed over.

JACOB WIRTH.

The bill (S. 2069) for the reimbursement of Jacob Wirth for two horses lost while hired by the United States Geological Survey was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It authorizes the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Jacob Wirth, of Poplar, Mont., $180, in compensation for two horses lost while hired by the United States Geological Survey.

Mr. SMOOT. I should like to ask if the Government was in any way responsible for the loss of these horses?

Mr. MYERS. Oh, yes. There is an exhaustive report here on the matter from the department, with affidavits, and it is recommended by the department.

The facts, briefly stated, are that officials of the Geological Survey hired these horses and entered into a contract for hiring them in the usual form, executed in the same manner that other contracts are executed. It is a matter of frequent occurrence, I am informed. While the horses were in the possession of the Government officials and agents they were either stolen or strayed away. It would appear that the Government, at least, did not exercise sufficient prudence and precaution if the horses were stolen or strayed away, and acknowledges the liability.

Mr. SMOOT. Did the Government hire Mr. Jacob Wirth with his horses, or did it just hire the horses from him?

Mr. MYERS. It just hired two horses from him, and was, of course, responsible for their return. The letter from the Director of the Geological Survey fully admits the liability of the Government and the fact that the bill ought to be paid. It has passed the scrutiny of the Committee on Claims. I think the Government was responsible for the horses while it had them in its possession. At least, that liability is admitted by the Government, through its officers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUGHES in the chair). If there be no amendments to be proposed, the bill will be reported to the Senate.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Montana a question. I see the bill is for reimbursement for the loss of two horses hired by the United States Geological Survey.

Mr. MYERS. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Is there any claim made that the horses were lost by overdriving, or underfeeding, or anything of that kind?

Mr. MYERS. They were stolen or strayed while in possession of the Government officials.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Oh, they did not die?

Mr. MYERS. Manifestly the Government officials did not exercise the degree of precaution and care necessary to keep them from straying or being stolen.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It was not a case of death, then?

Mr. MYERS. No. It happened a long time ago, and the country has been thoroughly searched and advertised.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I asked the question because the word "lost" is pretty broad, and I thought if they had been killed by overdriving the individual who overdrove them ought to pay for them.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, from this report, which I have read hurriedly, it would seem that Mr. Bauer, of the Geological Survey, is the man who ought to be held responsible for the stealing or straying of the horses.

Mr. MYERS. That is a matter between the Government and Mr. Bauer.

Mr. THOMAS. I do not think so. He was the custodian of these horses, and the contract for their keeping was made with him.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Suppose the man had stolen them. Would the Senator think the United States Government ought to pay for them?

Mr. MYERS. Why, yes. He was not in charge of the horses.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, even if he had stolen them, the United States Government ought to pay for them?

Mr. MYERS. Certainly; if the agent of the Government did not exercise sufficient precaution to keep people from stealing them. Perhaps I misunderstood the Senator. The Senator said suppose who had stolen them?

Mr. WILLIAMS. The man who was employed by the Geological Survey, and had them in his custody.

Mr. MYERS. Oh, no; but there is no such contention as that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I say, I am putting the case. Then, if the Government is to be held responsible because somebody stole horses while the horses were in the custody of this man, the Government could be equally held responsible if he had stolen them himself, because his criminality and negligence would have been still greater.

Mr. MYERS. I will concede that.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then I contend, the Senator having admitted that the Government would not pay for them if the man himself had stolen them, a fortiori, it ought not to pay for them merely because he was negligent enough to let somebody else steal them.

Mr. MYERS. The department to which this matter was referred admits the liability of the Government, and the legal part of the matter has passed the scrutiny of the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to call the Senator's attention to the statement that the Director of the Geological Survey has made. It is very short.

Mr. MYERS. I should like to have it read.

Mr. SMOOT. I do not think it admits the liability of the Government.

He says, in a letter addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Claims of the United States Senate:

> In reply to your letter of May 20, regarding bill (S. 2069) for the reimbursement of Jacob Wirth for two horses lost while hired by the Geological Survey, there are inclosed herewith affidavits submitted by Mr. Wirth in support of claim, and affidavit prepared by C. M. Bauer, assistant geologist, United States Geological Survey.
> The bill as submitted for $180 is, in my opinion, a fair value for the horses, and merits approval.
> Respectfully, GEO. OTIS SMITH, Director.

That is only an approval as to the value of the horses. There is not any question about that.

Mr. MYERS. What is it that merits approval? He says, "The bill * * * is, in my opinion, a fair value for the horses, and merits approval." That is to say, the bill merits approval. I can put only one construction upon it.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask that the bill go over until I can learn a little more about it.

Mr. MYERS. Perhaps the Senator from Oregon [Mr. LANE], who reported out the bill, and is on the floor, can tell us more about it.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator from Oregon has not any objection, I should like to have the bill go over, and I will write to the Director of the Geological Survey and find out just what responsibility the Government has.

Mr. MYERS. I simply wanted to hear what the Senator from Oregon had to say, if he wished to say anything.

Mr. LANE. Mr. President, I examined this bill very carefully. There is no question but that these horses were hired by the agent of the Geological Survey, and that he took them from the place where the owner kept them, and used them as pack horses, and lost them on the trip. The man who owned the horses has never seen them since. They were put in charge of a Government agent, and he lost them. He hobbled them, and lost them. He could not or did not find the horses after he hobbled them, and the Government has never returned the horses.

I have hired a great many horses for pack trips, and have gone up into the mountains with them, and hobbled them, staked them out, and treated them in other ways. If I lost them while I was gone, whether they went over a bluff and killed themselves, or somebody stole them, or they strayed and got out of the country, I always felt that I was responsible to the man who hired them to me for their safe-keeping and for their return in good order.

Mr. WILLIAMS. While that is true, does not that simply prove that the man who was in charge of the horses, and whose negligence led to their being lost, ought to pay for them and not that the Government ought to pay for them?

Mr. LANE. That is another question. If it is a matter of holding him responsible, if you are going to send out on the trail in the mountains pack trains under the charge of a geologically informed gentleman who, perhaps, does not know how to hobble a horse, and hold him responsible for the care of the horses, and, in addition to that, require him to do scientific work, you are asking something of him that perhaps he is unable to perform.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Then, if that is the case, we ought to pass a law to forbid geological gentlemen from hiring horses in the name of the Government.

Mr. LANE. Perhaps that would be the better way out of it; but you have not passed such a law up to this time.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, if the Senator from Oregon will permit me, I should like to say just a word.

Mr. LANE. I will.

Mr. THOMAS. My criticism of this bill is that it sets an extremely dangerous precedent. If the Government of the United States is responsible to the owner of property which its agents and representatives throughout the country have occasion to use or to employ, it will certainly tend to a decrease of diligence in looking after and caring for that property. It may perhaps promote or encourage just the contrary course with reference to its care and its custody.

In view of what has been set forth here—and this seems to be an ordinary case of disappearance—I think that if by passing a bill of this kind we admit the responsibility of the Government for losses under those circumstances, we will be simply overwhelmed here with bills of a similar character from all sections of the country; and there are enough demands now upon the Treasury of the United States to swamp it, without creating this fresh liability.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that the bill may go over for to-day.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I will consent that the bill may go over for a few days. I hope we shall get it up again soon, however.

I simply want to say in this connection that if the man who is in charge of the horses is not financially responsible, and his superior is not responsible, you will have a hard time hiring horses in the West. That is not the fault of the man who rents the horses.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

C. E. MOORE.

The bill (S. 3610) for the relief of C. E. Moore was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

HOMESTEAD AND DESERT-LAND ENTRIES.

The bill (S. 2068) to authorize the allowance of second homestead and desert entries was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Public Lands with amendments, in line 5, after the word "entry," to insert "or entries"; in line 9, after the word "entry," to insert "or entries"; and in line 13, after the word "entry," to insert "or entries," so as to make the bill read:

> Be it enacted, etc., That where any person, otherwise duly qualified to make entry of public lands under the homestead or desert-land laws, has heretofore made or may hereafter make entry or entries under said laws, and has forfeited or abandoned the same, such person may be permitted to make another entry upon showing to the satisfacton of the Secretary of the Interior that the prior entry or entries was made in good faith, was forfeited or abandoned because of matters beyond his control, and that he has not speculated in his right nor otherwise committed a fraud or attempted fraud in connection with such prior entry or entries.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The bill (S. 4260) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and of other wars than the Civil War, and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

The bill (S. 4261) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE TO EMPLOYEES OF LIGHTHOUSE SERVICE.

The bill (S. 1262) authorizing 15 days' leave of absence with pay to per diem employees of the Lighthouse Service of the Department of Commerce was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Commerce with an amendment, to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

> That hereafter employees of the Lighthouse Service compensated at a per diem rate of pay may be granted 15 working-days' leave of absence each year without forfeiture of pay during such absence, under rules prescribed by the Secretary of Commerce: Provided, That no employee of the class herein mentioned shall be entitled to any leave until he has served 12 consecutive months, when he may be granted 15 days' leave, and that during the second or any subsequent year 15 days' leave at the rate of 1¼ days per month, as earned, may be granted from the beginning of the second service year: Provided further, That the inspectors of the several lighthouse districts shall have discretion as to the time when the leave can be allowed without detriment to the service, and that absence on account of sickness shall be deducted from the leave hereby granted.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator reporting the bill whether the department has made a report on it, and whether the report from the committee is a unanimous one or not?

Mr. SHEPPARD. The bill is unanimously reported by the committee and is favorably recommended by the Department of Commerce.

Mr. SMOOT. I see no report here from the committee; and I should like the Senator to explain to me, if he will, in a few words, just what the bill seeks to accomplish and what expense will result to the Government from its passage.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I call the Senator's attention to the letter of the Secretary of Commerce, Mr. Redfield, describing the bill in detail. He says:

Legislation for the granting of 15 days' leave of absence to per diem employees of the Lighthouse Service is recommended in the estimates for the Lighthouse Service for the fiscal year 1915, in the Book of Estimates, 1915, at page 591, under the heading "General expenses, Lighthouse Service," to which your attention is invited. It is believed that the granting of the leave as proposed in the estimates would be of benefit to both the employees and the Lighthouse Service, but in order that the work of the service may not be delayed it would be necessary to provide funds to meet this expense, and the estimates referred to make provision for an increase of $15,000 in the appropriation for "General expenses, Lighthouse Service," to take care of this additional expense.

I think that will give the Senator the particular information he desires.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I shall not object, but I believe legislation of that class ought to be pretty thoroughly considered before its passage. I suppose, however, we can take the report for granted—that it will accomplish some good—and I sincerely hope it will.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I do not think there is any more faithful or any more devoted class of employees than these people of the Lighthouse Service.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment reported by the committee.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

BILL PASSED OVER.

The bill (S. 1759) to reimburse certain fire insurance companies the amounts paid by them for property destroyed by fire in suppressing the bubonic plague in the Territory of Hawaii in the years 1899 and 1900 was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. Let that bill go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be passed over.

F. J. FEARIS.

The bill (S. 3307) for the relief of F. J. Fearis was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It proposes to pay to F. J. Fearis, postmaster at Richland, Iowa, the sum of $64.80, to reimburse him for $9.80 in postal savings funds and $55 in postal savings stamps and cards which were stolen when the post office at Richland, Iowa, was robbed on the 1st day of May, 1913, and which sum was thereby lost without fault on the part of the postmaster, and which sum has been made good from the personal funds of the said postmaster.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LEGISLATIVE JOURNALS OF STATE AND TERRITORIAL LEGISLATURES.

The bill (S. 1701) to admit legislative journals of State and Territorial legislatures to the mails as second-class mail matter was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported from the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads with amendments, on page 1, line 3, before the word "legislative," to insert "daily," and in line 4, after the word "legislatures," to strike out "not exceeding 100 copies to each member of any such legislature," so as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted, etc., That daily legislative journals of the several State and Territorial legislatures, when mailed from the State or Territorial capitals during legislative sessions, shall be accepted as second-class mail matter.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

TERMS OF THE PRESIDENT, VICE PRESIDENT, ETC.

The next business on the calendar was the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 10) proposing an amendment to the Constitution of the United States, fixing the time for the convening of Congress and commencement of the terms of the President, Vice President, Senators, and Representatives.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution was reported adversely from the Committee on the Judiciary.

Mr. SMOOT. Let it go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will go over.

OFFICE FURNITURE, ETC., OF IMMIGRATION COMMISSION.

The joint resolution (S. J. Res. 44) transferring office furniture, equipment, etc., heretofore used by the Immigration Commission to the Department of Labor was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

PENSIONS AND INCREASE OF PENSIONS.

The next bill on the calendar was the bill (S. 4352) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent relatives of such soldiers and sailors.

Mr. BRYAN. That bill and the two following pensions bills have just been reported, and the reports have not been printed. Not for the purpose of delay, but in order that Members may have an opportunity to study the reports, I ask that the three bills may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The three pension bills, S. 4352, S. 4353, and H. R. 10138, will go over.

DOCUMENTARY HISTORY OF THE CONSTITUTION.

The next business on the calendar was the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 104) for printing as a public document the publication of the State Department known as the Documentary History of the Constitution of the United States.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution was reported adversely from the Committee on Printing.

Mr. SMOOT. There was an adverse report on it, and I ask that it be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to inquire of the Senator if there is a compilation of these documents?

Mr. SMOOT. Yes; there is a compilation of them. The first three volumes have been issued, and there are some 300 copies now at the Government Printing Office. I have not the report here, and I forget the exact amount of the cost.

Mr. WALSH. It is sufficient for my purpose to know that the document is available.

Mr. SMOOT. It is.

Mr. SHEPPARD. May I inquire who introduced the joint resolution?

Mr. SMOOT. I think it was introduced by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] introduced the joint resolution.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I suggest that before it is indefinitely postponed that Senator should be given a chance to be heard.

Mr. SMOOT. I ask that it may go over. I will say to the Senator that the reason why I did not ask that it go over in the absence of the Senator from Kansas was because he said he would like to have it go over for one day, and it went over once before.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I suggest that it go over now.

Mr. SMOOT. There is no objection whatever to that course.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The joint resolution will go over.

INSPECTION AND GRADING OF GRAIN.

The bill (S. 120) to provide for the inspection and grading of grain entering into interstate commerce and to secure uniformity in standards and classification of grain, and for other purposes, was announced as next in order.

Mr. SMOOT. No doubt this bill ought to be explained. The Senator who is particularly interested in its passage is not here, and I ask that it may go over for to-day.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE TO HOMESTEAD SETTLERS.

The bill (S. 2316) authorizing leave of absence to homestead settlers upon unsurveyed lands was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that any qualified person who has heretofore or shall hereafter in good faith make settlement upon and improve unsurveyed lands of the United States with intention, upon survey, of entering same under the homestead laws shall be entitled to a continuous leave of absence from the land settled upon by him for a period not exceeding five months in each year after establishment of residence; but he shall have plainly marked the exterior boundaries of the lands claimed and have filed in the local land office notice of the approximate location of the lands settled upon and claimed, of the period of intended absence, and he shall upon the termination of the absence and his return to the land file notice thereof in the local land office.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LAND AT POPLAR, MONT.

The bill (S. 656) granting to the trustees of the diocese of Montana of the Protestant Episcopal Church, for the benefit of Christ Church On-the-Hill, at Poplar, Mont., lots 5, 6, and 7, in block 30, town site of Poplar, State of Montana, was read and considered as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WARREN. May I ask the Senator from Montana how it happens that a part of the town site is under the control of the United States? I am not objecting to the bill, but I want just a word of explanation.

Mr. MYERS. It is on an Indian reservation. That is my understanding.

Mr. WARREN. There is nothing in the bill to show that that is the case. I wanted to have it made clear.

Mr. WALSH. I desire to inquire of my colleague whether similar requests have not heretofore been made from other religious denominations?

Mr. MYERS. Yes; a number of such requests have been granted and granted free of charge in those cases; but in this case the committee recommended as an amendment to insert the words "upon payment by them of the appraised value thereof," so that these gentlemen will simply pay the price of the lots.

Mr. WALSH. I think, Mr. President, it is regrettable that such an amendment should be incorporated in the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I wish to say that the bills which have passed Congress, referred to by the Senator from Montana, must have passed many years ago. In the last 10 years I can say that no such bills have passed that I remember without the payment of the appraised value being provided for in the bills. The department takes the same position, and unless that is put in a bill submitted to them they report against it. I myself believe that it would be a rather dangerous precedent to establish.

Mr. MYERS. I will state that the bill as originally introduced provided for the donation of the lots; and it is my information that quite a good many years ago other lots were donated to several other religious denominations free of charge. While I opposed the amendment, the majority of the Committee on Public Lands saw fit to recommend it, and I can do nothing but support the bill with that amendment. Personally I do not think the amendment is just. The committee recommended it, and I had to submit to the will of the majority of the committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment of the Committee on Public Lands will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 7, after the word "Church," insert "upon payment by them of the appraised value thereof."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendment was concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

NEW ENGLAND STEAMSHIP CO.

The next bill on the calendar was the bill (S. 2786) for the relief of the New England Steamship Co., owner of the American steamer Commonwealth, which had been reported from the Committee on Claims with amendments.

Mr. BRYAN. I move to substitute for this bill Order of Business No. 197, the bill (H. R. 9848) for the relief of the New England Steamship Co.

Mr. SMOOT. That is the House bill?

Mr. BRYAN. It is.

Mr. SMOOT. For the same purpose?

Mr. BRYAN. For the same purpose, and it corresponds exactly with the Senate bill as amended by the Committee on Claims.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill (H. R. 9848) for the relief of the New England Steamship Co. It provides that the claim of the New England Steamship Co., owner of the American steamer Commonwealth, alleged to have been injured in collision with the United States battleship New Hampshire, on or about July 7, 1912, in or near Newport Harbor, for and on account of the alleged damage to said steamer Commonwealth by reason of said collision, may be submitted to and cross libel against the United States filed in the United States district court in the district in which suit has been or shall be commenced by the United States to recover for the damage to the said battleship New Hampshire resulting from said collision, under and in compliance with the rules of said court sitting as a court of admiralty; and the said court shall have jurisdiction to hear and determine the whole controversy and to enter a judgment or decree for the amount of the damages sustained by reason of said collision, if any shall be found to be due, either for or against the United States, upon the same principles and measure of liability, with costs, as in like cases in admiralty between private parties and with the same rights of appeal, but said cross libel shall be filed not later than four months after the passage of this act.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. BRYAN. I move that the bill (S. 2786) for the relief of the New England Steamship Co., owner of the American steamer Commonwealth, be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to.

DONATION OF CONDEMNED CANNON AND CANNON BALLS.

The bill (S. 4407) authorizing the Secretary of War to make certain donations of condemned cannon and cannon balls was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill had been reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized, in his discretion, to deliver to the city of Prescott, Ariz., the condemned brass cannon now at Fort Whipple, and known as the sunset gun, together with carriage and limber and suitable outfit of cannon balls;

To the city of El Paso, in the county of Woodford and State of Illinois, for the use of S. T. Rogers Post, No. 531, Grand Army of the Republic, two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces and a suitable outfit of cannon balls;

To the city of Morrow, in the State of Ohio, one condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpiece and a suitable outfit of cannon balls;

To the town of Warren, in the State of New Hampshire, one condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpiece and a suitable outfit of cannon balls;

To the proper authorities of the city park in the city of Aberdeen, in the State of Washington, two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces and a suitable outfit of cannon balls;

To the proper authorities of the city of Albany, Oreg., five condemned bronze or brass cannon and a suitable outfit of cannon balls;

To the order of the Dan McCook Post, No. 105, of the Grand Army of the Republic, at Wenatchee, Wash., one condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpiece and a suitable outfit of cannon balls;

To the town of Somerset, Ky., of one condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpiece and a suitable outfit of cannon balls;

To the city of Blue Earth, in the State of Minnesota, one condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpiece and a suitable outfit of cannon balls;

To the proper authorities of Columbia County, in the State of Washington, two condemned bronze or brass cannon and a suitable outfit of cannon balls;

To the city of West Point, Miss., one condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpiece and a suitable outfit of cannon balls;

To the city of Salisbury, Md., one condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpiece and a suitable outfit of cannon balls;

To the county of Uinta, in the State of Wyoming, two condemned bronze or brass cannon.

To John A. Logan Post, Grand Army of the Republic, Salina, Kans., two condemned bronze or brass cannon and a suitable outfit of cannon balls;

To the city of Tucson, in the State of Arizona, two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces and a suitable outfit of cannon balls;

To the United Spanish War Veterans, Camp Lee Forby, No. 1, of Omaha, Nebr., two brass or bronze cannon or fieldpieces: Provided, That the donation be of cannon or fieldpieces used or captured in the War with Spain if any such are available for this purpose;

To the city of McPherson, State of Kansas, two condemned cannon or fieldpieces:

Provided, That no expense shall be incurred by the United States through the delivery of any of the foregoing condemned military equipment: And provided further, That each and every article of condemned military equipment covered by this act shall be subject at all times to the order of the Secretary of War.

Mr. THOMAS. I desire to offer an amendment to the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Add at the end of the bill the following:

To the high-school district Holyoke, Phillips County, Colo., two condemned bronze or brass cannon or fieldpieces and a suitable outfit of cannon balls.

Mr. SMOOT. I suggest to the Senator from Colorado that it would be much better to have his amendment follow after line 21, on page 3, because the proviso that comes in at the end of the bill begins at line 22.

Mr. THOMAS. I will accept that suggestion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will come in on page 3, after line 21. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. THOMAS. I also move to add after the amendment just agreed to the following:

To the city of Durango, Colo., for the use of the public park thereof, two condemned bronze or brass cannon.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SMOOT. I offer an amendment to follow the amendment just adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It will be stated.

The SECRETARY. Insert the following:

To the University of Utah, in the State of Utah, two condemned bronze or brass cannon and a suitable outfit of cannon balls.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I am not going to object to the bill, but some two years ago, the supply having been exhausted, an act was passed by Congress providing that there should be no more donations of this kind except where, first, it had been condemned, and, second, at a price per pound which would be equal to what could be realized from breaking up the ordnance and using it again.

I apprehend that there may be some shortage of condemned cannon. I do not think there is anywhere near the number of pieces called for. It is possible that the report may show.

I am not going to object to the bill, as I said, because before it passes the House undoubtedly that will be ascertained, if it has not been ascertained already; but it would be a little difficult if there should be only three or four condemned cannon to provide for the requirements of a bill that carries so many. It would be difficult for the officers having charge of the ordnance to know to which towns they should apportion the cannon.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

HENRY FULLER AND PETER DUCHANE.

The bill (S. 1986) to remove the charge of desertion from the military record of Henry Fuller was announced as next in order.

Mr. THOMAS. The bill was reported adversely, and I ask that it be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, that action will be taken.

The bill (S. 3594) to correct the military record of Peter Duchane was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRYAN. That bill was adversely reported, and I move that it be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bill will be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. SMOOT. I did not notice the names in the bills reported adversely. I call the attention of Senators to the fact that the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] made a personal request that these bills go to the calendar, as he desires to make a statement on the bills before they are indefinitely postponed.

Mr. THOMAS. Then I withdraw the request I made.

Mr. BRYAN. Of course the only object I had in making the motion was to save the time that would be taken in reading the bill when it is left on the calendar.

Mr. SMOOT. I realize that that was the purpose.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the bills will go over.

BYRON W. CANFIELD.

The bill (S. 1044) for the relief of Byron W. Canfield was considered as in Committee of the Whole. It provides that in the administration of the pension laws Byron W. Canfield, late captain Company E, One hundred and fifth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, shall be held and considered to have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States on the 30th day of January, 1863; but no pension, bounty, pay, or other pecuniary emolument shall accrue prior to the passage of this act.

Mr. BRYAN. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill what is the report from the department upon it?

Mr. CLAPP. The Senator in charge of the bill is not in the Chamber, and I hope that the Senator will not insist upon that. I suggest that the bill be temporarily passed over.

Mr. WARREN. It will be perfectly proper to lay it aside until the Senator reporting it is present.

Mr. CLAPP. The Committee on Military Affairs reported the bill favorably.

Mr. BRYAN. I should like to find out what the department has to say about it.

Mr. CLAPP. That appears in the report, of course.

Mr. BRYAN. Let it be passed over for the present.

Mr. CLAPP. Not passed over, but the bill is simply laid aside until the return to the Chamber of the Senator from Iowa [Mr. KENYON].

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will go over temporarily.

ERNEST C. STAHL.

The bill (S. 3488) for the relief of Ernest C. Stahl was announced as next in order.

Mr. BRYAN. I do not see the Senator who reported the bill in the Chamber. I should like to have some explanation of this bill also.

Mr. WARREN. I think it should be laid aside until the Senator reporting it is present.

Mr. MYERS. I can explain it, and my explanation might shed some light on the measure. I would much rather that the author of the bill, the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. MARTINE], were present, but as he is not here I dislike to have the bill go over on account of his absence.

Mr. BRYAN. I am not asking to have it go over, but it can be laid aside until someone is here to explain it.

Mr. MYERS. I will undertake to explain it.

Mr. BRYAN. Very well.

Mr. MYERS. Col. Stahl was a valiant soldier in the Union Army during the war from the State of New Jersey, and he served for four years. About the close of the war he was stationed down here at Alexandria. He was in the Army stationed down there after the war had ended, several months after Gen. Lee surrendered. He was a private, I believe, or a noncommissioned officer. He went home on a visit by leave of his officer or his tacit approval and just simply did not go back. There was no demand made for him to go back. I have an acquaintance with the gentleman. He says he was told by superior authority, an official, that he did not need to go back. The war was over and the regiment was about to be mustered out and to disband. When they made up the rolls and found out who was absent for the purpose of disbanding the regiment he was simply marked as being absent without leave. That is my understanding of the case.

Mr. BRYAN. That is what he said?

Mr. MYERS. Yes.

Mr. BRYAN. What does the War Department say?

Mr. MYERS. That I can not state.

Mr. BRYAN. That is what I want to know.

Mr. MYERS. Of course. To complete what I have to say in a word or two, the object of the bill is simply, I understand, to remove the charge of desertion from his record. It carriers no increase of pension and no emoluments whatever.

Mr. BYRAN. It carries no increase, but it gives him a pension.

Mr. CLAPP. No.

Mr. BRYAN. I think that the other side, the War Department, ought to have been heard. The War Department ought to have been asked as to whether the story he tells corresponds with the records of the department and the statements of the soldier's comrades.

Mr. MYERS. Of course, that is all I can say, and if anyone wants a further explanation, I can not give any more.

Mr. BRYAN. I ask that the bill may go over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On objection, the bill will go over.

FRANK HODGES.

The bill (S. 4002) for the relief of Frank Hodges was announced as next in order.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill was adversely reported from the Committee on Claims.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice that we have not a report on that case on the files, and I ask that it and the remainder of the bills on the calendar be passed over for the day.

Mr. THOMPSON. I trust the Senator from Utah will not object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. SMOOT. This bill is the one I really wanted to look into.

Mr. THOMPSON. It will require only a moment's explanation.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to know whether it would establish the precedent that when a man buys a hunting license, because of the fact that he does not use it the Government is to refund the money.

Mr. BRYAN. That is what the report shows, I will state to the Senator.

Mr. SMOOT. I want to know whether the Government proposes to undertake to refund the money in such a case.

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator from Kansas was about to explain it to the Senator.

Mr. THOMPSON. It is a small matter, and——

Mr. SMOOT. It is an adverse report?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes, sir. I trust the bill will be passed. It is a just claim, and I think Senators will agree with me when I make a little explanation in regard to it. I am sure if it was a transaction between individuals there would be no question on earth about it. I think the Government ought to be as fair with one of its citizens as its citizens would be between themselves.

Frank Hodges intended to go to Alaska for a little hunt. He wrote up there for a license and sent $50, the charge. Before the license was returned to him he became seriously ill. The facts in the case are undisputed. He immediately returned the license and asked the governor of Alaska to return the money. The governor of Alaska stated that the money had been transmitted to the Treasury.

Mr. BRYAN. I will ask the Senator for how long a time the license was good?

Mr. THOMPSON. I can not answer as to that.

Mr. BRYAN. For the season?

Mr. THOMPSON. I presume so.

Mr. BRYAN. How long was Mr. Hodges sick?

Mr. THOMPSON. He was sick for several months, and dangerously ill, so that it was impossible for him to make the trip.

Mr. BRYAN. The record does not show that.

Mr. THOMPSON. That is my understanding of the facts. Mr. Hodges is a very reputable person in our State. He is a brother of our present governor. He wrote to the governor of Alaska, returning the license. The governor simply stated that he would be glad to return the money, or words to that effect, but that he had sent it to the Treasury Department, and that he should apply there for the money. He applied to the Treasury Department. They stated that they had no authority, after the money reached the Treasury, to pay it out, and that his recourse then was simply by a bill in Congress, which I have introduced.

It does seem to me that, under these circumstances, the passage of the bill would establish no dangerous precedent and that the Government could well afford to return the money, exactly as we would do in a transaction amongst ourselves.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Will the Senator from Kansas permit me a mere suggestion?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes, sir.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I am one of those who have paid enough for hunting licenses in different States to have a kind of sympathy with this man. If he in good faith secured a license for the hunting season in Alaska; if he was taken sick and was unable to go to Alaska; if he has not yet been there on his hunting trip; if he is like those of us who love to spend what little leisure we have in the fields in innocent sport; and if sickness prevented his little recess and the Government got $50 of his money and he did not shoot anything in the whole magnificent Territory of Alaska, he ought to have his money returned. No matter how many committees have reported adversely on a claim as plain as this, the money ought to be refunded. The governor covered it into the Treasury of the United States, the applicant could not have the enjoyment and the benefit of that trip, and he was told that he must apply to the United States Government to get the money on account of its being buried in the Treasury. I hope the committee will withdraw any objection to a claim so evidently just and proper.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from Arizona a question. First, I ask him how long is the hunting season in Alaska?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I am not able to say, but I imagine—I was on a committee in the other House and had something to do with the matter at that time in the House—Alaska is like other sections of the country, in that it has its open and closed seasons for shooting, and the licenses usually in the States run for one year, subject, of course, to the season in which game can be killed.

Mr. BRYAN. Does the Senator from Arizona think that if Mr. Hodges had gone to Alaska and had failed to kill any game his license money should be returned?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. If that were true, I would have claims against certain Southern States, by the payment of which I would be recouped a great deal of my lost fortune.

Mr. BRYAN. Is the Senator from Arizona here trying to establish a precedent, so that he may make claims against some States for the payment of his loss?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. No; the Senator from Arizona has been here long enough to be aware that nothing that he could do here would establish a precedent and a rule for a right thing; but I should think a State unconscionable, if I should write from Washington and get a license from the State of North Carolina, for instance—a State in which I have enjoyed many a pleasant season—and the officials should take my money and I should be taken sick and could not go within the season and they should refuse to refund it on application. I think in that case they should certainly return me my money from that State if I should make a demand for it, and not conditioned on the question as to whether I got game or not, if I did go hunting.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Hodges states, in his affidavit, that a dangerous illness caused him to abandon the trip and that he did not use the license, but the license was good for a year.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I know, but the time within which to hunt was not good for a year.

Mr. BRYAN. I do not know how long Mr. Hodges was sick. Does the Senator from Arizona think that, having the right to hunt for a year, the Government having provided a place for him to hunt, and the beasts of the field and the fowls of the air being there for Mr. Hodges to shoot at if he wanted to go, Mr. Hodges having abandoned his trip, the Government really ought to return that $50?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Unquestionably it ought. The license was given for a season to shoot. The man was taken sick. It is a great distance from Kansas to Alaska, and he did not have an opportunity to go at that time. He started to go on a hunting trip in the only season he probably would have from that day until the day he died.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Kentucky?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Yes.

Mr. BRADLEY. I should like to inquire whether there is evidence filed with this claim showing that this man had a gun; that he had the necessary ammunition; and that he was ready, willing, anxious, and waiting to go and hunt if he had not been taken sick?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I should think the fact of his having paid $50 for a license would indicate that he was not going up there without having his gun with him.

Mr. BRADLEY. He may have had an arrangement with some man by which he was to loan him a gun and did not do it. [Laughter.]

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. That might be, but such a license is not transferable; nobody else could use it except this particular man.

Mr. BRADLEY. How long was this man sick?

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I think I can answer the Senator's question. To my personal knowledge this man was dangerously ill and nearly died in 1909. He returned the license immediately upon its receipt and requested the return of his money. I have the letter here from the governor of Alaska, if the Senator would like to see it, stating that if he could he would return the money, and would use every possible endeavor to get it returned to the claimant, but that it was in the Treasury. I have also a letter written by the governor to the Secretary of the Treasury asking that the money be returned, and also a letter written by the Secretary of the Treasury acknowledging the receipt of the governor's letter, and stating that—

> This department can, therefore, afford no relief in the matter, and it will be necessary for Mr. Hodges to apply to the Congress.

Mr. Hodges has taken the course which the Government has designated. It does seem to me that there ought not to be any objection to a bill of this character, unless it is on account of the size of the claim. I sincerely hope the smallness of the claim will not prejudice the rights of the claimant. It seems that the larger a claim is in the Senate the easier it is to get it allowed.

Mr. BRYAN. I want to ask the Senator from Kansas a question. Can the Senator explain why the amount in the bill is placed at $50, in view of the fact that the license cost $49? Is the claim for the extra dollar on account of interest?

Mr. THOMPSON. No. I am going to make a motion to amend the bill at the proper time, by reducing the amount from $50 to $49.

Mr. BRYAN. I think he is entitled to interest, if he is entitled to anything.

Mr. THOMPSON. And, with that understanding, I hope the Senator from Florida will withdraw his objection.

Mr. BRYAN. No; Mr. President.

Mr. THOMPSON. By a simple wave of the hand a few days ago the Senator from Florida raised the amount of the naval appropriation bill from $900,000 to $2,000,000. Now, it does seem to me that a $49 claim, which is honest and legitimate in every way, and would be so treated as between citizens, should be paid by the Government when it has suffered no loss at all. It simply has Mr. Hodges's money for which it has paid nothing and has parted with nothing.

Mr. SHEPPARD. The Senator from Kansas refers to the fortifications appropriation bill and not to the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. THOMPSON. I believe it was the fortifications appropriation bill.

Mr. THOMAS. It was a raise, anyway.

Mr. THOMPSON. It was a raise from $900,000 to $2,000,000 by simply a twist of the wrist.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. If the Senator from Kansas will permit me, I wish to say that I am not attempting to censure the Committee on Claims at all, nor any other committee which attempts to guard the Treasury against unjustifiable assaults. It has become now very well known all over the country that of all the miserable, defaulting creditors on earth the United States Government takes the palm. A just claim can be pending in this Chamber for 25 or 30 years and its payment be denied. I know of one such claim myself for money now in the Treasury to the credit of a dead man, whose daughter is teaching a little school—a just claim, for over a hundred thousand dollars, with not a thing on earth against it except the willing, strong voice of some man able to defeat it by an objection.

In this case the Government confessedly got this man's $49, for which he got no return on earth. The committee reports that he can not get it back, because he did not go on and shoot when he was lying sick in bed. A trip to Alaska would probably take as much as the man was worth, with the $49 which he had to pay for his license. He had only this particular time in which he could go there, but he was prevented from going by the act of God, as we call it in law; he could not carry out his intention, and the Government is unconscionable enough to say that it will keep his money, when he was not permitted to enjoy the very outing for which he had paid that much as a privilege. The claim ought to be paid.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I think that in all right and fairness this bill should pass. It seems to me it is a very small attitude for the Government to take, under the circumstances which have been detailed here, to refuse to refund this money and give back to the man something which in good faith and justice belongs to him. I would think it a shame to refuse to return this money if it were a private transaction between me and this man. Under the circumstances, I would not have his money; I would not keep it; I would send it to him, whether he asked for it or not, and I believe the Government ought to be as conscionable in these matters as are private citizens.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I hope, if the bill is to pass at all, that it will be allowed to pass for $50 instead of the $49 which Mr. Hodges paid, because I would hate to deprive him of the interest to which evidently, under the view of some Senators, he is justly entitled.

Mr. THOMPSON. I do not want any mistake about this. The amount paid by Mr. Hodges was $50, but $1 was charged by a clerk; so the Government has really been out that much and is therefore entitled to $1 credit. I am willing to change the amount to $49.

Mr. MYERS. I suppose that was the fee for issuing the license.

Mr. THOMPSON. That was the fee for issuing the license. Mr. Hodges paid $50. I do not want any mistake about that; but so long as the Government only has $49 of the $50 in its Treasury, for which it has been out nothing, and which by all that is fair and right belongs to Mr. Hodges, I shall amend the bill to that extent.

Mr. BRYAN. I think he ought to be paid full interest if we are going to pay anything at all. The position taken by the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] and by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. THOMPSON] has surprised me. I have never understood, Mr. President, that the Government guaranteed to Mr. Hodges that he should go upon those lands or that his money would be paid back to him if he abandoned his trip. He does not claim in his own affidavit that he was kept from going on the trip. He was taken sick and abandoned the trip. It was open to him for a year, as I understand from my distinguished friend from Arizona [Mr. SMITH], to go there.

I am not surprised that the Senator from Arizona would take that position, but I think he did so in a spirit of fun, and that the Senator from Montana and the Senator from Kansas thought he was in earnest about it. If we are going to have that sort of a plan inaugurated here, then, Mr. President, if in a State a lawyer takes out a license to practice and does not have any practice the State ought to return him his license fee; or if a man pays for an automobile license and gets sick the Government ought to pay the money back to him. It occurred to the committee that the claim was so absurd that it created surprise that any reasonable man would ever present such a claim to the Congress of the United States. I move that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Florida moves that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, since this matter has become so serious, especially with the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN], I desire to read the proof in the case, and then I am willing to submit it to any fair man who wishes to do justice as between men and let it be decided by the Senate whether this claim is ridiculous or absurd, as it is sought to make it appear. I will first read the affidavit of Mr. Hodges himself:

Frank Hodges, of lawful age, being duly sworn, under oath states that he is and has been a resident of Olathe, Kans., 43 years; that he is engaged in the lumber business in Olathe, Kans., and has been for more than 20 years last past; that in March, 1909, he paid to W. B. Hoggatt, governor of Alaska, $50 in lawful money for a hunting license to hunt bear; that a dangerous illness caused him to abandon the trip and that he did not use the license; that he has never received any part of the said $50 or any benefit from said license.

(Signed) FRANK HODGES.

I have here the letter of the governor of Alaska sent to Senator Curtis, who once introduced a bill in regard to this matter, but who ceased to be a Senator before it came up for final consideration. That letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
DISTRICT OF ALASKA,
EXECUTIVE OFFICE,
Juneau, Alaska, June 25, 1909.

Hon. CHARLES CURTIS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SENATOR: I am just in receipt of your letter regarding repayment of license fee to Mr. Frank Hodges, of Olathe, Kans., and have written the Secretary of the Treasury requesting that this money be repaid to Mr. Hodges. The money paid by Mr. Hodges has been transmitted to the Treasury Department, and must be repaid by that department. As this case will establish a precedent, it may take some time to secure repayment, but I shall do whatever is within my power to secure repayment to Mr. Hodges. I inclose herewith copy of letter to the Secretary of the Treasury regarding the matter.

Very truly, yours,

W. B. HOGGATT, Governor of Alaska.

Then the governor of Alaska wrote a letter to the Treasury Department requesting that this money be returned. That letter is as follows:

JUNE 25, 1909.

Honorable SECRETARY OF THE TREASURY,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: On March 10, 1909, a hunting license was issued to Mr. Frank Hodges under the provisions of section 5 of an act entitled "An act for the protection of game in Alaska, and for other purposes," of May 11, 1908, and the sum of $50 was paid by Mr. Hodges therefor. Under the provisions of this act the sum of $49 was deposited with the First National Bank of Juneau to the credit of the Treasury of the United States, on account of miscellaneous receipts account of fee for issuing hunting license under game law.

Mr. Hodges was unable to take advantage of this license by reason of illness and did not visit Alaska and avail himself of the privileges granted by the license. I have therefore to request that the sum of $49, which was paid to the Treasury of the United States by Mr. Hodges for this license, be refunded to him.

I inclose herewith copy of letter of Mr. Hodges and the license which was issued to him by the acting governor of Alaska.

Very respectfully,

W. B. HOGGATT,
Governor of Alaska.

The Secretary then wrote to the governor of Alaska, as follows:

TREASURY DEPARTMENT,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, July 7, 1909.

Hon. W. B. HOGGATT,
Governor of Alaska, Juneau, Alaska.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 25th ultimo, in which you request that the sum of $49, which was deposited on March 10, 1909, by Mr. Frank Hodges with the First National Bank of Juneau, Alaska, to the credit of the Treasurer of the United States on account of "hunting license," be refunded, as he was unable to take advantage of this license by reason of illness.

In reply you are informed that the amount in question was technically covered into the Treasury by miscellaneous warrant No. 2671, third quarter, 1909, and can not be withdrawn, except in consequence of an appropriation made by law.

This department can therefore afford no relief in the matter and it will be necessary for Mr. Hodges to apply to the Congress.

Respectfully,

C. D. HILLES,
Acting Secretary.

I therefore submit this entire case to the Senate, and ask them to take such action as they see fit between this citizen and the Government. There is not a Senator present who, if he had received money under such circumstances, would not return the money without anybody asking for it. I can not see why the Government should not do likewise, especially as the claim is undisputed as to amount, and it is clear that there is absolutely no graft in the proposition, but that a citizen is simply asking the Government to return to him what rightfully belongs to him.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. THOMPSON. I do.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator know how long this man was sick?

Mr. THOMPSON. The greater part of a year, according to my recollection.

Mr. NORRIS. There is not any evidence so far to disclose what was the matter with him or how he happened to get sick or how seriously he was sick.

Mr. THOMPSON. My recollection is that he had typhoid fever, and was sick most of the year.

Mr. NORRIS. The evidence on file does not disclose that.

Mr. THOMPSON. The affidavit may be a little meager in that respect, but the Government officials, the governor of Alaska, and all parties interested admit that Mr. Hodges could not and did not take advantage of the license; and, besides, the Government lost nothing by the transaction.

Mr. NORRIS. They admit that he did not go; but I do not know that they admit that he could not go.

Mr. THOMPSON. I am sure that he did not go, and I am as certainly sure that the Government has lost nothing, but that they have $49 of the money of a good citizen of Kansas, and that the Government officials having the matter in charge have directed that he pursue this very course in getting the money returned.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to ask the Senator if he has any personal knowledge of the man's sickness?

Mr. THOMPSON. Yes; I have a personal recollection of it. He was stricken with typhoid fever. This man is a prominent citizen of Kansas and is a brother of the governor of our State. He lives at Olathe.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator if the assumption by the Senator from Arizona is correct, that Mr. Hodges is a man in very needy circumstances.

Mr. THOMPSON. No; I would not state that. It is not a question of whether or not the man needs it; it is a question as to whether it is right that the Government should keep $49 of his money.

Mr. BRYAN. But the Senator would not have that plea of sympathy by the Senator from Arizona exercise its influence upon the Senate?

Mr. THOMPSON. How is that?

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator would not have the plea of poverty put forth by the Senator from Arizona influence the Senate?

Mr. THOMPSON. I am not asking it on a plea of poverty, and would not ask for it upon that ground. I am asking it on the plain question of whether it is right for the Government to take $49 of the man's money and keep it, when he received absolutely nothing, through no fault of his, in return.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Mr. President, if the Senator will permit me in that connection, I did not say that this particular man was needing any sympathy on account of his poverty. I was speaking somewhat in a personal sense, having in mind my condition if I had been the victim of such circumstances. I am a little surprised, however, in view of the fact that the opposition to this very reasonable bill has become so pronounced, that the committee did not find some real reason for objecting to it. Why did they not plead that his sickness saved his life, and that if he had gotten to Alaska he might have met, to his sorrow, the embrace of the "monarch of the frozen north"? [Laughter.]

Mr. BRYAN. Why does not the Senator put that in now?

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. I say the committee might have made such offset as that, claiming that probably the man's fever saved his life from a bear, and that therefore he ought not to get his money back.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas offer an amendment?

Mr. THOMPSON. I am perfectly willing to submit the matter to the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understood the Senator to say that he desired to offer an amendment reducing the amount carried by the bill.

Mr. THOMPSON. I move to amend the bill by striking out "$50" where it occurs and inserting "$49."

The SECRETARY. In line 5, before the word "out," it is proposed to strike out "$50" and to insert "$49"; in line 6, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$50" and to insert "$49," and in line 12, after the words "sum of," to strike out "$50" and to insert "$49."

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. I do not think that that can be done until the pending motion is disposed of. I have made a motion to indefinitely postpone the bill. If that motion is defeated, then the bill comes up for consideration and amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that it would be proper first to amend the text of the bill and then to see if the Senate desires to indefinitely postpone it.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator from Florida has moved that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that perhaps, in view of the reduction proposed to be made in the amount carried by the bill, the Senate might not desire to postpone it indefinitely.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Let the bill go over and remain on the calendar until we have a quorum here, and then, if the Senator from Florida so desires, he can make his motion to postpone it.

Mr. BRYAN. I realize that it is a very important bill, and perhaps we ought to have a full attendance before we act upon it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. Yes; I insist upon that.

Mr. THOMPSON. Mr. President, I am perfectly willing to submit the matter to the Senators who are present.

Mr. SMOOT. Of course, the bill can not pass without a quorum here; and I want to say, Mr. President, that I would very much prefer to have it settled to-day, if possible, because it has probably already cost the Government for printing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD all that has been said upon it about $400 or $500, although the bill only involves a $49 claim. I am not going to say anything further about it, but I think it ought to be settled to-day.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Let us vote upon it.

Mr. SMITH of Arizona. The Senator from Utah himself says it can not be settled without a quorum.

Mr. SMOOT. We can get a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Florida that the bill be indefinitely postponed.

The motion was agreed to, and the bill was indefinitely postponed.

Mr. SMOOT. I renew my request that the remaining bills on the calendar be passed over.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent to dispense with the further consideration of the calendar under Rule VIII. In the absence of objection, it is so ordered.

LAND AT POPLAR, MONT.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I move that the vote whereby Order of Business No. 185, being the bill (S. 656) granting to the trustees of the diocese of Montana of the Protestant Episcopal Church, for the benefit of "Christ Church On-the-Hill," at Poplar, Mont., lots 5, 6, and 7, in block 30, town site of Poplar, State of Montana, passed the Senate be reconsidered. I am informed by the Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP], who has been here a long time and has had a great deal of experience in Indian affairs, that the Government has never made any charge to religious denominations for necessary lots for their buildings on Indian reservations. I am quite sure that other religious denominations on this same reservation have had lots donated to them without charge, and I do not believe it is right to discriminate in this instance. To sell them the lots at the appraised price is doing nothing for them or for the cause that the church represents. Anybody could buy the lots at the appraised price. The church is a very small, weak, and struggling one—it is really a mission church for the benefit of the Indians—and I do not believe the church authorities could ever raise the money to pay the price for the lots. While the department has recommended that the amendment be put in the bill, we are not bound by the recommendations of the department. I make the motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed, and I submit that motion to the Senate.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senator a question. Is not this the bill which gave the preference right to the church to purchase certain lots, and are not the church authorities themselves willing to pay the appraised price for the lots?

Mr. MYERS. No, sir; I do not know——

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Of course, if the lots were sold in a different manner, a price higher than the appraised price might be obtained, and when the Senator said that anybody could get the lots at the appraised price, of course, he spoke inaccurately. The appraised price would be the lowest price for which they could be sold.

Mr. MYERS. It is a little town, and there is no likelihood of competition in selling lots in that town.

As to the real question of the Senator from Wyoming, the church has never expressed any willingness to pay the value of these lots. That was not the request that was made of me. I was requested to introduce the bill as I did introduce it, providing that the lots be donated to the church, as I am told lots have been donated to other religious denominations in the same town site and on the same reservation.

The church authorities are totally unaware of this provision. It was put in by the committee, on the recommendation of the department, without consultation with the church authorities. Knowing the circumstances, as I do, I know they are not expecting any such condition, and I do not believe they could ever raise the money to pay the price.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. But the Senator certainly agreed to the condition, and said it was perfectly satisfactory.

Mr. MYERS. I do not think I said that. I know in the committee I did not want the condition. I was against it; but others on the committee urged it; and what could I do? I had to submit; but I have the privilege here of voting against it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The Senator's recollection is very different from mine.

Mr. MYERS. I have no particular recollection on the subject.

Mr. SMOOT. I recollect very well, Mr. President, when the bill was under consideration in the committee, and my recollection is exactly the same as that of the Senator from Wyoming.

Mr. MYERS. The Senator will not tax me with saying that that was perfectly agreeable to me.

Mr. SMOOT. The Senator did not say "perfectly agreeable," but, as I understood, he said that it was agreeable to him.

Mr. MYERS. I had to accept it. The majority of the committee voted for it, and I had no alternative. Of course if two Senators tell me that I said a certain thing and I have no recollection about it, I can not deny it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. There seems to be a question of veracity.

Mr. MYERS. I do not know of any question of veracity.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Perhaps not a question of veracity; but the Senator is insisting that other members of the committee insisted on this provision being put into the bill.

Mr. MYERS. It certainly did not come from me.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I wish to ask the Senator if he did not present the bill himself and ask for its consideration, including the amendment proposed by the department, and whether any question arose there as to whether or not it was satisfactory, and if the committee did not pass favorably upon the bill as presented by the Senator from Montana?

Mr. MYERS. I certainly did present the bill, and called it up, and the amendment recommended by the department was adopted by the committee. If the Senator says that I said it was agreeable to me, I can not deny it, because I have no recollection on the subject; but it certainly was not agreeable, although I had to submit. The majority of the committee voted that way.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Why, Mr. President, the Senator knows very well that he is one of those who votes against many members of the committee who always say that these things ought not to be charged for.

Mr. SMOOT. I wish to call the Senator's attention to what the Secretary of the Interior said in relation to this matter.

Mr. WALSH. If I may interrupt the Senator, I desire to say to the Senator from Utah that I trust this motion to reconsider will prevail, and then that the bill may go back on the calendar, and that some time later, when the facts are available and we have an opportunity to inform ourselves about the matter, it may be taken up again.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator from Montana makes that request, of course, I am not going to object at all; but I wish it distinctly understood, in withdrawing any objection to it, that I do so upon the request of the Senator and not because I think it advisable to reconsider the bill.

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I do not know that I would want to say that there have been no cases where churches have been required to pay for their sites, but I do not recall such cases. It has been, I think, the uniform custom, as we have done away with reservations, to grant to the churches that have been established upon the reservations the title to the land upon which they stood, and a small amount of land, varying, of course, with the character of the land, of the reservation, upon the theory that the churches had been of some benefit to the Indians.

Technically, perhaps it would be a question whether the Government could make such a grant, although, exercising the broad powers of trustee, under the authority of the decisions of the courts the grants would be valid.

In this situation, as I understand, there is a small village there, and this church is a small, struggling church. It strikes me it is going out of our way to require them to pay for a site for a church under those circumstances.

I hope the motion to reconsider will prevail and that the amendment will be rejected when we again consider the bill.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I wish to say to the Senator that I do not understand that this particular bill falls into the same category as those suggested by the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. CLAPP. Not exactly, although I understand—and I must say I depend for that understanding upon the statements that have been made here—that this is still Indian land, and the objection of the department is that we have no right to give away the land.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. No; that is not it. As I understand it, this is a town site.

Mr. CLAPP. Well, it is a town site, but the town site is to be sold for the benefit of the Indians.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The town site is laid out, and I do not understand that there is any church upon the land which they wish to occupy.

Mr. CLAPP. I will ask the Senator whether, as he understands, the title is now in the United States without any subsequent obligation to reimburse the Indians?

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I do not know about that.

Mr. CLAPP. I understand that is the claim of the department, that the Government would have no right to give this land away, because it belongs to the Indians.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. A price has been fixed upon the lots. There are certain particular lots in this town site which this particular church wants to obtain, and it desires the preference right of purchase. What we were led to infer from this bill was that it wanted the preference right only to purchase those lots at the appraised price.

Mr. CLAPP. We often grant a preference right under these circumstances, for instance, to some lodge, or for the purpose of some general public affair of the town.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Yes.

Mr. CLAPP. I do not recall any instance, although I would not say there have not been any instances, where we have required a church to pay for a lot. I recall a great many instances where we have not required it. In fact, nearly always, as we extinguish a reservation, we provide in the act that the churches which have been established in the midst of the reservation may retain the land they have with some land about them.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That is true; but that is not this case.

Mr. CLAPP. That is not exactly this case; but I have been led by this debate to understand, and it has been stated on the floor here to-day, that the department objected upon the ground that this was still Indian land, and, consequently, the Government could not make this disposition of it. Now, an entire Indian reservation is Indian land, and perhaps technically, in extinguishing the reservation, we would have no authority to grant a portion of the reservation to a church; but we have always assumed that authority, upon the broad ground that it was to the general benefit of the Indians in that section as well as to the white men.

I simply state that as a matter of practice heretofore. I think it is as little as we can do for this church, in a little town like that, surrounded, as I understand it is, by these Indians, to give it a site.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I am not objecting to giving a site to the church, and I do not want to be put in that position at all.

Mr. CLAPP. Oh, no.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. But I do not want the committee to be put in the position of having bulldozed this amendment into the bill. The bill was passed before the committee with full and free and complete knowledge of all the circumstances.

Mr. CLAPP. Nothing I have said warranted the suggestion that there was any reflection upon the committee in my statement. I certainly can not see how that deduction can be drawn from it.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, these two lots are in a town site, and that town site was created under the provisions of section 14 of the act of May 30, 1908. The town site is situated in the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, and the bill says that the proceeds of the sale of the lands shall be deposited to the credit of the Indians. That is the fact of the matter. They have already been appraised. Lots 5 and 6 have been appraised at $55, and lot 7 at $60. As the Senator from Wyoming says, the bill confers upon this church the preference right of entry of these lots, and that is what the department say in their report. They say they are perfectly willing that the church authorities shall have the preference right of selecting those lots, providing they pay the appraised price, which will go to the credit of the Indians.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The result of it is that if, upon reconsideration, the bill is passed, Congress will be voting a donation of $180 to this church.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President——

Mr. CLAPP. Mr. President, I want to say that there is no distinction in principle between that and what the department recommends. If it is a privilege to get these lots at the appraised value, it is because, otherwise, the lots would sell for more than the appraised value. If the lots would sell for more than the appraised value, by allowing this church to take them at the appraised value, we are invading the right of the Indians in principle just as much as though we should grant the lots free of charge to the church.

In principle there is no difference. There could be no excuse for granting the preference right, except upon the theory that others might come in and bid for the lots more than the appraised value. The moment we grant that we have granted something, I care not how small the amount, as against the resultant rights if the statute as originally enacted were carried out. So it is only a question of amount, and not a question of principle, as between granting the lots free to the church and giving it the privilege of buying the lots for less than other people would pay for them.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, I sought to obtain the attention of the Chair for the purpose of expressing exactly the idea that has been put before the Senate, in a better way than I could hope to do it myself, by the distinguished Senator from Minnesota.

If it is a violation of the trust reposed in the Government of the United States to devote these lands to the use of the church organization for church purposes, it is equally a violation of the trust reposed in the United States for the benefit of the Indians to give the church a preference right to purchase at the appraised value lots which may command, upon an auction sale or otherwise, a price considerably beyond the appraised value. But, Mr. President, whatever view the Interior Department may take with respect to the duty and obligation of the Government of the United States as trustee for the Indians, as the guardian of the Indians, I venture the opinion, and with some deference to the views that are held by the Interior Department, that neither act would be in any just sense a transgression of the trusteeship on the part of the Government of the United States.

It holds the title to these lands, it is true. It holds the title to these lands for the benefit of the Indians. It is the guardian of the Indians, the guardian of their property, because in the estimation of the people of the United States the Indians are not themselves competent to handle their own business affairs. Therefore the Government of the United States is called upon to administer this trust in exactly the same way that a prudent, cautious, businesslike man would handle his own affairs.

Mr. President, I submit to you that if this were a private owner who owned all of the land of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, and if he were expecting, as the Government has a right to expect, that there would be a large amount of immigration to that region; and if he were expecting, as the Government has a right to expect, that there would be a considerable influx of people into the town site of Poplar, he would be consulting his own individual business interests to offer free to any church organization lots in the town site of Poplar upon which to erect a house of worship.

I undertake to say that no man who located a town site anywhere in that part of the country would be so blind to his own interests as to refuse to say to two or three church organizations, "Come in here and select any one of these lots, and I will be glad to give you a deed to them." Why, those who go to this region for the purpose of finding homes will seek their homes—at least we hope they will—in the neighborhood of churches and schools. Thus, sir, I can not conceive how anyone can assert or attempt to maintain the proposition that it is any violation of the trust reposed in the Government of the United States for the benefit of the Indians, or any disregard of its obligations to them as guardian, to devote a small portion of this town site without charge to a church organization for the purpose of erecting a church thereon. I undertake to say that it will be more than made up to the Indians by the added value of the adjacent property, and indeed of the property of the entire town site.

Unless some better reason may be advanced in the future with respect to this matter, I should feel that this action ought to be reconsidered and the amendment stricken out. I trust, therefore, that the motion to reconsider will prevail, and that the matter may lie here until the Senate may be further advised concerning it.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. Mr. President, what I have said was not because of a desire to exclude the good influences of a church in this locality, but it was because the Government of the United States entered into a solemn contract with the Indians, when they took their allotment upon this Indian reservation, that the lands upon that reservation should be sold at a certain price and the money given to the Indians, and that upon town sites the lots should be sold at not less than the appraisement and the money given to the Indians. Now, it would be a queer rule of law that would allow the trustee of property to dispose of his ward's property, either to a church or to anybody else, without authority being given from the court.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. President, of course I should very fully and readily agree with the Senator from Wyoming that if provisions so specific as that are found in the convention with the Indians, as gladly as we might pass an act of this character, we would be violating our contract to do so.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have not before me the convention with the Indians, but I have before me the law carrying the convention into effect.

Mr. WALSH. Of course the Senator will recognize that if that was a mere voluntary act on the part of Congress, prescribing that they should be disposed of in that way, Congress would have the power, without any violation of its obligations, to amend that act and make a different disposition of the matter.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. That, of course, would give rise to another question; but I am assuming, as is the practice, so far as I know, in the opening up of all these reservations, that the distinct, plain features embodied in the law are also embodied in the convention.

Mr. WALSH. If that is the case, as a matter of course the Senator's position can not be assailed.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. The law which carries the convention into effect gives the price per acre at which the land shall be sold or given to settlers under the homestead or other acts of Congress, and fixes the disposition which shall be made of town sites platted on the reservation, and says that they shall be appraised at not less than so much per acre. So, I say, if the Congress of the United States wants to donate to that church the amount which will have to be paid to the Indians for these lots, $170, of course Congress has a right to donate the public money for that purpose; but if to that church, then why not to any other church; and if to one church, where will you draw the line?

I have no objection, of course, to the reconsideration of the bill. I should like to look up that convention.

Mr. MYERS. I hope, then, that the motion to reconsider will prevail, and that this matter may be more fully discussed when the bill comes up again.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS] moves to reconsider the votes by which the bill S. 656 was ordered to a third reading and passed.

The motion to reconsider was agreed to.

Mr. MYERS. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry: Is it not required, when a motion to reconsider prevails, that the original measure shall be voted on again within a certain length of time?

SEVERAL SENATORS. Oh, no.

Mr. MYERS. I desired to know whether I must not, at my peril, call it up at some stated time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No; the bill goes back to the calendar.

Mr. MYERS. If it goes back to the calendar and resumes its rights there, that is all I wish.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be returned to the calendar.

C. E. MOORE.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President, during the consideration of the calendar I was called into the lobby by some of my constituents, and during my absence Senate bill 3610, Order of Business No. 163, was passed over. It is a bill for the relief of C. E. Moore. I ask unanimous consent that it may be taken up.

Mr. SMOOT. Perhaps the Senator from New Jersey will withhold his request until I ask him a question or two about the bill, as it was upon my request that it went over.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Very well. I was absent from the Chamber when it was reached.

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to ask the Senator the cause, if he knows it, of the failure of the Cherryvale National Bank?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. The failure of the Cherryvale National Bank was the cause of this loss. The postmaster at this town, C. E. Moore, had no proper place to deposit his funds, and on the advice of the post-office inspector he was induced to place them in this bank for safe-keeping. The bank failed, and the result was the loss to the postmaster of an amount which I do not precisely recall, but which I think was in the neighborhood of $100 or $140.

I ask for the passage of the bill to relieve the postmaster of that burden. It was no fault of his. The bank was the only place in which he could with even halfway safety place his money. This was not only done on his own judgment, but it was done at the instigation of the post-office inspector. It seems to me that it is manifest justice that the postmaster should be reimbursed.

Mr. SMOOT. I notice that in the report there is no letter of any kind from the department giving a history of the case. Does the Senator remember whether or not the department reported upon the case?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That is my impression from my service on the Post Office Committee.

Mr. SMOOT. Does the Senator say that the Post Office Department instructed Mr. Moore to place his money in this bank?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. The post-office inspector advised him that it was not safe to keep the Government money in the way he was keeping it.

Mr. SMOOT. But was this the only bank in the town?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I think it was the only bank in the town. At all events, there was no evidence that he did otherwise than use his best judgment.

Mr. SMOOT. Upon the assurance of the Senator that the history of this particular case was reported by the department, and it was agreeable to the department, I have not any objection at all.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. That is my best knowledge.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New Jersey make a motion?

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I ask unanimous consent to take up Senate bill 3610, for the relief of C. E. Moore.

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It directs the Postmaster General to cause the accounts of C. E. Moore, late postmaster at Cherryvale, State of Kansas, to be credited with the sum of $130, and to cause the credit to be certified to the Auditor of the Treasury for the Post Office Department, being on account of the loss of $130 in postal funds lost by the failure of the Cherryvale National Bank, of Cherryvale, Kans., it appearing that the loss was without fault or negligence on the part of the late postmaster; and appropriates the sum of $130 out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated to pay the claim.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

REPORT OF JAMES HAMILTON LEWIS, TO THE STATE DEPARTMENT ON CERTAIN CONDITIONS IN JAPAN AND CHINA, MADE AS INVESTIGATOR, JANUARY AND FEBRUARY, 1909.

Mr. LEWIS. Mr. President, I desire to ask the Senate for consent for the publication of a document, but I wish to present the request in such manner that it may be subject to objection under certain rules. Therefore I ask the attention of the Members of the Senate, and particularly the distinguished Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT], whose experience here will justify him in giving me a suggestion; and the senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT], if he can give attention without inconvenience to other matters.

In the early part of 1909 there arose an occasion which permitted certain officers of the administration then in power to commit to my keeping an insignificant trust discharged through the investigation of certain matters in the Orient—in Japan and China—upon which matters, upon my return from the Orient, I made a full report. I addressed the report to the Hon. P. C. Knox, who was then Secretary of State. The distinguished senior Senator from New York [Mr. ROOT] was then just retiring as the Secretary of State. The Acting Secretary of State, Mr. Bacon, after such conference as necessary, gave to me the expression of authority that had been committed to him, no doubt, by those for whom or under whose direction he acted. I have conferred with the Senator from New York and presented to him that which I intend now to do. This was to obtain from him his judgment as to whether I was doing anything that might partake of the nature of a violation of propriety, he having been the Secretary of State, with knowledge of the proper course in such matters.

This is my request:

In the report made by me on these particular matters there is much that relates to the manner in which the shipping of the United States was discriminated against in the ports of Yokohama, Japan; Shanghai, China; and other ports of the Orient. I pointed out, sir, certain municipal regulations which were responsible for such discrimination, or which were reported to be so responsible. They were legal and not subject to charge of treaty violation between our countries, as the regulations were wholly municipal. They become important at this point, in that if the question of the Panama tolls shall be brought up in this honorable body there should come forth such information as may be had as to how the municipal bodies of Europe might regulate the shipping of our country at their docks in retaliation for any general doctrine we might enforce against their vessels.

In this report, Mr. President, after reporting certain matters touching that question it fell as my duty, unpleasantly, after investigating certain charges which were previously intimated and made respecting certain consuls in service—in this report I included certain evidence concerning the conduct of those consuls and drew conclusions from them respecting their conduct, so far as it affected our shipping and the duty of certain consuls.

Mr. President, I am desirous of having my report printed now as a public document, in so far as that report shows and sets forth the operation of these municipal regulations upon our shipping in the form of retaliation upon the United States for certain real or imagined affronts upon their people or commerce by our country or our people, but I do not desire that other portion of my report respecting certain consuls and what had transpired to be published, because some have gone to their reward, some are out of the service, some are still in the service, and I have no desire that a matter shall be at all revived that may make public the reflections made upon any human being necessarily made at the time purely for the service of the State Department. I ask if I may publish the document, eliminating from the document as a whole the portions that relate to their personal conduct.

Mr. SMOOT. May I make a suggestion to the Senator?

Mr. LEWIS. I made the opening observation to have the suggestion of learned Senators. The Senator from New York suggested to me to make such a motion, assuring me he saw no impropriety in such providing—I neglected to say, as suggested by the Senator from New York, that in view of the private nature of certain features of my report, I should get consent of the Secretary of State or the State Department to allow it to be printed.

I yield to my learned friend from Utah.

Mr. SMOOT. I was going to suggest to the Senator that he submit the report and have it referred to the Committee on Printing, and they in turn will take the question up with the Committee on Foreign Relations; and if there is nothing in the report that would interfere at all with the relations between this country and Japan I am quite positive there will be no objection at all to having the report printed.

I will say to the Senator that personally I should like very much to see it printed, and I think that would be the proper way. Then there would be nothing for future criticism of not only those of our own Nation but perhaps those of a foreign country.

Mr. LEWIS. If I understand the Senator correctly—as my only desire is to have particular matters relating to what effect on shipping municipal regulations might have, whether by retaliation or otherwise—the Senator suggests that I have the full report sent from the State Department to the Committee on Foreign Relations and from the Committee on Foreign Relations obtain my consent.

Mr. SMOOT. I would suggest that the Senator himself prepare that part of his report which he desires printed and just submit that part to the Committee on Printing, and they in turn will ask the Committee on Foreign Relations if there is any objection to its being printed. If there is no objection, there will not be any question about the printing.

Mr. LEWIS. And there is no need of its coming back to the Senate?

Mr. SMOOT. Oh, yes. Then the Committee on Printing will report as to whether it should be printed or whether it should not be printed.

Mr. LEWIS. I am willing to submit to that course, and yield to the suggestion of the Senator from Utah.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The matter when received will be referred to the Committee on Printing.

REPUBLIC COAL CO., OF MONTANA.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. President, I wish to make a motion and to state my object in doing it. It will take but a minute.

I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 41) authorizing the Secretary of the Interior to sell or lease certain public lands to the Republic Coal Co., a corporation.

My object in making the motion is simply to get the joint resolution before the Senate, and then if any Members of the Senate wish to proceed with other business I am perfectly willing to have it laid aside. I want to have it made the unfinished business, so that it will come up to-morrow when we get to the point where it would come before the Senate as unfinished business. I do not wish to press it this afternoon, and if my motion carries and anyone wishes I will ask to have it laid aside.

Mr. KENYON. I wish to state, for my own part, that I shall feel under the necessity of calling for a quorum. There should be a full Senate when the joint resolution is considered.

Mr. MYERS. I expressly stated that if the motion should prevail and anybody wishes, I will ask to have it laid aside.

Mr. SMOOT. I hope the Senator from Montana will not try to make the joint resolution the unfinished business to-day. I will say to the Senator that a number of Senators were called out of the city upon this particular day, it being President Lincoln's birthday, and I am quite sure that if the Senator from Iowa should ask for a quorum it would be very difficult to secure one.

Mr. MYERS. I have just stated that I have no desire to consider it this afternoon.

Mr. SMOOT. I will state to the Senator that he will not lose anything by letting it go over until to-morrow, because immediately at the close of the morning business to-morrow he can move to take it up. He will lose nothing by letting it go over to-day.

Mr. KENYON. I wish to state to the Senator from Montana that there are a number of Senators who are interested in opposition to the joint resolution who are not present here to-day. I really think the Senator will gain nothing by trying to push it to-day.

Mr. MYERS. I have expressly stated several times that it was my intention immediately, if the motion should carry, to ask that the joint resolution be laid aside for the day, but as that does not seem to satisfy some Senators, I will withdraw the motion.

READING OF PRESIDENT LINCOLN'S GETTYSBURG ADDRESS.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President, it has seemed to some of us that on this day, the birthday of the great emancipator, it would not be out of place for the Senate to pause a moment to pay some tribute to his memory.

I ask unanimous consent that the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY] may read at this time Lincoln's Gettysburg Address.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Iowa asks unanimous consent that the Senator from Kentucky may read at this time Lincoln's Gettysburg Address. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Senator from Kentucky will proceed.

Mr. BRADLEY read Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, delivered at the dedication of the cemetery at Gettysburg, November 19, 1863, as follows:

"Four score and seven years ago our fathers brought forth on this continent a new nation, conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.

"Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that Nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battle field of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of that field as a final resting place for those who here gave their lives that that Nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this.

"But, in a larger sense, we can not dedicate, we can not consecrate, we can not hallow this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here have consecrated it far above our poor power to add or detract. The world will little note nor long remember what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us, the living, rather, to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us—that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion; that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this Nation under God shall have a new birth of freedom; and that government of the people, by the people, for the people shall not perish from the earth."

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I move that the Senate do now adjourn in honor of the memory of Abraham Lincoln.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 3 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 13, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

THURSDAY, February 12, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

God our Father, make us worthy of the memory of Abraham Lincoln, a great soul whom thou didst send into the world with a destiny to fulfill, not only for his people but for all the world; a superb intellect; a heart of love; a divination which enabled him to see far beyond the vision of his contemporaries; a courage which swept him on without fear where others faltered; a faith which in the darkest hours failed him not. Surely he belongs to the ages, will live in the ages, and while he lives this Republic will live to bless mankind. "O Lord, God of hosts, be with us yet, lest we forget" his sublime example and the stupendous work he accomplished, "That government of the people, by the people, for the people shall not perish from the earth." For Thine is the kingdom and the power and the glory forever. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

Mr. RUSSELL. Mr. Speaker, this is the anniversary of Abraham Lincoln's birthday, and I ask unanimous consent to have read at the Clerk's desk his speech delivered at Gettysburg nearly 51 years ago.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that Abraham Lincoln's speech at Gettysburg be read at the Clerk's desk. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Chair appoints the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] to read it.

Mr. RUSSELL, from the Clerk's desk, read Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, delivered at the dedication of the cemetery at Gettysburg, November 19, 1863, as follows:

"Four score and seven years ago our fathers brought forth on this continent a new Nation, conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.

[Prolonged applause.]

The SPEAKER. By special order, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] is permitted to address the House for 30 minutes on the life and character of Abraham Lincoln. [Applause.]

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, I esteem it no small privilege or little honor to be permitted to speak to this group of legislators upon what I regard as one of the most remarkable characters in human history. Just 53 years ago yesterday, standing upon the platform of a train that was to bear him to Washington, Abraham Lincoln addressed a large concourse of people in his city of Springfield, in which address he said:

Will you not pray for me that the same Arm that supported the great Washington may be my support? For with that support I can accomplish my duty; without it I can not do anything.

The train stopped at the little town of Tolono, where, as in every town through which the train passed, a large concourse of people gathered. The train stopped for the engine to take water. Mr. Lincoln was not expected to speak, but finally he did respond to the great cry of the people who had gathered, and came out on the platform and said:

I am upon a journey fraught with a great deal of concern to you and to me. May the words of the poet still be true, "Behind the clouds the sun is still shining." Good-by. God bless you!

He then resumed his seat in the train.

Some men make their place in history by notable utterances, others by notable deeds. Few in the world's history have the credit of both, and to that class belongs Abraham Lincoln. At an early time in his political career, speaking upon the most sensitive question before the country then or since, he showed his courage by saying:

Broken by it I, too, may be; bow to it, I never will. The probability that we may fail in a worthy cause is not a sufficient justification for our refusing to support it.

In 1855, in a letter to Judge Robertson, of Kentucky, he said:

The one question that wears upon me is, Can our country permanently endure half slave and half free? It is too much for me. May God in his mercy superintend the solution.

Three years later, in 1858, in a convention in Springfield, Ill., where he was nominated for the position of Senator—for the seat then occupied by Douglas—he announced the same principle, "I do not believe that this Government can permanently endure half slave and half free." This announcement sounded like a fire bell would sound at the hour of midnight in a country village. It was taken up by the entire country. It was quoted in the London Times and other publications of Europe. It was pronounced by many of our statesmen as revolutionary. Stephen A. Douglas, one of the brainiest men of the country, and one of the most courageous as well as patriotic, believed that it was a dangerous doctrine, and announced that he would reply to it in his home city of Chicago on the 9th of July.

Mr. Lincoln went to Chicago to be present on that occasion. He heard one of the most powerful arguments against his position that probably could be made. At the close of that meeting he arose and, in substance, said:

I shall be here to-morrow night, at which time I will pay my respects to my friend, the judge, who has charged me with an attempt to array one section of the country against the other. I hope some of you will come out to hear my side of the story.

The next night Mr. Lincoln greeted a great audience, upon which he made a profound impression. When Mr. Douglas went to Bloomington, Ill., to speak, Mr. Lincoln followed him. Mr. Douglas noticed while he was speaking that Mr. Lincoln was in his audience again. He referred to the fact with some feeling. On the afternoon of the 17th of July Mr. Douglas spoke in Springfield, and on that night Mr. Lincoln also spoke. Then Mr. Lincoln wrote a challenge to Mr. Douglas; asked him to go on the same platform with him, divide the time, and discuss the question. The result of this was that a series of debates, seven in number, the most notable in American political history, was arranged. In the debate, when Mr. Douglas propounded a series of questions to Mr. Lincoln, Mr. Lincoln replied to them categorically, and then propounded a series, and dwelt upon one as the key to the entire situation. That question was:

Can the people of a Territory in any lawful manner, against the wishes of the citizens of any of the States, exclude slavery from within its limit prior to the adoption of a State constitution?

He pressed it. Mr. Douglas was the author of the popular sovereignty scheme, as you all know, the authority of control of such questions must be left to the people of the States. The friends of Mr. Lincoln went to him and said, "Do not press that question; if you insist on an answer you can never be elected to the senatorship in this country." Mr. Lincoln replied, "If Mr. Douglas answers my question, yes or no, he can never be elected President of this Nation, and I am looking for larger game." That did not mean that Mr. Lincoln was at that time looking for himself to the Presidency, because that debate was in 1858, and as late as 1859 Mr. Lincoln replied to a letter written to him by a friend about being Vice President, "I am not fit to be Vice President of the United States." Mr. Lincoln in 1858 was simply stating that if Mr. Douglas answered that question he, Mr. Douglas, could never be elected to the highest position in the gift of the people of the country. In 1859 Mr. Lincoln made that notable speech in Columbus, Ohio, one of the greatest contributions to the political literature of his day. Then in February of 1860, speaking in the heart of New York City at Cooper Union he gave, I think, the finest type of the periodic sentence in a long speech to be found anywhere. From the standpoint of the rhetorician as a critic this long speech is a gem in American political literature. This is the meeting over which the eminent poet Bryant presided and introduced Lincoln as a "distinguished citizen of the United States." I believe, gentlemen, that the Cooper Union speech is the finest exposition of the sensitive issue, and that it was put in the most rhetorical form of any long speech in our literature, and he did it with such magnanimity. He said:

If slavery is right, then all that the South asks we can readily grant. If slavery is wrong, then all that the North asks the South can readily grant. Their thinking it right and our thinking it wrong is the precise point upon which turns this whole controversy; but thinking it wrong, as we do, we can afford to leave it where it now exists by virtue of the law, but can we afford to allow it to go into new territory?

There, for the first time the real issue was presented by Mr. Lincoln; not the issue of the abolitionist, but the issue of Mr. Lincoln of the constitutional power of the Congress to control property in a Territory, which was to give rise to an organization of public opinion that was not to abate until slavery was no more. That was in 1860. In 1861, in his famous inaugural, he said:

Friends can make laws easier than enemies can make treaties. We must not be enemies; we must be friends. Though passion may have strained, it must not break the bonds of our affection. The mystic chords of memory stretching from every battle field and patriot's grave to every heart and hearthstone all over this broad land will swell the chorus of the Union when again touched, as it surely will be, by the better angels of our nature.

With his keen perception of the mighty issue he was also wonderfully magnanimous.

This magnanimity that was uttered at that time had been uttered in the town of Steubenville, Ohio, a little while before, when on his way to Washington, looking across to the State of Virginia, his father's native State, he said to that concourse of people on the Ohio side:

Only the river divides us, and you on the other side are just as sincere in your contention as we on this side.

On this trip he addressed the Legislatures of Indiana, Ohio, New York, and Pennsylvania, all notable speeches, teeming with evidence of his grasp of the situation facing him. When he reached Philadelphia, out in front of old Independence Hall, he said on the occasion of raising the American flag over the hall:

What principle has kept our States so long together? It is not the mere fact of separation from the mother country, but it is the principle found in the Declaration of Independence, penned by the immortal Jefferson and adopted in this hall, that gave promise not alone to the people of our own country but to all the people of all the world that ere long the weight shall be lifted from the shoulders of all men and all shall have an equal chance. Now, my fellow citizens, can the Nation be saved upon that basis? If it can and I can help to save it I am the happiest man in it, but if it can not I was about to say I would rather be assassinated on this spot than to surrender it.

That was on the 22d day of February, 1861, in the famous Independence City, out in front of Independence Hall. I mention these historical utterances, so notable and significant in their meaning, because I would like to have this body recall this wonderful ability in expression, the like of which probably is not known in any political orator or figure in our country. Why, it was none other than Prof. Bailey, a professor of rhetoric in a famous American college, who had been so charmed with the pure English of this plain statesman of the West that he sought an interview to ascertain the secret of his power. Mr. Lincoln at first expressed surprise that he had any power in utterance, but when pressed he substantially said: "Well, all I can remember is that when neighbors would come to my father's house and talk to father in language I did not understand, I would become offended, sometimes, and I would find myself going to bed that night unable to sleep. I bounded it on the north, south, east, and west until I had caught the idea, and then I said it myself, and when I said it I used the language I would use when talking to the boys on the street." Prof. Bailey said: "That is one of the most splendid educational principles I have ever received from any man." To which Mr. Lincoln expressed great surprise.

Mr. Lincoln's ability to express the English language consisted in the use of the small word. Eighty-five per cent of his words are monosyllabic. He never employed a big word when a little one would do. He never clouded his thought by a multiplicity of words. His sentences were always short and their meaning never involved. In a word, he never spoke to be heard, but always to be understood; and therefore he was not always elegant from the standpoint of the rhetorician, but wonderfully expressive. For example, he would say, "I dumped it into a hole"; but Douglas, the rhetorician, would say, "I deposited it into a cavity," which is a good deal better from the standard rule of expression. Lincoln would say, "I dug a ditch"; Douglas would say, "I excavated a channel." Lincoln said, 'My defeat by Douglas in 1858 was due to bad luck; I ran at the wrong time"; Douglas said, "It was due to a strange fortuitous combination of inopportune contingencies that nobody could have foreseen." Here stands Stephen A. Douglas, a master of rhetoric; Abraham Lincoln, a master of logic; Stephen A. Douglas, eloquent in words; Abraham Lincoln, eloquent in thought; Stephen A. Douglas, appealing to expediency; Abraham Lincoln, appealing to right. Douglas said, "I do not care whether you vote slavery up or vote it down." Lincoln said, "I care very much about what most people care most about." He turned his back upon his audience and spoke to Douglas, "Is it not a false philosophy to build a system upon the basis that you do not care anything about what most people care most about?" It was for that sentence that Mr. Douglas paid him such a tribute in three weeks after the close of those debates. Mr. Lincoln was powerful in this series of debates, and it was here that his wonderful ability as a thinker and debater was first disclosed to the public. I say to you men of Congress that Abraham Lincoln had not an equal on the American platform in the use of pure Anglo-Saxon.

If you think that I am overstating, I have two items of evidence that any lawyer will accept as fairly conclusive. In Oxford University, England, you will hear the finest English taught and spoken of any place in the world. An American visiting this great seat of learning will be led to a corridor where can be read one of the famous letters written by this man, known to the world as unlettered, or illiterate, because he was not a collegiate, the letter to Mrs. Bixby, the mother of five sons, all of whom gave their lives for their country:

DEAR MADAM: I have been shown in the files of the War Department a statement of the adjutant general of Massachusetts that you are the mother of five sons who have died gloriously on the field of battle. I feel how weak and fruitless must be any words of mine which should attempt to beguile you from the grief of a loss so overwhelming. But I can not refrain from tendering to you the consolation which may be found in the thanks of the Republic they died to save. I pray that our heavenly Father may assuage the anguish of your bereavement and leave you only the cherished memory of the loved and lost, and the solemn pride that must be yours to have laid so costly a sacrifice on the altar of freedom.

Yours, very sincerely and respectfully,

ABRAHAM LINCOLN.

This letter, thus permanently preserved, is pronounced by the savants of Oxford as one of the finest letters of condolence ever written in our language. Note its beauty, its purity, its sublimity.

If that is not sufficient evidence, then go to the British Museum, where can be found books enough, if put on a single shelf, to reach 40 miles. Ask the authorities there what their judgment is as to the finest short speech in the English language. You will be handed at once this splendid piece of rhetoric and high mark of literary appreciation, as well as statesmanlike delivery, at Gettysburg, November 19, 1863:

Fourscore and seven years ago our fathers brought forth on this continent a new Nation, conceived in liberty and dedicated to the proposition that all men are created equal.

Now we are engaged in a great civil war, testing whether that Nation, or any nation so conceived and so dedicated, can long endure. We are met on a great battle field of that war. We have come to dedicate a portion of that field as a final resting place for those who here gave their lives that that Nation might live. It is altogether fitting and proper that we should do this.

But, in a larger sense, we can not dedicate, we can not consecrate, we can not hallow this ground. The brave men, living and dead, who struggled here have consecrated it far above our poor power to add or detract. The world will little note nor long remember what we say here, but it can never forget what they did here. It is for us, the living, rather to be dedicated here to the unfinished work which they who fought here have thus far so nobly advanced. It is rather for us to be here dedicated to the great task remaining before us—that from these honored dead we take increased devotion to that cause for which they gave the last full measure of devotion; that we here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this Nation under God shall have a new birth of freedom; and that government of the people, by the people, for the people shall not perish from the earth.

When he finished, the orator of the day, Edward Everett, walked over to the President, took his hand, and in substance said: "Mr. President, if I could congratulate myself upon the belief that in two and a quarter hours I had been enabled to put the issue as clearly as you have done it in two and a quarter minutes, I would regard myself as a happy man."

This speech the British Museum authorities regard as one of the finest short speeches uttered in the English language. Who is this man that he could thus speak and write? Born in a hut, of the most humble surroundings, at the age of 7 he accompanied his parents and sister into Indiana, where they lived one winter in an open camp with but three sides to it. And yet, without ever having, as a pupil, a lead pencil or a piece of paper, a slate pencil or a slate, without having gone to school but six months all told, according to his own statement, here is a man thus starting with no convenience who has reached a plane, an ability to speak the English language, not yet reached by scholars of the day. Where is the secret? I think that it might be found in the sort of books he read. What are they?

The one book with which he was quite familiar was King James's version of the Bible. I once heard Parks Cadman, pastor of the greatest Congregational Church in the world, say that Abraham Lincoln's verbal knowledge of the Bible was not equaled by the theologians. I would not state that upon my own authority, but I cite it upon his authority. He knew Shakespeare, and in the darkest hours of the Nation's life, in the midst of great depression, often when the Cabinet was in session, Mr. Lincoln would throw himself back in an armchair and quote page after page of Shakespeare, until the scholarly Seward would turn to him and say: "Why, Mr. President, our understanding has been from the beginning that you have never gone to school, and yet you quote Shakespeare as I do not, and I am regarded as somewhat of a Shakespearean scholar."

Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress was another book that he read. Feed a growing mind upon the English of these texts and you will have a choice of English. I concede the speeches before mentioned to be a high rank of expression, but I think the high-water mark was reached on another occasion, when looking back over four years of awful war, a period of the bitterest hatred and almost vicious calumny, on the part of his foes at least, and during which period no man's heart was bleeding more than his, he said:

Both read the same Bible and pray to the same God, and each invokes His aid against the other. The prayers of both could not be answered. That of neither has been answered fully. The Almighty has His own purposes. If we shall suppose that American slavery is one of those offenses which in the providence of God must needs come, but which, having continued through His appointed time, He now wills to remove, and that He gives to both North and South this terrible war as the woe due to those by whom the offense came, shall we discern therein any departure from those divine attributes which the believers in a living God always ascribe to Him?

Fondly do we hope, fervently do we pray, that this mighty scourge of war may speedily pass away. Yet, if God wills that it continue until all the wealth piled up by the bondsman's 250 years of unrequited toil shall be sunk and until every drop of blood drawn with the lash shall be paid by another drawn by the sword, as was said 3,000 years ago, so still it must be said: "The judgments of the Lord are true and righteous altogether." With malice toward none, with charity for all, with firmness in the right as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are now in, to bind up the Nation's wounds, to care for him who shall have borne the battle and for his widow and his orphan, to do all which may achieve and cherish a just and lasting peace among ourselves and with all nations.

Here is one of the finest prose poems in the literature of our language, and, in my judgment, is the highest reach in refinement of utterance we have from this remarkable leader of men not only in thought but as well in deed.

And I think of how he suffered in the White House as the head of the Nation, so distracted by civil war and he helpless to end the strife. One night he said to Frank Carpenter at the dead hour of midnight, standing with his hands in this shape [indicating]: "Oh, Carp, Carp, what would I give to-night in exchange for this wearisome hospital of pain and woe that they call the White House for the place that is occupied by some poor boy that sleeps under the sod in a southern battle field? I can not stand this thing much longer. I have got to have some relief." When I read from Carpenter, the painter of the famous emancipation picture, I instinctively say: "Oh, Jerusalem, Jerusalem, how oft would I have gathered thee as a hen gathereth her chicks under her wings, but ye would not."

Oh, my dissatisfied countrymen, you who can not understand the suffering and the heartbeats, the great distress of the head of the Nation, how changed would be your attitude if you could but see him in his agony for the Nation. If we could have understood his sufferings, we would not have had the feelings of bitterness that were so often expressed. My friends, this hatred was not confined to any one section of the country, as you well know. I was rocked in a cradle over which was sung the lullaby:

Old Abe Lincoln is dead and gone.
Hurrah! Hurrah!

And I am not the only one in the State of Ohio who was taught that he was not a patriot. But when I come to look into his words and to study his acts and with regard for his magnanimity, together with his intellectuality, I can easily understand why, in the lapse of half a century, there is such universal approval now of the characteristics of that great man in all parts, not only of our Nation but of the world.

I once asked one of the best editors in this country or in any other, Charles A. Dana, who knew Mr. Lincoln as perhaps no other man knew him during the period that covered the war, what he thought was Lincoln's secret of greatness. Quickly he said: "His control of men." And then he added: "If a man can not control other men, then his power is limited to what he can do alone. On the other hand, if he can control men his power is multiplied just to the number of men he controls."

Mr. Lincoln had that ability to differ from men and yet to win them. Note how he struggled with the great commoner, Thaddeus Stevens. When Lincoln insisted upon his method of reconstruction, which Stevens denounced as his shorthand method, destined to swamp the American Congress by Confederate leaders, Lincoln put it in this homely way, or substantially in these terms: "Stevens, you want what I want, but we do not go after it in the same way. Concede that my policy, which you criticize, is now in its beginning to what the policy is when it is finished, as an egg is to the chicken when it is hatched, do you not think you will get that egg quicker by hatching it than by smashing it?" A homely illustration that carries in it a sound philosophy.

That is an example of the way he had of reaching Mr. Stevens. He had his own way of dealing with the leaders of the day, such men as Mr. Seward, and especially Mr. Stanton, both of whom he regarded as the greatest Secretaries of their respective departments. In the early part of the administration the country looked upon Mr. Lincoln as a much inferior man to Mr. Seward. None knew this better than the great Secretary. This explains the strange suggestion of Seward.

He reminded Lincoln that after so long the Government was still without a policy, and said that while he did not seek it, if the President desired, he would assume the responsibility. The reply by Lincoln is historic, and discloses his rare talent to control men. The policy was forthcoming, but it was not that of any Cabinet officer. A similar instance is when he rejected Seward's proposed adjustment of the Trent affair and directed it himself by taking Seward's proposed plan and blue-penciling two-thirds of it as useless and dangerous. In spite of this wide difference between them, the time came when Mr. Seward said, "I know the men of my time, and I believe Mr. Lincoln was truly the best man I ever met in public life."

On the night of the second election quite a scene took place between Lincoln and Stanton. Dana said, "Whitelaw Reid came in, and I, as a matter of courtesy, withdrew and went into another room, where Stanton was. It was not long before I noticed that Stanton was quite indignant. He was walking the floor greatly disturbed. I said to him, 'What troubles you, Mr. Secretary?' and he pointed his hand through the door toward Lincoln." Dana said that Lincoln at that moment was a very comical figure. He was sitting leaning back against the wall, his legs crossed, and laughing convulsively. He had just read to Reid something from the writings of Petroleum V. Nasby, the editor and humorist of the Toledo Blade, at that time almost as popular a writer as was Mark Twain later. "Stanton noticing that he was reading Petroleum V. Nasby seemed so angry," says Mr. Dana, "that he turned to me and said. 'Look there. There sits the man around whom the heartstrings of this Nation are wrapped to-night, being amused over a damned mountebank.'" Evidently Mr. Lincoln must have heard him, for he immediately called to Mr. Stanton, "Mr. Secretary, have you ever read anything written by Petroleum V. Neesby?" And Whitelaw Reid, who was sitting by, said, "Nasby; Mr. President, Nasby," when Mr. Lincoln repeated Nasby. Mr. Stanton replied, "No; I haven't time for such buncombe." Mr. Lincoln said, "Here is some buncombe that you would enjoy." He added, "Nasby says there are three kinds of fools. There is the natural fool and the educated fool, and when you take a natural fool and try to educate him you have a damphool." [Laughter.] Dana said Stanton did not enjoy the joke at all. [Renewed laughter.]

Mr. Stanton seemed so different from Mr. Lincoln, and people are speculating now as to whether they were friendly to one another. The difference was one of temperament. They were equally sincere and patriotic. The brusk demeanor of the Secretary was ever in sharp contrast with the childlike kindness and affectionate regard of the great President. The two men quite frequently clashed for the moment over policies. These differences usually grew out of Lincoln's pardoning habit. You will recall that Lincoln ordered some persons that had been imprisoned at Baltimore upon the charge of treason for the sale of goods to the Confederacy to be liberated, against the wishes of Stanton, and Judge Holt——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] should have an extension of an hour.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that my colleague be allowed to proceed to the conclusion of his remarks.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] asks unanimous consent that his colleague [Mr. FESS] be permitted to proceed without limit. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I thank you and the Members of the House for this courtesy, and I shall certainly respect it enough not to keep you very long. [Cries of "Go on!"] That gavel knocked out of my mind what I was saying. [Laughter.]

A MEMBER. You were talking about certain kinds of fools. [Laughter.]

Mr. FESS. It was the incident over in Baltimore. It was said that Judge Holt, of Kentucky, went over in confidence on the order of the President and made some arrangement to let the people out without regard to Mr. Stanton's wishes. Mr. Stanton was very much enraged, and he called Mr. Holt, a subordinate, "on the carpet"; but Judge Holt defended himself on the ground that the President had ordered him to do it. It is reported that Mr. Stanton said, "Did Lincoln order you to do that?" Holt said he did. Stanton hesitated a moment and then said, "Holt, the only thing left us is to get rid of that baboon in the White House."

That is a very serious statement to make on the floor of this House when regarded from the standpoint of the relation between chief and subordinate, but it is in the reminiscences. When the matter came to the notice of Mr. Lincoln he said in good humor, "Did Stanton say that?" He was assured that he had, and another person speaking with him said, "I would not endure the insult." Lincoln said, "Insult? That is no insult. All he said was that I was a baboon, and that is only a matter of opinion, sir," and then added, "and the thing that concerns me most is that Stanton said it, and I find he is usually right." [Laughter and applause.]

Oh, such magnanimity, when a difference clothes itself in language of insult as well as ridicule, in such a great soul; to differ from men and still hold their respect to the last was a quality possessed in abundance by the great Lincoln.

On one occasion when Stanton chided the President for allowing a mother-in-law to impose upon him on behalf of her daughter whose husband was to be shot for desertion, in which the Secretary expressed a doubt whether the old lady really cared about the fate of the man, Mr. Lincoln replied, "It may be she did not. I did not see the lady while she was speaking. I only saw the poor young woman who was so soon to become a widow unless I interposed."

Here is but one of scores of incidents to show his magnanimous spirit to his inferior, and at the same time that beautiful temper of mercy of which many were beneficiaries.

In evidence of this power over men note this incident: A retired Presbyterian minister said to me recently, "My inspiration and success as a preacher came from Lincoln, when after I had made my report to Congress of the work of the Sanitary and Christian Commission, Mr. Lincoln said to me, 'The good God has blessed you, young man, with power to influence men. Go on in the way you have started. Pay more attention to the hearts of men rather than to their heads.'" That became my guiding principle.

What is the secret of Mr. Lincoln's ability to control men like Seward and Stanton and Stevens, and other men who were so wonderfully different in temperament and eminently superior to him in all that went to make up modern standards? I think I can give a solution to the mystery. It is in a combination of two qualities that are usually found in leadership. The one is that wonderful fund of humor and the other is that deep sense of pathos. At one moment Mr. Lincoln would make you laugh. At another moment you would want to cry. Strange as it may seem, these seeming contradictories are generally present in the same person. If Lincoln was the most comical man in public life, he was certainly the saddest. The world tires of the person who plays on but one string.

I distinctly recall an incident that is told by Carpenter. Mr. Lincoln frequently went out here to the hospital near Washington, not simply to be in the presence of sorrow but to comfort the wounded soldiers, many of whom were dying by the inch. On one occasion he had spent a good deal of time out there—most of the day. Just as he was ready to get into the carriage to return, somebody rushed out and said to one of the men with him, "I wish you would tell the President that in a part of the hospital that he did not visit there is a Confederate soldier, and he is dying; he wants to see the President." The matter was referred to the President, and he said, "I shall go back." He excused himself for a moment, and was led back to where the Confederate soldier was lying upon the cot, and when he came to the sufferer all that he could hear the soldier say was, "I knew they were mistaken; I knew they were mistaken."

Evidently he had been told that Mr. Lincoln was the sort of a man that I had been taught he was, and he had found that he was not. When Mr. Lincoln took his hand and asked him what he could do, he said, "The surgeon says I can not get well; I do not know anybody here, and I wanted to see you before I died." When Mr. Lincoln asked him what he could do, there was something said by the poor boy in regard to what he wanted sent home, and then Mr. Lincoln stooped and took his hand in his two. The President, standing in that fashion, said, "Now, my boy, is there anything else I can do? I have been here most of the day; I am busy, and I must go." The boy said, in broken tones, "Oh, I thought, if you did not mind, you might stay and see me through." And there stood the President bending over the dying soldier and copious tears dropping upon his coat sleeve.

Men of this House, that is the most beautiful picture in American history. If I were a painter and wanted to paint Lincoln, I would have to seize upon some particular moment of time, because you can not paint duration in a picture, and I would seize the moment when the President of this Nation, the mightiest Republic on earth, stooped and wept over a dying Confederate soldier, dying away from home. That is a most beautiful representation of the real Lincoln. [Applause.]

He has been misunderstood in regard to the slavery agitation. Mr. Lincoln's greatest work, gentlemen, was in the preservation of the Union. Do you not remember in 1863 what a bitter letter he received from Horace Greeley, published in the New York Tribune as an open letter to the President, in which Greeley called him "an opportunist"? Mr. Lincoln replied to it—and I want to give you exactly his reply; and, therefore, you will allow me to read that reply. It is one of the suggestive utterances of his life. He replied:

As to the policy I seem to be pursuing, I have not meant to leave anyone in doubt. I would save the Union. I would save it in the shortest way under the Constitution. The sooner the national authority can be restored the nearer the Union will be the Union as it was. If there be those who would not save the Union unless they could at the same time save slavery, I do not agree with them. If there be those who would not save the Union unless at the same time they could destroy slavery, I do not agree with them. My paramount object is to save the Union and not either to save or to destroy slavery. If I could save the Union without freeing any slave, I would do it. If I could save it by freeing all the slaves, I would do it.

Then he added:

I am ready to accept new views as soon as they are proved to be true views.

I do not mean here to minimize the title of the "great emancipator." I simply mean that the one supreme purpose of his career was to preserve the Union. This does not and should not detract from his achievement as the leader who, by the stroke of his pen, lifted a race out of human chattelhood into the atmosphere of American citizenship. But that achievement was destined to take place; if not by his hand, then by another's. The institution of slavery was indicted by the civilization of the centuries and had to succumb. However, this could not be said of the preservation of the Union. The greatest single achievement in the history of civil government in the world is the preservation of republican form of government. Since the close of the Civil War this idea has spread over the world like the waters cover the sea. There is not a single country that is not feeling the mighty impulses for self-government, the finest example of which is our own Republic. In fixing Lincoln's place in history it will not be so much the emancipator of a race as the savior of a nation and republican government on the earth. Both of these accomplishments demanded the best talent of head and heart.

He had other elements of statesmanship. His heart throbs for liberty never carried him to the shoals of license. On the other hand, reverence for law was fundamental with him. On one occasion he said:

Let reverence for the law be breathed by every American mother to the babe that prattles on her lap; let it be taught in schools and colleges; let it be preached from the pulpit, proclaimed in legislative halls, and enforced in courts of justice. And, in short, let it become the political religion of the Nation, and let the old and the young, the rich and the poor, the grave and the gay, of all sexes and tongues and colors and conditions, sacrifice unceasingly upon its altars.

When he was criticized for the appointment of Stanton, who had not supported him, a friend said to him, "Why, Stanton has not been in your favor." Mr. Lincoln said, "That is no matter. I met him down in Cincinnati in a lawsuit where I tested his mettle, and I know his power." And then the interested party said, "But you are the first President of a new party, and you would have a splendid opportunity to build up a political organization." Members of Congress listen to Lincoln in reply: "We will save the Union first and build a party out of what is left." That is another element of statesmanship, it seems to me.

On the other hand, notice the humor. May I give you an incident that Dana gave me? Lincoln was pestered with office seekers, strange to say, in that day as we are not so much (?) in this. These office seekers came from every place. One day Mr. Lincoln saw three men coming up the walk toward the White House. At the time he seemed in exceptional spirits with humor bubbling over. Lincoln was looking out of the window. He said, "Dana, look. Those three men have been here before. This is the third or fourth time they have come. They want an office. I do not know even where it is. I do not know whether it is in Missouri or Illinois. It would not make any difference whether Tom, Dick, or Harry had it. It will not pay over $180 a year." Dana urged him not to receive them, when Lincoln replied, "Oh, yes; I will receive them." About that time the man whose duty it was to announce callers to the President came in and told him there were three men from the West who wanted to see him, and asked what he should say to them. Lincoln said, "Bring them in and let them sit down here." I wish I could tell this story as Dana told it, but I can not. Dana said the three men came in and took their seats, and Mr. Lincoln, after greeting them, said to them, "Excuse me, gentlemen, until I finish a story I was telling Dana." He had not been telling any story at all, but he began: "I think I was about 13 years old. Our fashion was to meet in Sunday school, where we would read sometimes in the Old Testament and sometimes in the New. On this particular day we were reading in the Old about the three Hebrew children. In that class we always would stand in line; the first boy would read and then the next, and if anybody made a mistake the fellow next to him would correct him, turn him down, and go up. There was one fellow in the class, about as tall as I was, who never had learned to read, and he always stood at the foot. (Just excuse me, gentlemen, in a few minutes I will be through with this.) When it came this fellow's turn to read, he read something like this, holding his finger on the page to keep the place, and reading in a loud monotonous tone, hesitating on every word: 'And — a — part — of — the — kingdom — was — to — be — ruled — over — by — by — by ——' 'Well,' said the teacher, 'read on, read on.' 'By — Meshach, —— Shadrach, —— and —— Abed-nego.' (Just excuse me, gentlemen, in a few minutes I will be through.) Then the next boy read, and then the next one, and it came around to this boy at the foot again, and the feacher said to him, 'Read that fourteenth verse.' It was the same verse. So he read the same verse again, and in the same hesitating way: 'And — a — part — of — the — kingdom — was — to — be — ruled — over — by — by — by —— well, if there don't come them same three gol durned fools again.'" [Laughter.]

The leader said, "Mr. President, we will come some time when you are not so busy." As soon as they were out Lincoln said to Dana, "Didn't we fetch 'em this time?"

If you link the quality of humor, which is always present, to the other quality of pathos, which was instinctive with him, you have the elements in combination that made him the leader of men. It would be easy to illustrate the two qualities by the great number of incidents similar to these I have mentioned in his life.

Then there are two other abiding qualities in the man that I find in my study of him that I think this House ought now to think about. They are the fundamental qualities that make his name an increasingly important one in our history. The first one is faith in the people. I do not believe America shows in her history any man who had equal faith in the common goodness of mankind. It welled up in both word and deed upon every hand, in season and out of season. I have the greatest admiration for Samuel Adams, of Massachusetts—the man of the town meeting and one of the country's most distinguished democrats, past or present. I have also the greatest admiration for Thomas Jefferson, of Virginia, the author of the Declaration of Independence and the founder of the Democratic Party.

As a man who has lived all his life in the study of history, I have a wonderful admiration for the hold those men had upon the people, in their faith in the people. But, Members of this House, with due regard for the faith of the fathers, I think Abraham Lincoln was in the truest sense a man of the people, one among the people, and in sympathy with the people beyond any man in our history. I do not think any man can come to his shoulders in this attribute if measured by what he said, by what he did, by what he really was in that respect. When a man said to him, "The people will go wrong on this matter," he replied, "Intellectually, probably they may; morally, never." The collective wisdom expressed in morals is always better than individual wisdom. "In the multitude of counsel there is safety," said he, quoting it from the Good Book. I could give you numerous suggestions falling from his lips, expressions like these: "God must have loved the common people, for He made so many of them." "You can fool all of the people some of the time, some of the people all of the time, but you can not fool all of the people all of the time." You know people have said it was Barnum who said that. It was not. It was Lincoln. It is Lincolnian. He believed in the people. In other words, he did not think the Government was going to the bowwows if attempts were made at some innovation, or changes were inaugurated in the interest of the public. He never failed to see the distinction between an attempt to suppress public opinion and to direct public opinion. The first is unwise; the second is rational. He fearlessly indicted the cowardice of such procedure. After the fugitive-slave law was made a part of the Compromise of 1850, both of the leading platforms, Whig and Democratic, declared that the Compromise was the settlement of the slavery issue and forbade its further discussion. Lincoln knew such cowardice was like resolving the tide should cease to flow. Our business is to direct public opinion in the right channels, and not to attempt to suppress it. That was Lincolnian.

Another quality of his nature was his deep religious convictions. I do not believe we ever had any man in the presidential chair who was so profoundly religious in nature as Abraham Lincoln. Prof. Brooks, who was at the head of the educational movement in Illinois, came to him with the query, "Mr. Lincoln, we have been discussing your religious convictions." Mr. Lincoln said, "Well, what about it?" "We wondered how much time, if any, you devote to your relationship with your God." Mr. Lincoln turned to him and said, "Professor, I spend more time upon the thought of my relationship with my God than upon all other questions combined." That was Lincoln at a time when he had no reason to assert anything untrue about his belief. You will remember that when the brilliant, peerless leader, Stonewall Jackson, was almost within reach of this Capital City and the Cabinet was very much alarmed, Mr. Lincoln said, "The thing I fear about Stonewall Jackson is that he is a praying general; he prays before he goes into battle." A high tribute by the head of the Nation to that peerless soldier.

Mr. Lincoln had an abiding faith in God. Notice his statement at Springfield when he bade farewell to his neighbors on February 11, 1861, and called upon them to give him their prayers. Notice his statement in his first inaugural:

Is not a firm reliance upon Him who has never yet forsaken our favored land sufficient to adjust our differences?

Notice him in his second inaugural. His judgments are righteous altogether. Hear him saying to Brooks, "I would be the veriest blockhead if I thought I could get through with a single day's business without relying upon Him who doeth all things well."

I want to say to this body of legislators, from the standpoint of a close study of the life of Mr. Lincoln, that his was the most profoundly religious nature of any of our great Presidents. Why, then, you ask, did he not belong to a church? I answer you, I hope as a consistent member of the Methodist Episcopal Church, Abraham Lincoln was too great a soul to be circumscribed by the narrow denominational lines of the day in which he lived. [Applause.] I say it not in antagonism to churches, for I believe in them and I am a member of one of them. But the bitterness that was then felt between branches of the Christian church was such that it was pretty hard for a man of that great heart of his to subscribe to a good deal of this bitterness. But let no man, because of this, quote him as against religion. He was profoundly religious, and always gave his voice and influence to the things for which the church stands.

He once said:

Show me the church which writes over its portals "Thou shalt love thy God with all thy strength of heart and mind, and thy neighbor as thyself," and I will join that church.

I close with this suggestion: As Mr. Lincoln was closing his career he was more concerned about the Reconstruction of the Seceded States than any other one subject. He made his last speech from the Executive Mansion on the 11th of April. He spoke about Reconstruction, and said that that was one of the things that had most deeply impressed his heart during all these years, and then he said, in substance:

Let us not now enter into a controversy as to whether the States are in the Union or out of the Union. That question can only have the mischievous effect of dividing our friends. We all admit that the States are out of their practical relations with the Union. Let us strive to reinstate the relation as it existed before the war, and when that is done, then let us each one alone take pleasure, if there is any pleasure in it, in seeing whether they were ever away from home. Finding themselves safely at home, it would be utterly immaterial whether they had ever been abroad. Let us not bring that up now, for it can only end in mischief.

To the South he said:

It may be my duty to make some new announcement to the people of the South.

That announcement was never made. Four days later the bullet of the assassin closed his lips forever, and he was not to make an announcement on that or any other great subject. But the one situation he yearned so much to see adjusted was the preservation of the Union as it had been before 1861. His death removed the one insurmountable obstacle to the success of radical measures in Reconstruction. As I once said before, his rare magnanimity, illumined by an intellect equally rare, peculiarly fitted him to pilot the ship through the rough breakers that hugged the shore of nationality as he had safely brought it through the stormy Civil War. He was broad enough to know that too much national prerogative was despotism, and too much State rights might lead to anarchy among the States. I want to say that when the bullet of the assassin laid him low the best friend the South had in authority had fallen. [Applause.] Jefferson Davis said that next to the fall of the Confederacy the death of Lincoln was the greatest stroke the South ever received.

What a beautiful thing it is to contemplate the change of attitude toward him. Fifty years ago many a child of that day in the North was rocked in the cradle over which was sung the lullaby:

Old Abe Lincoln is dead and gone.
Hurrah! Hurrah!

Then, the people were divided. To-day, 50 years after, our differences, born in the heat of a great national issue that precipitated war, are no more. His name is spoken in reverence by a reunited Nation, whose finest product is embodied in the great war President.

His yearning for the cessation of strife was in his every impulse. When the scene of Appomattox had passed, no one was so happy over the prospects of a return to peace as he.

But in a moment of rejoicing all was changed. Another tragedy was to be added to the series of tragedies. It was not his to live to see the fruits of the war, and to so guide its reconstruction as to rebuild safely with the highest honor to all our people. No. It was his to die. He was surrounded by friends, including his official family, as his spirit went home to its God, with whom it had kept so closely throughout the dark hours of civil war.

Stanton, at the head of the bed, now virtually the head of the Nation, Seward having been attacked in his sick room, broke the silence of death when he said, "Now he belongs to the ages."

The next day the great Secretary, who had so often differed from his great chief, looked upon his face now asleep in death, and pointing his hand toward him said, "There sleeps the mightiest man that ever ruled a nation."

It was thus left to one of his critics, who differed with and yet loved him, to pass the highest encomium upon him.

In my judgment Abraham Lincoln is the truest type of the American statesman, the broadest in comprehension, the sweetest in disposition, the deepest in humanity of secular history. And now as we are facing to-day as great problems as ever faced him in his day, let us renew our obligations to our common country by pledging ourselves in his words our last full measure of devotion in the hope that the Government of the people, by the people, and for the people shall not perish from the earth. [Applause.]

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to address the House for two minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GOULDEN. Mr. Speaker, I feel that I should apologize to the House, as well as to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio, who has just completed his splendid patriotic address. Perhaps I am the only man on the floor of the House who heard Lincoln's famous speech at Gettysburg. [Applause.] That is my excuse for injecting myself at this time. By the grace of God and the will of the Speaker, nine veterans of the Civil War, six who wore the gray and three who wore the blue, all that are left of that memorable struggle, were honored by an appointment to accompany the Vice President and himself to the fiftieth anniversary of the great Battle of Gettysburg last July. While standing there on the memorable spot on which Mr. Lincoln stood 50 years before, I heard that famous speech of his. I first heard—and I can assure my colleagues that I was tired and weary—the splendid oration of Edward Everett, a brilliant speaker of that day, which lasted two hours. I know, in my youthful impatience, I hoped that he would finish quickly so that the great war President might be heard, but he did not. He made a truly magnificent speech. I want to ask, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, how many of you can recall or could repeat even portions of the beautiful oration of Edward Everett on that occasion, while on the other hand the brief, touching speech of President Lincoln is known to every schoolboy and every schoolgirl, not only in this country but in many others. I stood within 30 feet of the platform and heard the President. As Mr. Lincoln stepped to the front, with that pathetic, sad look upon his face, the great audience of 25,000 people started an applause loud and long. A smile went over his countenance, and when he smiled you forgot its homeliness and its ruggedness. He then made that famous address of his, which lasted less than three minutes, making a most profound impression on his listeners, at least one-half of whom could hear him distinctly. I saw Edward Everett step over and shake his hand. I could not hear what he said, but we are told what he did say was that he would give his two hours of effort for the three minutes of Mr. Lincoln; and he was right. That was a great occasion, upon a battle field that more than 200,000 as brave men as ever lived fought three days for what they thought was right. It was one of the greatest in the history of this or any other nation, marked to-day by more than 500 splendid monuments.

We do well, Mr. Speaker, to call to mind the deeds of our great men, those who have so greatly aided in making the Nation a world power, respected everywhere, and I think none carries with it a greater lesson of patriotic sentiment so worthy of emulation than that of the lamented martyred President of the United States—Abraham Lincoln. [Loud applause.]

DISTRICT BUSINESS.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, last Monday, which was District day, was substituted for to-day for the transaction of business pertaining to the District of Columbia. Upon the House Calendar is Senate bill 1294. That bill should properly be upon the Union Calendar, and I ask that it be transferred to that calendar as of the date when it was reported to the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky moves that the bill S. 1294 be transferred from the House Calendar to the Union Calendar.

Mr. MANN. It does not require a motion, Mr. Speaker. The gentleman from Kentucky, as I understand, asks to have the bill transferred to the Union Calendar, because it is a Union Calendar bill, so that he can go into Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Speaker will transfer it, then. Mr. Speaker Carlisle decided that all required in such a case was the request that the bill be transferred to its proper place.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of District of Columbia business.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of District business, with Mr. LLOYD in the chair.

HOURS OF EMPLOYMENT OF FEMALES IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I call up the bill (S. 1294) to regulate the hours of employment and safeguard the health of females employed in the District of Columbia.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky calls up the bill S. 1294, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

Mr. JOHNSON of Kentucky. Mr. Chairman, a bill similar to this, perhaps an exact copy of it—I have not compared them—passed the Senate during the Sixty-second Congress and came to the House during the last days of that Congress. That bill took the regular course, and was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia. The engrossed copy of the bill was sent to the House District Committee. During the last day or two of that Congress—I do not now recall which—some gentlemen on the floor of the House who were in favor of its passage endeavored to call it up. At that time, as I have just said, the engrossed copy of the bill was before the District Committee. There were only two ways in which it could get back to the House. One was by the action of the committee directing it to be reported to the House. The other was by having the committee discharged by the House from further consideration of the bill, and having the bill in that way reported to the House. During the last day of the Sixty-second Congress, I think it was, although I do not now pretend to be exactly accurate about that, some Members of the House addressed a note to me as chairman of the committee and asked me to send the bill to them; not to the House or to the Clerk of the House, but to them. I answered their note, in substance, by saying that I could not let the bill go, bearing in mind that it was a misdemeanor under the law for me to let the bill go in that way. Instead of sending them the bill, I came to the floor of the House with it. The gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LAFFERTY] was quite active in having the bill brought up. I came to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LAFFERTY] upon the floor of the House and explained to him that because of the law making it a misdemeanor to surrender the bill in the manner I have indicated I did not comply with the request. I informed him then that I had the bill in my pocket, and that when the House would discharge the committee from further consideration of it I was ready to produce it, so that it might be considered any minute that it was brought up. In some way or other my action in that matter at the time has been misconstrued. I care very little about that. I have been so frequently misquoted and my motives so frequently misconstrued that I have become rather callous on the subject. But in order that a correct understanding may be had by those who have misrepresented or misconstrued my motives, I am saying what I am at this moment.

I stayed upon this floor as long as I could during two days and two nights, if I remember correctly, of continuous session, ready at any moment to produce the engrossed bill, that it might then and there be considered, whenever it was called up. At one time I remember the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LAFFERTY] did call it up, when I was occupying the next chair to him. He called it up with the full knowledge that I had the bill in my pocket, then and there ready to produce it. However, before he succeeded in getting his motion acted upon the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] made a motion of some sort, which I now do not recall, but which had precedence of the motion made by the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LAFFERTY], and in that way the bill did not come up. I understand that the bill was called up by either the gentleman from Oregon or some other gentleman who had an interest in it during the night, when I was in the cloakroom asleep. It was beyond human endurance for any man to stay here during those many hours of the day and night sessions. I certainly was not equal to it, and during those times I had to get something to eat and some time to sleep. Once, during an all-night session, when I was asleep, I understand the bill was called up, and for that reason it was not gotten before the House for consideration.

To be perfectly frank about the matter, I have never undertaken to put the slightest obstacle in the way of the passage of this bill. It had my hearty approval at that time, and it has it now, and, as far as I myself am concerned, I can go further than the provisions of this bill go. Left to me, I would fix it so that no woman or girl would be permitted to go into any shop or factory and go to work. I think her place is at home, and I deplore the fact that women and girls have driven men out of employment by accepting a lower wage. If those for whose benefit this bill is to be passed would decline this sort of employment and go home to become the wives of men who are now thrown out of employment, the country would be far better off. So with these few explanatory remarks I desire to yield the remainder of my time to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'LEARY], who is chairman of the subcommittee of the District of Columbia from which this bill comes.

[Mr. O'LEARY addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. O'LEARY. I now yield, unless some gentleman of the committee desires to speak, to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PETERS].

The CHAIRMAN. How much time does the gentleman yield?

Mr. GARDNER. Is the gentleman going to yield at all to this side of the House?

Mr. O'LEARY. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. How much time is yielded to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PETERS]?

Mr. O'LEARY. Ten minutes; or fifteen minutes if he requires it.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PETERS] is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I rise a second time for the purpose of urging the passage of the pending bill, which is entitled—

A bill to regulate the hours of employment and safeguard the health of females employed in the District of Columbia.

In brief, this bill establishes 8 hours a day, or 48 hours a week, as the maximum length of time which any woman can be employed in factories or mercantile establishments, and prohibits night work for all girls under 18 years of age in the District of Columbia, for which Congress legislates in much the same manner as State legislatures enact local laws.

My agreeable and distinguished colleague from New Jersey [Mr. TOWNSEND] just asked a question relative to its protection of people who were engaged in other occupations. I wish to say that there is already a child-labor law which was passed three Congresses ago—in the Sixtieth Congress, I think—which would no doubt cover some of the provisions which he has in mind.

When I made my first speech last March on this bill I said:

Though we are hopeful of immediate action, if, in the general congestion of business during the closing hours of the session this bill is not reached and finally disposed of, I shall reintroduce the bill at the opening of the next Congress and continue to press it for favorable consideration.

HISTORY OF THE BILL.

Let me recall briefly the history of this important measure.

The Senate bill (S. 1294) and my bill in the House of Representatives (H. R. 29), which are now pending, are twin bills, identical in form and both introduced in this and the last Congresses.

One year ago this month my bill, after extended hearings, was favorably reported to this body by the House Labor Committee, of which the honorable William B. Wilson, now Secretary of the Department of Labor, was chairman. Senator LA FOLLETTE'S bill, similar to my bill, was passed by the Senate two days after my bill was reported to the House.

The Sixty-second Congress adjourned March 4 last without either of these eight-hour bills coming to a vote in this House, due to the pressure of a variety of legislation, including important appropriation bills, which consumed all available time during the closing days of the session.

Both Senator LA FOLLETTE and myself reintroduced our bills in this Congress, as you already know. For the convenience of the House I will insert a copy of my bill, together with certain explanations interpolated between the paragraphs stating the different States where similar provisions are now in effect.

A bill (H. R. 29) to regulate the hours of employment and safeguard the health of females employed in the District of Columbia.

Be it enacted, etc., That no female shall be employed in any manufacturing, mechanical, or mercantile establishment, laundry, hotel, or restaurant, or telegraph or telephone establishment or office, or by any express or transportation company in the District of Columbia more than 8 hours in any one day or more than 6 days or more than 48 hours in any one week.

The limitation of hours to 8 in one day and 48 in one week follows the statutes of California (Stat. of 1911, act 1537) and Washington (Acts of 1911, ch. 37). No industry or occupation is included which is not included in some State laws. There is also an eight-hour law for women in Colorado and in Arizona.

SEC. 2. That no female under 18 years of age shall be employed or permitted to work in or in connection with any of the establishments or occupations named in section 1 of this act before the hour of 7 o'clock in the morning or after the hour of 6 o'clock in the evening of any one day.

The night work of girls up to 18 years is prohibited in 12 States, with slight variations in the terminal hours. These States are: Arizona, California, Indiana (include all adult women employed in manufacturing); Louisiana, Massachusetts (include all adult women employed in manufacturing); Michigan, Mississippi, Nebraska (include all adult women employed in factories, stores, hotels, and restaurants); Ohio, Oklahoma, New York (include girls up to 21 years in factories and stores); Pennsylvania.

SEC. 3. That no female shall be employed or permitted to work for more than six hours continuously at one time in any establishment or occupation named in section 1 of this act in which three or more such females are employed without an interval of at least three-quarters of an hour, except that such female may be so employed for not more than six and one-half hours continuously at one time if such employment ends not later than half past 1 o'clock in the afternoon and if she is then dismissed for the remainder of the day.

This provision was first enacted and is now in effect in Massachusetts. (R. L., 106, par. 37.)

It is also in effect, with slight modifications, in other States, such as New York (same statute as above, sec. 89) and Maryland. (Acts of 1912, ch. 79.)

SEC. 4. That every employer shall post and keep posted in a conspicuous place in every room in any establishment or occupation named in section 1 of this act in which any females are employed a printed notice stating the number of hours such females are required or permitted to work on each day of the week, the hours of beginning and stopping such work, and the hours of beginning and ending the recess allowed for meals. The printed form of such notice shall be furnished by the inspectors authorized by this act. The employment of any such female for a longer time in any day than that stated in the printed notice shall be deemed a violation of the provisions of this section. Where the nature of the business makes it impracticable to fix the recess allowed for meals at the same time for all females employed, the inspectors authorized to enforce this act may issue a permit dispensing with the posting of the hours when the recess allowed for meals begins and ends, and requiring only the posting of the total number of hours which females are required or permitted to work on each day of the week and the hours of beginning and stopping such work. Such permit shall be kept by such employer upon such premises and exhibited to all inspectors authorized to enforce this act.

The provision which requires the posting of a printed notice stating the hours of labor required each day is necessary for enforcement, and is required in all effective laws.

SEC. 5. That every employer shall keep a time book or record for every female employed in any establishment or occupation named in section 1 of this act, stating the wages paid, the number of hours worked by her on each day of the week, the hours of beginning and stopping such work, and the hours of beginning and ending the recess allowed for meals. Such time book or record shall be open at all reasonable hours to the inspection of the officials authorized to enforce this act. Any employer who fails to keep such record as required by this section, or makes any false statement therein, or refuses to exhibit such time book or record, or makes any false statement to an official authorized to enforce this act, in reply to any question put in carrying out the provisions of this act, shall be liable for a violation thereof.

This section follows the Illinois act regulating women's hours of labor (act of 1911). It has been found an additional aid to enforcement and is required also, in a slightly different form, in New York (C. L., ch. 31, art. 6, par. 77, subdivision 5) and in New Jersey (acts of 1912, ch. 216).

SEC. 6. That the Commissioners of the District of Columbia are hereby authorized to appoint three inspectors, two of whom shall be women, to carry out the purposes of this act, at a compensation not exceeding $1,200 each per annum.

SEC. 7. That the inspectors authorized by this act may in the discharge of their duties enter any place, building, or room where any labor is being performed by females which is affected by the provisions of this chapter whenever such inspectors may have reasonable cause to believe that any such labor is being performed therein.

SEC. 8. That the inspectors authorized by this act shall visit and inspect the establishments and places of employment named in section 1 as often as practicable, during reasonable hours, and shall cause the provisions of this act to be enforced therein, and also the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide that all persons employing female help in stores, shops, or manufactories in the District of Columbia shall provide seats for the same when not actively employed," approved March 2, 1895. They shall make a daily report to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and also report any cases of illegal employment contrary to the provisions of this act to the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia.

SEC. 9. That any person who violates or does not comply with any of the provisions of this act shall, upon conviction, be punished for a first offense by a fine of not less that $20 nor more than $50; for a second offense, by a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $200; for a third offense by a fine of not less than $250.

These sections follow the provisions of the District of Columbia child-labor law as to the appointment of inspectors, procedure, and so forth.

PRESENT STATUS OF THE BILL.

The Peters bill was referred a second time to the House Committee on Labor and it was again reported favorably without amendment.

Action was also taken on the La Follette bill. The Senate Committee on the District of Columbia reported the bill unamended. The Senate again passed the bill, which then came to the House and was referred to the District Committee. This committee has sent the bill back with the recommendation that it pass, and it is now called up for final action. It should receive our immediate consideration.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I was not altogether satisfied with the reply to the question which I submitted to the other gentlemen of the committee. I stated a case in this city of a woman who had been at work in a hotel as a cook for 20 years and who was working seven days in a week, and who is perfectly willing to work seven days in a week as cook. Is there anything, as you see this bill—and I ask it because the suggestion has been made to me by another gentleman—by which a party like that, and I understand there are a good many of them in the city of Washington, can work seven days in the week. I mean, for instance, could she cook a breakfast and then have, for instance, an hour or two in the forenoon, and then be there at lunch and have two or three hours off in the afternoon, and in that way work the seventh day in the week?

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. It depends entirely upon whether the employee is a domestic servant or is an employee of a hotel. If she is employed by a hotel, she will come under the provisions of this act. If she is a domestic servant, she will not come under the provisions of this act.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. May I ask the gentleman what would he say if she was employed as a cook at the hotel?

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. I can not tell.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. What would be your opinion?

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. I am not familiar with the apartment house to which the gentleman refers and do not know whether it would come under the definition of a hotel or not. But if it is a hotel, she does come under the provisions of this act. I have no time to argue the point of whether it is a hotel or not.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. I do not want to argue it. I was simply asking for information.

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. I will try to give it to the gentleman.

The provisions which we have here before us are identical with the provisions of the bill that was reported by the House committee.

HOURS OF LABOR FOR WOMEN IN THE STATES.

The provisions of the bill now under consideration are not untried. Thirty-seven States to-day have laws designed to limit the hours of employment for women. There is, of course, a wide variation in the 37 different State laws. Some of the States have laws which are limited to comparatively few industries. Other States, for example, Georgia, Maine, Mississippi, and Tennessee, have laws which affect women employed in factories, but not in mercantile establishments. In other States all factories and mercantile establishments are included. In a number of instances a single exception is made of some seasonal occupation. Michigan and Delaware and several other States except the canning industry. Discriminations of this nature often excite criticisms of favoritism and tend to encourage a continuation of inefficient business methods. While nature may glut the market with perishable vegetables or fruits at certain seasons of the year and may demand overtime work, it is probably true that the privilege of long hours must at least share the responsibility for the long-hour day.

In most States where the daily hours of labor are limited for women the wise precaution has also been taken to fix a definite limit for the maximum hours of labor which may be permitted in any one week. These weekly limits vary from 48 to 60 hours.

Four States have the eight-hour day. Two of these States have a 48-hour week. Eleven States, including Massachusetts, have the 54-hour week. In all the States comprising this group the industries affected cover both factories and mercantile establishments with but few occupations excepted. Four States have the 55-hour week, three the 58, and seven the 60-hour week. Delaware, Maryland, and New Hampshire, with 10-hour days, limit night work to eight hours. But 10 of the 37 States limiting the daily hours have neglected to provide for a weekly as well as a daily limit.

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE. Section 6 provides for the appointment of three inspectors, at $1,200 apiece, one to be a man and two to be women. Can the gentleman give any estimate of the number of establishments that will come under this law in the District of Columbia?

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. That estimate was submitted. I do not like to delay the House to find it in the evidence taken at the hearings.

Mr. MOORE. But this is not a manufacturing city, and I was wondering to what extent these three inspectors would be busy. How many establishments would be covered, if the gentleman can tell?

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. Well, all manufacturing, mechanical, and mercantile establishments. I will refer the gentleman to page 5 of the hearings on the bill reported to the Sixty-second Congress, second session.

Mr. GARDNER. That is the Lewis report on the gentleman's bill, is it not? It is not the gentleman's report on the gentleman's bill.

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. It is a report on this identical bill made in the Sixty-third Congress.

Mr. GARDNER. Would it not be well to send for some copies of those reports?

Mr. MOORE. The question is, Will there be work sufficient for these three inspectors to do? This is not a manufacturing city.

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, if I may volunteer an answer in the time of the gentleman from Massachusetts, I suggest that the official information is that there are about 40,000 employees who would come under the operation of this act.

Mr. MOORE. The large department stores, such department stores as there are in this city, would come under it, and telephone and telegraph employees, and employees in laundries and hotels.

Mr. MANN. Would the employees of the Government come under it?

Mr. LEWIS of Maryland. No; they would not.

Mr. MOORE. Take those, for instance, in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and the Government Printing Office.

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. I will say that there is a law now covering all Government employees. This would cover only those not in the Government service. If the gentleman will look on page 5 of the report that I have referred to, he will see that of the women in the District of Columbia 16 years and over there are 52,488; from 16 to 20 years, 7,177; from 21 to 44 years, inclusive, 34,064; from 45 years upward, 11,147.

Mr. MOORE. Is the number of establishments given?

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. It is not given in the report which I have here, but it is given in the evidence taken at the hearings.

Mr. MOORE. Can the gentleman approximate it? Is it 100, or 400, or 500? I ask that question because it would give us an idea of the duties to be performed by the three inspectors.

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. The duties would depend not only upon the number of establishments, but also upon the number of people. I can not stop to go into the hearings in the limited time that has been allotted to me.

Mr. MOORE. Another question. Would this apply to stenographers employed in the offices of Members of Congress?

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. It would apply to stenographers in the mercantile establishments and in those mentioned in the provisions of section 1.

Mr. MOORE. It would not apply to those engaged in the service of Members of Congress?

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. No; I should say it would not any more than it would apply to domestic servants.

Mr. MANN. Why not?

Mr. MOORE. They work, many of them, longer than eight hours.

Mr. MANN. I do not think they work more than eight hours a day.

Mr. MOORE. Oh, yes, they do. I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PETERS] how long he works, and whether his stenographer does not work as long as he does? Why should not this be made to apply to the employees of the Government, to stenographers of Members of Congress, as well as to those who work in the department stores? I am pointing out one of the inequalities of the bill.

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. There is a larger field, and I hope we shall reach a time when over the entire United States no woman shall be employed under any conditions over eight hours a day.

Mr. MANN. Would this bill apply to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing? I ask to see whether that matter has been taken into consideration or not.

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. I should think it very doubtful; but as the bureau comes under the general law relating to Government employees, I should think the employees of the bureau would already have some of the protection which is here contemplated.

Mr. MANN. This bill goes further than the general law on the subject?

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. It goes further than the general law.

Mr. MANN. Would it apply to any Government positions where manufacturing or mechanical work is done?

Mr. TOWNSEND. So far as the employment of women is concerned?

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. I should say it might apply to some of them.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. O'LEARY. I yield to the gentleman 10 minutes more.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. SAMUEL W. SMITH. Would the gentleman object to an amendment to provide that if a woman elected to do so, she could work overtime for double wages?

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. I should object to that.

Mr. WALLIN. Under this bill would a woman be allowed to work more than eight hours in one day to make up for a shorter day in the week?

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. No.

Mr. WALLIN. Provided the total was not more than 48 hours in the week?

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. I should not wish to see that done, and this bill will not permit it. I will remind the gentleman that a woman gets tired, not by the week, but by the day, and it is to protect her from that daily weariness that we provide a limit of eight hours.

Mr. WALLIN. Does not the gentleman find that most employees like a half holiday, especially in the summer, and should they not be allowed to make up that time rather than lose that amount of money?

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. Not by working more than eight hours in any day in the week.

Mr. FOWLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. FOWLER. What reason did the committee have for limiting the provisions of this bill to females?

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. Because the bill is particularly for the protection of females employed in the establishments here, and it was felt that to extend it into any other field would result in accomplishing nothing. It would defeat the entire measure.

Mr. FOWLER. Why not extend the provisions of the bill to men as well as women?

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. And so defeat any bill at all.

Mr. FOWLER. No; not defeat any bill, but in order to preserve equality and justice.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. LENROOT. Did I understand the gentleman to say he would be willing to vote for an amendment that would permit a woman to work longer than eight hours, provided she had double pay?

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. No; I indicated the contrary.

Mr. LENROOT. Is it not true that the very underlying principle of this bill is the conservation of health, and not of wages?

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. Most decidedly; and I intended to give a very decided negative to the former question.

Following is a detailed table showing the names of the 37 States and hours of labor for women, which was prepared for me by the Chief of the Bureau of Labor Statistics:

THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA UNPROTECTED.

The District of Columbia is one of the few divisions of our country which still lags behind in this class of legislation. In fact, the only provision of any kind, so far as I have been able to learn, which we have here in the District for the protection of employed women is one requiring a reasonable number of seats for clerks when not engaged in waiting on customers.

It is this state of affairs—this surprising inertia on the part of the Federal Government which legislates for the District of Columbia—which caused the National Consumers' League to start a campaign of enlightenment here in this city and to ask for immediate action on the part of Congress. The officers of the National Consumers' League prepared the bill which is before us after a careful study of the provisions of the laws of this nature existing in the several States. I am especially interested in being sponsor for this bill in the House, for when I was in the Massachusetts State Senate I was on the committee on relations of employer to employee and sat in extended hearings relative to a law which was before us for the protection of women in mercantile establishments in the city of Boston, a bill very similar to this one, but one which, I am frank to say, was not as good a one as this. This bill has been a help to the women of my home city, and the mercantile establishments themselves recognize its justice and say that they would not care to go back to the conditions which prevailed there before this bill was enacted.

California, Colorado, Arizona, and Washington have already adopted the eight-hour law for women, and I wish to say that the bill now under consideration was drafted with special reference to the laws in these four States where the eight-hour day has proven a decided success.

There can be little question of the attitude which Congress should take toward a bill of this nature when 37 of the 48 States represented here already have laws along the lines now proposed. Moreover, we have even more convincing proof that Congress takes a favorable attitude toward legislation of this nature. During nearly 20 years men employed by the Government as laborers or as mechanics have had the eight-hour day, and in the last Congress a law was enacted extending this limitation of hours for men to laborers and mechanics employed by contractors doing work for the Federal Government.

CONSTITUTIONALITY.

There may be some question of constitutionality in the minds of those who have not given this bill close consideration, but this mist of apprehension can be quickly dispelled. Let me call your attention to the fact that during the last five years the right of States under their police powers to limit the hours for women has been affirmed by the Supreme Court of the United States (Muller v. Oregon, 208 U. S., 412, decided in 1908) and by the supreme courts of five States: Illinois, in two decisions (244 Ill., 509, 1910; 98 N. E. Rep., 982), decided in 1912; Michigan (163 Mich., 419), 1911; Ohio (98 N. E. Rep., 1126), 1912; Washington, 1912; and California (124 Pac. Rep., 427), 1912.

In the Muller case the Federal Supreme Court upheld the validity of the Oregon 10-hour law for women. It was the first case in which the highest tribunal of the country had been called upon to render a decision as to the validity of a law limiting the hours of labor of adult women. It was the most sweeping decision ever rendered by the Federal Supreme Court in relation to working hours. It left to the States liberty to determine what working hours were wholesome and reasonable and took the broad ground that the physical organization of women and the necessity of protecting their health, in behalf of the health of the whole Nation, justified legislation to protect them from exhaustion due to excessive hours of labor.

The reasoning of the Muller case has been uniformly followed in all subsequent decisions of the courts regarding legislation of this character. In the last two cases decided in 1912 by the Supreme Courts of Washington and California, the laws limited the employment of women to eight hours in one day, and this limit was also in each case held to be a reasonable one.

NEED OF PROTECTION FOR WOMEN.

I have given but a brief discussion of the constitutionality of this question, because I believe that the facts in the case are so conclusive and so generally known that there is no need to take any great amount of your time, nor do I propose to question the intelligence of the membership of this body with a long discussion of the general advisability of limiting the hours of work for women. This is largely a physiological question, and I do not anticipate that the relation between fatigue and efficiency and between overwork and the health of women is unknown to you. Since we consider it wise to protect by an eight-hour day, so far as we can, the men working directly and indirectly for the Government, how much more necessary is it that we make every effort to give similar protection to as large a proportion as possible of the future motherhood of the citizenship of this country. In this connection I wish to quote you from the report submitted by the District Commissioners indorsing this bill:

Careful research, made both in this country and in Europe, has established the fact that where women are compelled to labor long hours under either physical or mental strain it results in impairment of their health. Where the employment is of a physical nature, organic changes occur which physicians have long recognized as causing much of the chronic invalidism among women. It is likewise true that prolonged mental strain has its injurious effects. The evil result of overwork is not confined to the women themselves, but is an important factor in infant morbidity and mortality.

There are no large factories in the District of Columbia, and therefore there is not the demand for female employees that exists in some of the larger cities. But the employment of women is on the increase here as elsewhere, and legislation enacted now will not only tend to correct such abuses as exist, but to prevent their further development.

The last paragraph of this report introduces a subject which has been materially enlarged upon by local opponents of the bill. It is stated that Washington is not a manufacturing city, and it is therefore concluded that there is no need for a law of this nature; that the good which we seek to do by protecting the health of women is practically nullified because there is no necessity for such protection.

Mr. GOULDEN. Will the gentleman yield for one question?

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. GOULDEN. What is the estimate of the committee as to the number of people who will be affected by this bill if it becomes a law?

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. There were about 52,488 females over 16 years of age in the District of Columbia in 1910 employed in gainful occupations.

This is, in part at least, a misstatement of the case. In the first place, there are more establishments here than one at first surmises, and, in the second place, it is the case that certain abuses exist which demand our attention. It must be kept in mind in this discussion that this law will not materially affect employment where the hours are reasonable, but it is aimed only at those cases where there are excessive hours and where they may become even more excessive if a law similar to this is not enacted.

Mr. BARTON. Did the hearings show that they are working over eight hours a day now?

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. The hearings showed that in many instances they were working over hours and working under conditions which were very bad. The only provision which we have to-day in the District of Columbia for protecting women is that under certain conditions women shall be provided with seats to rest themselves.

It has further been suggested that 48 hours a week would be a sufficient limitation without a daily limitation of 8 hours. People do not get tired by the week; they get tired by the day's work; and it is the very exhaustion of the day of 10 or 12 hours' continuous work that we want to protect the women against. The only efficient way to do it is the provision of 48 hours a week, with a maximum of 8 hours a day.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. I will.

Mr. DYER. What is the object of providing that one inspector shall be a man? Would not the purpose of the legislation be better served if the inspectors were all women?

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. It was thought better to have the judgment of both men and women inspectors. Some investigations might be better conducted by a man.

Mr. DYER. Section 2 provides that no female under 18 years of age shall be allowed to work before or after certain hours. Is there any provision in the bill whereby a female under 16 years of age is protected?

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. No; that comes under the child-labor law of the District of Columbia, enacted three or four years ago.

Mr. DYER. They are fully protected under that law?

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. Yes; by the law that we previously enacted.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am deeply concerned in this bill and heartily approve of its principles; but the penalty clause only relates to a fine and not to any imprisonment. You provide in the bill that if a person is guilty of three offenses he shall be fined not less than $250. It seems to me that persons who deliberately break the law ought to suffer a severer penalty.

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. Much could be said in favor of the gentleman's point; but in drawing the act we followed out the present child-labor law in the District of Columbia; we tried to have exactly the same provisions for the violation of this as for the violation of the child-labor law, so as to bring them as near as we could with regard to inspectors and everything else on the same line.

Mr. GARDNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. GARDNER. As a matter of fact, in the execution of the child-labor law these penalties have been found to be sufficient to be deterrent, have they not?

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. They have; and they have worked very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. O'LEARY. Mr. Chairman, I will yield the gentleman five minutes more.

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, in my speech in support of this bill in the last Congress I took considerable pains to outline to you present industrial conditions in the District of Columbia. My statements were based on a report which the Department of Commerce and Labor—now the Department of Labor—had just compiled relative to hours, earnings, and duration of hours of wage-earning women in the District of Columbia. This report was one of a series which have been compiled on the subject of employment of women and children.

I will not trouble you with a rehearsal of all the facts which I brought to your attention at that time. It is only necessary to remind you that in the stores, laundries, and hotels it was shown that conditions were not the best, either from the point of view of wages, hours, or pay for overtime. In manufacturing establishments the conditions for women employed seemed, on the whole, fairly good, but with the neighboring States enacting laws limiting hours of labor and with the rapid growth of this city the need for precautionary measures was apparent.

IMPROVEMENT ALREADY NOTICED.

Credit must be given not only to the efforts that have been made to secure the passage of this bill but to the local merchants that one of the chief sources of criticism which was afforded by the recent report of conditions here in the District has been materially lessened. Hours for women employed in retail stores during the Christmas rush were shown to be excessive. Approximately 70 per cent of all the women examined by the investigator who were employed in the stores here worked overtime during the week before Christmas; approximately 69 per cent of those examined who worked overtime at Christmas were employed 70 hours or over during that week; 31 per cent of this number worked from 75 to 80 hours. This investigation further showed that the hours of some of these employees were from 14 to 15 hours on the day before Christmas.

In a part of the stores, at least, this condition was improved upon during the last Christmas shopping season.

Conditions here are not, I dare say, as deplorable as in certain other cities; but that does not free us from responsibility when there are numerous instances where women are employed for excessive hours and, in many cases, particularly in the retail stores and laundries, with no extra pay for overtime.

OPPOSITION TO THE BILL.

At the hearing on this bill before the House Labor Committee a few merchants and manufacturers and laundrymen, on the whole representing the smaller class of establishments, appeared in opposition to the bill, and in the main advanced four objections: First, that this bill would result in replacing women by men; secondly, that the bill would work a hardship to seasonal businesses; thirdly, that certain work would be sent to neighboring cities; fourthly, that the wages of women would be reduced.

These objections are on the whole negligible. They are the stock objections which have been made to all movements to limit the hours of labor, and while it is true that in certain instances some few might be temporarily hampered, it is unquestionably the case that in the greater proportion of them it is merely a question of settling upon some new arrangement for planning the work or of the hire of extra help to do work which is now done in overtime hours. On the other hand the employees are benefited materially.

Mr. BOOHER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. BOOHER. What is the necessity of having three inspectors?

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. It is impossible to have the law carried out unless we have inspectors go about and see that the law is obeyed, see that the notices prohibiting women from working longer hours are posted, and to take up any questions of violation and investigate them. There should be some one who is familiar with the conditions in the District, who may be sent to investigate any violation of the provisions of the act.

Mr. BOOHER. Why would it not be a good plan to strike out all these provisions in relation to inspectors and leave it to the police department? We have a good police department, and it seems to me that they would be able to take care of the situation.

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. The necessity for inspection under factory laws has been recognized for years. We have had for many years factory inspectors in Massachusetts—inspectors under the laws for the protection of women and children. We need inspectors whose business it shall be to investigate. The child-labor law enacted a few years ago in this District provided for inspectors whose duty it was to look up the questions of the violations of the labor laws. They make their report directly, upon which prosecutions are based.

Mr. BOOHER. If the gentleman will yield, I am not objecting to inspectors or inspection; but why not leave it to the police department to make the inspections and the investigation instead of appointing special inspectors every time we pass a law?

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. The necessity has been shown by all modern legislation connected with factory inspection and legislation protecting children and women. You must have people who have a particular knowledge of the conditions. The police do not have that knowledge; it is not along their lines. They do not have the experience. We want men and women whose particular judgment and experience gives them some knowledge of the situation, and whose sole duty it is to investigate violations of this law. It is essential that we have particular people to take up this inspection.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, just one question further. If we have these inspectors, will it not be necessary for them to have an office and place of business for the office force? That is not provided for here. It seems to me that if you are going to provide for the inspectors and they are to be efficient, you ought to provide for an office and an office force and to fix the salary.

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, it is not necessary to have that force. A room in the Municipal Building could be provided. I have no doubt it will be provided for them. There must be some place and some people to whom objections may be made, and who can be told of alleged violations of this law.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, do I have the right of recognition in my own right for an hour?

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee in the chair). The gentleman will have that right later, but at the present the time is in the control of the gentleman from Kentucky, and he has yielded time to the gentleman from Massachusetts and the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'LEARY].

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, I desire only five minutes more.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, inasmuch as I interrupted the gentleman, I ask unanimous consent that he be permitted to continue for five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts be permitted to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, does that extend the time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'LEARY] for five minutes also?

Mr. BOOHER. Oh, no.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair was about to put the request in the form of not interfering with that time.

Mr. BOOHER. Very well.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Massachusetts be permitted to proceed for five minutes without interference with the time under control of the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'LEARY]. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. These objections have been current since 1837, when the first shorter-hour law was adopted in England, and the experience of time has been that in actual practice these laws have worked a great blessing and a negligible hardship. The commissioner of labor for the State of California reported last spring that the eight-hour law for women was being enforced in that State with practically no reduction in wages. In fact, the general experience has been that a reduction in hours has been accompanied with slightly increased wages. It is evident that no great difficulty will be experienced here in the stores and in many other trades where a day of eight or slightly in excess of eight hours already exists. This bill merely protects the employee from the inconsiderate employer and removes the advantage which certain less scrupulous and less enlightened employers now possess. Wages will continue to be controlled by supply and demand.

LOCAL SUPPORT OF BILL.

The interest which has been taken in the success of this bill here in the District was recently evidenced by a mass meeting held at the Columbia Theater, on F Street, at which several well-known women, including Mrs. Florence Kelley, secretary of the National Consumers' League, and Miss Constance D. Leupp, head of the local organization, spoke. I am pleased to say that the opposition to the bill has been, on the whole, trivial, while the disinterested support which it has received from the citizenship has been very gratifying.

CONCLUSION.

I believe that it must be granted that women need the protection of the eight-hour day on the general principle of protecting their health and the health of the whole Nation. Neither individuals nor courts will now give heed to the plea heard in the past that the protection of women constituted class legislation. Quite on the contrary, I have no doubt that the majority of this House would be willing to pass this bill solely on the ground that the recent investigation here in the District has shown that there are women whose physical and mental condition is being threatened because of the excessive strain placed on them by long hours of work.

NEED OF A MODEL LAW.

But there is one other form of responsibility which rests upon us as Members of Congress. The District of Columbia is dependent upon Congress for laws, and we have up to this time taken no action on this very important subject. We have remained idle while three-fourths of our States have been enacting laws for their own and the Nation's protection.

I wish to impress this upon the House, which I believe to be one of the strongest arguments in favor of this bill, that the District of Columbia now stands in the unenviable position of being far behind the majority of the States of the Union in enacting legislation for the protection of women and children, and that we as Members of Congress, who have placed on us the responsibility for legislating for this District, should provide for it the best code of laws possible and the greatest protection for its citizens, not only in justice to them, but so that the laws of the District of Columbia can be pointed to with pride and will in themselves form a stimulus and encouragement to enact laws of this kind in the various States.

Samuel Gompers, the president of the American Federation of Labor, and the local secretaries of the Retail Clerks' Union, the Central Labor Union, and the Maryland State Federation of Labor have already appeared before the Labor Committee in support of this bill. It has the indorsement of the National Consumers' League, the National Child Labor Committee, and numerous societies and individuals, and I feel confident that it will shortly be passed by Congress and thereby receive the indorsement of the great mass of the people of this country through their elected Representatives.

When this law is once placed in effect, as it promises to be within the coming month, no one will presume to stand up in this House and ask its repeal any more than he would, if it were in his power to do so, abolish the parcel post or the Federal Children's Bureau or bring to an end any other form of governmental activity which acts as a help and inspiration to the mass of our citizens. What more fitting day than on Lincoln's birthday could have eben chosen for the passage of this humane measure to free employed women from the bands of excessive hours of labor. [Applause.]

Mr. O'LEARY. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 15 minutes remaining.

Mr. O'LEARY. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER].

Mr. GARDNER. Mr. Chairman, this bill that we are now considering is exactly the same bill that was considered last summer by the Committee on Labor. At that time I appeared in support of the bill, but I criticized two of its features; not very materially, however. One of them was alluded to by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. DYER]. Personally, I feel that it would result in better inspection if the appointing power were permitted to decide for itself how many women ought to serve on this board of three inspectors.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. GARDNER. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Why could not the inspectors employed to enforce the child-labor law perform this same character of inspection service?

Mr. GARDNER. I do not know. Mr. Chairman, I am very much in favor of this bill, although it is true that we have no 8-hour law for women in the State of Massachusetts. Our law there is a 54-hour law. When I ran for governor last autumn I regretfully abstained from advocating a reduction of the hours of labor for women below 54. Nevertheless, I believe in the 8-hour day for women. But we shall never get this matter into proper shape, never in this world, until we have a constitutional amendment permitting the National Congress to prescribe maximum hours of labor throughout the United States.

Now, the reason why I am advocating an eight-hour day for women here and did not as a candidate for governor advocate an eight-hour day for women in my own State is this: Massachusetts has large textile industries, large cotton and woolen mills, where many women are employed. Our textile industries come into competition with the cotton mills and the woolen mills in those States where women are permitted to work 56 hours, 58 hours, 60 hours, and in some cases, I understand, a good many more hours per week. We have a very restrictive child-labor law in Massachusetts. In my opinion it is a good law. We also have a good child-labor law here in the District of Columbia. But all such laws, excellent though they surely are, handicap manufactures in States where they are enforced and make competition difficult against manufactures in those States where such laws do not exist. So, Mr. Chairman, while I take great satisfaction in voting for an eight-hour day for women in this city, where the question is not complicated by competitive textile industries, I think it right to point out the fact that we can not arrive at the result which we seek as readily as some people suppose.

In my opinion, if we desire a uniform eight-hour day for women throughout the United States, we must amend the Constitution. I advocate an amendment to the Constitution of the United States which shall permit Congress to prohibit child labor and excessive working hours throughout the entire country.

Mr. O'LEARY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY].

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, the State of Pennsylvania has enacted a law which, I presume, is along the same line as mentioned by the gentleman from Massachusetts, placing the maximum at 9 hours a day, or 54 hours a week. It is a step in the right direction, and is proving of splendid service. After listening to the address of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS] on that heroic American, Abraham Lincoln, who stood for humanity first of all, it seems to me especially fitting that on his natal day we should enact this legislation, which puts human rights above property rights. If he could come back to-day, he would look past the stores and mills and factories, and see the men and women and little children who are doing the work of the Nation. He would align himself on the side of humanity as embodied in this bill, and his great heart would approve its purpose.

There have been many objections made to this bill and the principle upon which it rests. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] the other day took occasion to denounce interference on the part of the Government with what he termed private enterprise, even though that enterprise tended to promote the public interest. That argument of noninterference is outworn and outgrown to-day, and the advocates of it are having only the encouragement of themselves as they applaud their own speeches. Progress demands not that the Government keep its hands off everything but preserving the peace, but that it put its hand on everything that will promote the common welfare. That will come in spite of those who adhere to the old customs and the old traditions, and their little boat can not stay the mighty tide of progress.

The bill under consideration gives the women in industry a right to leisure, without which the right to life is empty and void. The arguments have been summed up in the hearings, and I have read them carefully and with great interest, because they give both sides of this question.

One of those who appeared before the committee, a lady from California, said that this bill is substantially like the law in force in California at the present time. She mentioned in the hearings the four arguments made against it in California: First, that it displaces women workers; second, that it sends work out of the State; third, that it means disturbance in seasonal business; and, fourth, that it lowers wages. Everyone of these have been proven groundless by the experience of California.

Mr. Harris Weinstock, of San Francisco, one of the prominent merchants of that city, said:

> In some of the mercantile enterprises in which I am interested we have been working on an eight-hour basis for women with every satisfaction to them and to ourselves. If the eight-hour day in mercantile establishments is made a common condition in California, including the Christmas holiday season, it will work no hardship upon the employer, it will be a blessing to the woman worker, and will tend to make for a higher degree of efficiency on her part.

The bill introduced by the gentleman from California [Mr. J. I. NOLAN] and modeled on the California statute has had the unanimous support of the Progressive group of this body, but since it is impossible to pass that bill, I believe I can say that they are a unit in the support of this measure. They will give it their support because it means social justice; it means industrial justice; and it hastens the coming of the day when all workers shall be entitled to a little more of life and leisure and a little less of dirt and drudgery as their portion. Believing that, we will be a unit in the passage of this bill, hoping for the time when it shall become general and when the eight-hour day in all industries shall be the rule in this Nation, that consummation being the prophecy contained in this bill recognizing the right to leisure as regards the 52,000 women workers in the District of Columbia. [Applause.]

Mr. O'LEARY. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. LOGUE].

Mr. LOGUE. Mr. Chairman, my special thought in connection with legislation of this character is in the line of preservation of the home in that branch of the human family whose energies ought to be directed there. As a resident of a large city, it has always appealed to me as a condition that, if possible, should be relieved or lessened by preventing the young girls from being taken out of the home and placed in workshops, manufactories, or stores for unreasonable hours, instead of being compelled, or allowed, rather, to give a proper amount of time to the home in the pursuit of those domestic duties for which they appear to be ordained. Therefore, when we undertake to limit the hours that they will be kept away from the home, it is, at least, something in the right direction.

My colleague from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] has referred to the fact that we will be unable to do any great good until we have a constitutional amendment that enables us to pass a general law. However, I feel that the passage of this law will do a great deal of good. It will be an announcement from the National Legislature that they believe in a principle of this character. Unfortunate as it may be that one State contiguous to another has a law which the other does not, I feel that this widespread announcement coming from the national body of lawmakers will give notice throughout the length and breadth of our country that such laws should be enacted. I feel that the enactment of the law in the State of Pennsylvania will cause those interested in such legislation in other States to become active in the way of having similar laws placed upon their statute books.

I am anxious and desirous that the domestic condition of the home shall be maintained. The girl was intended for the home. The girl was intended for the companionship of the mother. The girl was intended for that line of training and that line of work, relieved from the activities of commercial pursuits, and not intended to be burdened with the hardships which the male portion of the human race must assume. I therefore feel that all legislation directed to the preservation of the girl as an aid to the mother, of the girl as an assister in the home, is good. I never desire to see women compete with men in mercantile pursuits. I do not desire to see the young girl placed in competition with the men for the purpose of making her living.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I feel that this is a step in the right direction for the relief of the weaker portion of the family, to give us the benefit of their services more than we have them at the present time, so that their good influence may be scattered around the home to the benefit, to the uplift, to the looking after and assisting of the home life, and not to be thrown out in competition with men in purely commercial plants. And while that be the height to which we would seek to reach in the future, perhaps far distant, still this is a step; and steps like this will lead us on to the culmination of improved conditions which we all desire. [Applause.]

Mr. O'LEARY. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has half a minute.

Mr. O'LEARY. Then I will yield that to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

Mr. MAPES. I thank the gentleman; but I will take time yielded to me by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. I yield to the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Idaho [Mr. FRENCH] is recognized.

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Chairman, this measure is entitled "An act to regulate the hours of employment and safeguard the health of females employed in the District of Columbia." It provides that no woman shall be employed in any manufacturing, mechanical, or mercantile establishment, laundry, hotel, or restaurant, or telephone or telegraph establishment or office, or by any express or transportation company in the District of Columbia more than 8 hours in any one day, or more than 6 days or more than 48 hours in any one week.

It provides that no girl under 18 years of age shall be employed or permitted to work in, or in connection with, any of the establishments or occupations that I have mentioned, before the hour of 7 o'clock in the morning or after the hour of 6 o'clock in the evening. It further provides that no women shall be employed or permitted to work for more than 6 days continuously in any establishment or occupation mentioned in which three or four women are employed without an interval of at least three-quarters of an hour, with the exception that one may be so employed for not more than six and one-half hours contiuously in such employment and not till later than half past 1 o'clock in the afternoon if she is then dismissed for the remainder of the day.

The other parts of the bill have to do with the provisions necessary for the carrying into effect of that which I have outlined as the real purpose of the measure—the providing of inspectors, the fixing of penalty for violation of the law, the posting of notices touching hours of labor, and such other matters as may be necessary for giving full force to the measure itself. I want to say at this time that I am in favor of the measure.

LONG HOURS AND UNDUE STRAIN IN THE ABSENCE OF LAW.

During the last few years thoughtful people in our country have been waking up to the terrible punishment that is being inflicted not only upon women but upon the human race through women, by long hours of toil, by lack of proper hours for rest, by the fatigue and strain that our modern industrial life have brought to those who toil.

No one can examine the reports that have been made by the Bureau of Labor, the hearings that have been recorded from the committees of the Congress, the writings of such students and authors as Josephine Goldmark, in "Fatigue and efficiency," without being impressed with the idea that perilous conditions have been permitted to exist that ought to be corrected by legislation.

The Bureau of Labor not long ago conducted an inquiry into the conditions surrounding women in the District of Columbia who are engaged in labor similar to that recognized in this bill, and hundreds of women and girls were interviewed. Of 465 employed who were interviewed, some were working reasonable hours. Of 269 interviewed, 90 per cent were required to work overtime during the holiday seasons, and 40.5 per cent labored on an average of 12 hours every day for six days in the week. Some even labored more hours than this.

In the stores of the city in which hundreds of women and girls are employed 8.3 per cent were paid for the services they performed over time, while 91.7 per cent performed these services without compensation. Of 147 women employed in laundries and other mechanical establishments in the District, 45 per cent labored from 60 to 70 hours a week, while more than 25 per cent labored from 70 to 75 hours per week.

What I have said is suggestive of conditions that exist or have existed throughout the United States. In the volume on Fatigue and Efficiency, by Josephine Goldmark, the author has pointed out that in telephone offices careful students of the question regard 225 calls per hour as the breaking point of efficiency, while in numerous cities the operators are required to handle many more calls than this.

In the office of one company in Kansas City, Mo., 281.7 calls were handled; in an office in Los Angeles, Cal., 285.2, 303, and 317 calls; in an office in San Francisco, Cal., 279 calls; in another one in San Francisco, 308.3; in an office in Seattle, 283.2; in another office in Seattle, 283.2; and in another office in Birmingham, Ala., 301.5 calls.

Turning to another occupation, the Bureau of Labor, in Bulletin No. 96, September, 1911, points out that in Baltimore in 10 canneries employing 2,214 women, the hours of labor reported by the employers themselves include days of 17½, 16½, and 15½ hours, and weeks include 93, 91½, and 81 hours.

In California it is pointed out that certain employers report for women days of 18, 15, and 13½ hours, and weeks of 96½, 90, and 83 hours. These figures are merely suggestive of labor conditions.

I can not hope to give even an outline of the conditions that exist throughout the country or in the District of Columbia. I have mentioned what I have to merely suggest that the hours of labor and the conditions under which women are required to toil are such that they must appeal to the most careless person as utterly unreasonable. No one can deny that such hours of toil wear out the person engaged in the toil. No one can deny that the strain that such workers undergo lowers the vitality, lowers the ability of the employees to perform the functions of womankind, imperils and impoverishes generations that are being born, and that will be born, and, in short, contribute a cost to that which is sold in the public for dollars and cents, a something that can not be measured because of its value—human life.

Other examinations are of intense interest in connection with long hours and arduous employment. Take the question of accidents. It has been pointed out by careful students that nearly four times as many accidents occur between 11 and 12 o'clock in the morning as occur between 6 and 7 o'clock. Why? The reason is apparent that the accidents that occur between 11 and 12 o'clock are after continuous employment and strain of five hours in comparison with employment amidst vigor and strength in the early part of the day.

In the afternoon it has been pointed out that between the hours of 5 and 6 there are about two and one-half times as many accidents as between the hours of 12 and 1, and, of course, for a similar reason. Unreasonable employment in length of hours per day or in length of hours without rest produces havoc and economic waste, not only upon the ones employed but upon others who may be associated with them, upon property, upon the character of goods and quality of workmanship, and these elements, it seems, should appeal to all thoughtful people.

THE MEASURE MEANS JUSTICE FOR WOMEN EMPLOYED.

I am in favor of this bill because it will mark a substantial step looking toward justice to women employed in the District of Columbia. I am in favor of the bill because its passage will have a wholesome effect upon the legislatures of the several States and upon public opinion that ought to bring about a movement looking to similar laws in all the States of the Union.

THE HONEST AND DISHONEST EMPLOYER.

I am in favor of this bill because it will help the honest employer in the District of Columbia to do justice by his employees as it is his heart's desire to do. The question has been suggested during this debate that a law of this kind ought to be national, and so it ought. This, however, must come through the legislatures of the States, unless the Constitution shall be amended so as to confer upon the Federal Government authority that is now vested with the States. It has been pointed out that a law of this character in one State will drive certain business concerns to States that have no such law, and that operators there will produce and compete to the distinct disadvantage of those engaged in similar lines in States where the laws obtain. This very fact should lead the people of all States to demand uniform legislation upon the subject. That which is true among the States is also true in the District of Columbia, and it is true in every city and State within our country.

Here is an employer who desires to do right by those engaged in his service. His competitor across the street has no intention of doing anything more than he can possibly help in the way of bettering conditions of his employees or in the payment of wages. He presses down until he can extract from them the last ounce of strength, and he converts it into coin to satisfy his own greed. The business man who would do right is necessarily placed at a disadvantage, because he is compelled to compete with a rival who cares not at all for the betterment of conditions of those in his employ. We need a law of this kind for the protection of the honest employer; for the protection of the company that is controlled by those who seek to better the conditions of those engaged under its direction and in its service. We need a law of this kind to coerce the employer of labor who does nothing for humanity that he is not required to do, whose world centers around his own selfishness, and who must be forced to adjust himself to an equitable basis of competition.

CONSTITUTIONALITY OF MEASURE.

The question of whether or not the measure is constitutional has been raised, and I have no hesitancy in saying that, in my judgment, there is no question but that it is constitutional. Our courts are more and more recognizing the necessity of interpreting our laws in the light of economic conditions that have changed vastly since our Constitution was framed and that have changed vastly during the lifetime even of the Members of this body. Courts at first were inclined to decide adversely in the matter of legislation such as that which is suggested in this bill.

I shall not at this time call attention to the many decisions of the courts to which I could refer that indicate that there has been a modification of judgment upon the part of our courts touching the very principle that lies at the foundation of the pending measure. I shall call attention to but one case that has been decided within the last few years by the Supreme Court of the United States that very plainly indicates the approval of that court of legislation similar in character to that which we are now seeking to enact.

The Legislature of Oregon a few years ago passed a law limiting the hours of employment of women in laundries to not more than 60 hours per week. The question of the validity of this law was carried to the Supreme Court in the case of Muller v. Oregon (208 U. S., 412), and the Supreme Court sustained the Supreme Court of the State of Oregon upon the validity of the statute. The court recognized the wisdom of laws of this character as applied to women from the standpoint of health.

In that decision the court said:

Her physical nature and the evil effects of work upon her and her future children justify legislation to protect her from the greed as well as the passion of men.

I have no doubt that the courts will place their stamp of approval upon this measure and will recognize the same principle and the justice that is due the women who are engaged in the various employments mentioned in the bill in the District of Columbia.

"WOMEN AND CHILDREN FIRST."

I am in favor of this measure because of the effect that the passage of the measure will have in directing public attention to other economic conditions that need to be considered by the Federal Congress and by the legislatures of the several States.

Men who labor through their organizations have aroused public sentiment to the point that it stands behind them in every just and rightful cause. The women toilers of the country are scarcely organized at all. It is difficult to maintain an effective organization among women. It is difficult because they can not be as independent as their brothers. It is difficult because many of their numbers are constantly being separated from the ranks of those who toil through assuming the responsibilities of the home. Because it is difficult, the Congress must be prompt to meet the situation that confronts our women toilers and to meet it by proper legislation.

Josephine Goldmark says in her work on "Fatigue and efficiency," to which I have referred:

The industrial overstrain of women is commonly reacted in three visible ways: In a heightened infant mortality, a lower birth rate, and an impaired second generation.

This terrific conclusion but confirms the judgment of students of this question that industrial overstrain is working havoc upon women themselves.

Two years ago the Titanic sank in midocean. The command of the captain of that ship that governed the control of the actions of brave men who went down with her, was "Women and children first." It was that policy that was carried out with a heroism never excelled. It was the command, "Women and children first," that was given by the commander of the ill-fated Monroe two weeks since that resulted in the saving of most of the lives of women and children on board a vessel that sank off our own coast. "Women and children first" is the sentiment that at heart is accepted and believed in by every citizen of this country who is worthy of the name, not only because of what it means at once, but of what it means in the evolution and development of our race.

This bill should pass because it embodies that idea and because it will have a part in focusing and directing public conscience and public attention to economic evils that exist in the occupations with which it deals and to other economic problems that concern every State, that concern all our people, and that have vital bearing upon the future.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. MAPES] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MAPES. Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of the passage of this bill. It prohibits the employment of any woman more than eight hours in any one day, or more than six days, or more than 48 hours, in any one week in any manufacturing, mechanical, or mercantile establishment, laundry, hotel, or restaurant, or telegraph or telephone establishment or office, or by any express or transportation company in the District of Columbia. It also prohibits the employment of any girl under 18 years of age in any of said establishments or occupations before the hour of 7 o'clock in the morning or after the hour of 6 o'clock in the evening. The bill has already passed the Senate, and was reported unanimously by the House Committee on the District of Columbia.

The advocates of this measure feel that Congress should take the lead and set a good example to the legislatures of the States in progressive legislation of this character. But instead of Congress being in the lead, many of the States are far in the lead of Congress in this particular class of legislation. It is a significant fact that there is no law regulating the hours of labor or the conditions of employment of women in the District of Columbia, where Congress has exclusive jurisdiction, with the single exception of a law requiring employers of women in stores and other enumerated places to provide seats for them when not actively at work.

Three States, California, Colorado, and Washington, have adopted laws prohibiting the employment of women for more than eight hours in any one day, as provided in this bill. Such a law has been in effect in California for nearly three years, and is said to work well, and that the employers do not now object to it.

We have had a law in the State of Michigan for nearly five years prohibiting the employment of women "for a period longer than an average of 9 hours per day, or 54 hours in any one week, or more than 10 hours in any one day." This law was objected to at first by certain employers, such as proprietors of laundries, retail merchants, and others, but they have had no serious difficulty in living up to its provisions. This bill goes further than the Michigan law, in that it prohibits the employment of females more than 8 hours in any one day, or more than six days in any one week.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MAPES. Certainly.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Did any manufacturing establishments move out of Michigan after that law was passed?

Mr. MAPES. I never heard of any.

It is no longer necessary to argue the merits of this class of legislation, as far as it relates to the welfare of the employees. The legislation in the different States limiting the hours of labor and providing for better sanitary and improved conditions of factories gives ample testimony to this fact.

In the hearings before the committee that had this bill in charge in the last Congress is a copy of a paper prepared by Dr. Rosalie Slaughter Morton, of New York City, on the "Effects of industrial strain on the working woman." This paper was read by the author before the International Congress of Hygiene held in the city of Washington in the fall of 1912, and in it she makes this startling statement:

The regulation of work to an eight-hour day has proved necessary for men, in order that they may retain their efficiency, and such regulation of hours for women is equally necessary. Shorter hours and fairer pay would lessen the effects of industrial strain upon the working woman, both individually and eugenically, to an extent which would raise the health and efficiency of our race at least 70 per cent.

As was well said by another witness before that committee, page 20 of the hearings:

It does not require expert medical testimony to convince you of these evil effects. You can see the effect of this strain even in the department stores, where the labor is presumed to be light, and certainly it is light as compared with many other occupations; but as you observe the physical condition of the women engaged there you will be impressed with the fact that their health is by no means robust. They do not compare with the average farm girls, who, as you know, work probably considerably over eight hours per day, but there is a great difference in the physical environment.

This legislation is objected to in behalf of those establishments which are obliged to continue in operation every day of the week, such as telegraph, telephone, and transportation companies, hotels and restaurants, by retail merchants, because there is no exception for certain rush seasons of the year, such as Christmas time, and on the part of laundries and others on account of the peculiar nature and the necessities of the business. These objections have all been urged in the States where the law has been passed, but it has been demonstrated in those States that they are not at all insurmountable.

Other objections have been that it would have a tendency to reduce the wages of girls and women workers, throw them out of employment, and substitute men in their places. The exact opposite, however, has proved to be the case. Instead of putting the women out of employment, it has made it necessary to employ and has actually given employment to more women, and in very few cases have the wages been reduced. The increased efficiency of the workers has more than offset the reduction in the hours. As was said by Mr. Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, before the committee in advocating the passage of this bill, page 34 of the hearings:

It is a law as invariable as the law of gravitation that wherever the hours of labor are reduced wages are increased. You can compare any one country with another country and you will find it to be an absolute fact that where the hours of labor are least there the wages are highest. * * *

I am speaking of a normal workday. You compare any two States in our country and you will find that where the hours of labor are longest that wages are lowest. Let us carry the illustration still further. In two industries in any one State you will find the same thing will obtain. Compare any two factories in any one industry, or any two occupations in any one locality, and you will find where the hours of labor are longest there the wages are lowest.

On the possibility of the men taking the place of the women, Mr. Gompers said, page 37 of the hearings:

Nothing like that is likely to arise, because the men in the year 1913 will not work 16 hours.

Mr. Gompers also makes this interesting statement:

I regard the women workers and minors as particularly the concern of the Government. I want the men to secure the eight-hour day by their own effort, by their own individual and their associated effort.

The objection which is often raised to this class of legislation, that if it is passed in one State the employers of labor will move to another where the law does not apply, and in that way injuriously affect the workers and the industry of the State, can not be urged against this bill because of the fact that there is practically no manufacturing within the District of Columbia. As was well stated in the hearings:

The employment of women here is chiefly in industries which in the nature of things can not move away, such as hotels, telephone service, laundries, and stores; nearly all the industries which are characteristic of the District of Columbia would be obliged to stay where the people whom they serve are, whether the working-day is eight hours, as the Government guarantees to its employees, or whether it is unlimited.

The Federal Government does not allow the employment of men working for it for more than eight hours per day; certainly it should not allow the employment of women for a longer period within the District of Columbia, where it has full and exclusive power to regulate such employment. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD].

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I take very great pleasure in supporting this measure. I want to say that it is not an ill-considered piece of legislation. I had the honor to be a member of the Committee on Labor in the last Congress, and we held exhaustive hearings upon this bill. I believe it was the unanimous opinion of the committee that this legislation ought to pass. It was recommended to the last House.

There is one phase of this measure that has been partially overlooked by those who have spoken upon it, and I think it one of the best features of this bill. Under the provisions of the bill we limit not only the hours of labor, but we say when these girls must stop work in the evening, and we fix the hour at 6 o'clock. The result is that girls of tender age will reach their homes and be under the protection and care of their parents and not be turned loose upon the streets of this city in the late hours of the night. That is one feature of this bill that I think is very wholesome.

Mr. Chairman, I have always been an advocate of all child-labor movements in my State. I happened to be in the Georgia Legislature in 1900, when we initiated the law for the protection of children in Georgia. I am sorry to admit that that law to-day is not what it should be, but we are making great progress upon the lines of prohibiting children from working in the mills of our State. To my mind the ideal condition in this country would be that we would prohibit children under 14 years of age working under any conditions, and coupled with that there should be a compulsory-education law. [Applause.]

Mr. WOODRUFF. I will ask the gentleman from Georgia if he does not believe it would be a good thing to compel the community to furnish support to all orphans under 14 years of age, and allow them to gain an education?

Mr. HOWARD. I think it would be a splendid idea, but there are certain conditions under which that idea can not be carried into effect in every instance. But my experience in life has been that whenever you find children or girls of tender age in gainful employment you find one of three conditions existing. You find either a no-account father, who is not worth the powder and shot it would take to kill him, who is living off the lifeblood of his little children; or you find some poor woman upon whom the hand of Providence has been heavily laid; or you find that the family itself is of such a low grade of intelligence that it takes the concerted efforts of the whole family to make a living. I have found that to be the condition where I have found children working. It is a sad commentary on the manhood of this country that women should have to work at all. I wish to the good Lord that no woman had to work. I wish they could all stay at home and raise their families, for upon the mother's training in the home depends the future of our Nation. But in some cases they are forced to work, because all men do not make ideal husbands and ideal fathers. But if we were all ideal husbands and ideal fathers, not only would the women not have to work, but they would not even want to vote in this country. [Applause and laughter.]

Mr. WOODRUFF. Will the gentleman yield again?

Mr. HOWARD. With pleasure.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I confine my question entirely to the orphans who have no fathers, worthless or otherwise.

Mr. HOWARD. My reply to that is this: In the great State of Georgia we take care of hundreds of orphans in our homes. Coupled with their care is every educational facility. But where they are not in these homes I agree with the gentleman that there ought to be some method by which these boys and girls who are orphans could be picked up and given an education and taught how to earn a livelihood and make of them useful men and women. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MANAHAN].

Mr. MANAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I concur in the hope expressed by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] and other gentlemen that the time will come when no woman will be compelled to work for wages. Work at a fair wage should be optional with her if she desires personal independence. I do not agree with the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HOWARD] that it would necessarily follow that if she were not working, woman would not care to vote. I think one of the most hopeful conclusions that can be drawn from the larger leisure that this bill will give women who are compelled to work lies in the fact that the leisure will give them an opportunity to read more and to understand better the conditions under which they live. When the proper time comes this better understanding will enable them to make better citizens, as expressed by their suffrage, which is inevitable. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I am in favor of this bill also for the reason that it is, as expressed by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MOORE], a humane bill. It is all well enough to say that women ought not to work at all, but while industrial conditions are as they are, while men who are not of the "no-account sort," but real men, earnest, ambitious, industrious men, are compelled, through no fault of theirs, to work for less than a living wage, it becomes necessary for the women depending upon them to go out and toil for sustenance and to help support the family. If the men of this Nation, in the exercise of the suffrage which they have had for a long time, would exercise patriotic intelligence and refuse to yield to the pleadings of the selfish and greedy great in this Nation; if, in other words, the laws of the country were what they ought to be, and the laws relating to taxation did not do injustice to the ordinary man, the ordinary woman would not have to toil; and if she did toil, it would be at a decent wage. But while the laws are as they have been so long, enabling men with greed and cunning to appropriate and absorb the wages of the toiling masses, men and women, and to take an unfair portion of the products of the field as well as the products of labor, then it becomes necessary for women and little girls to work for food to eat and clothing to wear and a place to live. I trust that this proper step, which is proper because it recognizes the sacred rights of womanhood, childhood, and manhood as well, for a right to live, think, study, read, and enjoy life, as well as the right to labor, will receive the overwhelming support of the Members of this House. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SELDOMRIDGE].

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Mr. Chairman, I am glad that I come from a State, one of the first in the country to pass legislation to regulate the hours of labor for women. This legislation was not secured through the usual channels. The legislature, unlike this House, I trust, heeded the wishes of those who were opposed to the legislation, and the bill did not pass the general assembly. Owing to the fact that we enjoy the benefits of the initiative and referendum in our State, the people initiated a law, and by a tremendous majority it was placed on the statute books. It is no longer a matter of experiment.

We have tried it for two years, and business conditions in our State have been adjusted to meet its provisions without any inconvenience, and to-day the people of the State are in entire sympathy with the purpose and object of the law.

The bill in my opinion, however, is not quite as broad as it should be. There is some ambiguity in the language. I believe that it should apply to those employments of women that are not altogether confined to mechanical and mercantile establishments. There are many women employed in professional offices where the hours of labor are as long and as strenuous and as difficult as some of those who are employed in mercantile establishments.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. I will.

Mr. MOORE. Does the gentleman think it ought to apply to stenographers?

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Yes; I do.

Mr. MOORE. And to other young women who train themselves for professional pursuits?

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Is a stenographer training herself for a professional pursuit?

Mr. MOORE. She is required to attain a certain degree of proficiency before she can be employed. I call attention to the stenographers in the service of Congressmen. Their hours are not limited.

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. I believe that the stenographer's work performed by women is strenuous and difficult, and in a certain sense inimical to health, and that it would be beneficial if we could by this act provide for eight hours employment for all women stenographers in Government, professional, or mercantile employment.

Mr. MOORE. What does the gentleman say about the young women employed in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing?

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. I am not familiar with the conditions that prevail in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. This Government could well improve the sanitary conditions of women's work in many of the Government offices in the District. It has been a shame and a reproach for the Government to force women to work in some of the offices in this city under insanitary conditions that obtain there.

Mr. MOORE. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PETERS] thought this bill would apply to women working in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. What is the gentleman's idea?

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. I am not a constitutional lawyer; I am a business man; and I am not prepared to pass upon points of law.

Mr. CURRY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Certainly.

Mr. CURRY. Does the gentleman know that a similar law prevails in his State, and that it covers the stenographers of Colorado?

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Yes; I do.

Mr. CURRY. What is good enough for your State is good enough for the District, is it not?

Mr. SELDOMRIDGE. Yes. So, Mr. Chairman, I have no hesitancy in giving my vote to the passage of this legislation. The only thing I object to is the limited provisions of the bill, and I wish it might be made of more general application.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN].

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kentucky, chairman of the committee, this morning, when he started the debate on this matter, expressed regret that women had to be engaged in these employments and blamed the women for accepting conditions that put the men out of employment; he blamed them for engaging in the gainful pursuits, working in the factories and the restaurants, where they now work for wages. The necessary conclusion would be that there was an economical injustice done to the men and all the human race by women engaging in the various occupations.

Now, if there is anything that the women claim that they are entitled to in this country, it is, like other human beings, that of equality. They do not want to be placed on a pedestal and given unusual privileges and unusual rights; all they want is that they shall be considered exactly as they are; they want to have the right to work if they want to work. They want to have the right to engage in all these things, if they care to, and they do not want to be subjected, and the human race does not want them subjected, to the rules and conditions that make it impossible for them to maintain themselves when they do elect to work.

A woman is entitled to work if she wants to work for wages. The suggestion that women be required, or permitted, to do nothing in this world except to live in their homes is a misconception. There are women who can not be confined in the walls of a home. I know of a woman in this city, a splendid lady she is, whose husband is entirely worthless, a drunkard; she has several children to support. How can she maintain herself and children except by work? She wants to work, she ought to be given an equal right to work with any man and in any position that she is fitted for. She wants the right to apply for any job wherever she is qualified for it.

Out in the West we have adopted suffrage and secured the aid of women in legislation. It is said if you give to women this right, that you take away at once the chivalry, the respect they are entitled to. Women do not want to lose that respect and consideration to which their sex entitles them, and indeed they do not. But when we frame the laws and the rules under which women must work we ought to consider, we ought to have regard and respect for their mental and physical condition, and ought to make it so that they can work and earn their wages, so that they can engage in these occupations if they want to or if they are compelled to and not have to rely upon a man, if they so desire.

And that whenever they are thrown on their own resources they can exercise their choice and go on about the work of sustaining themselves and their children and those dependent upon them in an independent way and as any American citizen would desire. I am certainly in favor of this 8-hour law for women workers. We have it in my State of Washington, and it works well. It accomplishes good results. It does not throw women out of employment, but it enables more women to work. It puts a condition on employment so that women can engage in it with respectability and some degree of independence, and they can be efficient and at the same time can return to their homes and spend a part of the time in their homes and have recreation and be better citizens and be more useful in the community. We believe that without such laws women and all employees are reduced to a form of economic servitude that is not fair or right.

WOMEN IN GOVERNMENT CIVIL SERVICE.

I recently made an investigation of the opportunity for women to gain employment offered by the Government as compared with the opportunity offered to men. I notice the census of 1910 showed that in post offices in cities of 75,000 or more in population in the United States there were 1,646 male clerks and 12 female clerks. Such a contrast proves conclusively that opportunity is not equal between the sexes in these offices. To begin with, the examinations are all conducted by men under rules provided by men. Then it is especially provided that femininity may be held a bar to service in almost every department of governmental activity. Color is not to be a bar; but no female can get a job in the average Government position unless the particular boss in charge wants a woman. Thus any woman who holds such a job does not have to thank the Government for her job, like the man clerk, but generally she is under obligation to some man for waiving the sex bar.

Salaries of men and women are not equal. Women invariably are paid a lower salary, especially in Government service. The following is an illustration of advertisements issued by the Civil Service Commission in seeking stenographers and others:

SEC. 276. Stenographers and typewriters who are competent and willing to accept the usual salaries offered (men $900, women $720) have much greater prospects for appointment than applicants for other clerical positions. The supply of male eligibles willing to accept the usual entrance salary is not equal to the demand. An excellent opportunity is therefore open to competent stenographers and typewriters from States which have not received their full quota of appointments.

So we see a discrimination as to amount of salary as well as to sex. Recently out of 368 examinations, 314 of them only were open to women. The following is an illustration of the average advertisement for civil-service help issued by the Civil Service Commission:

No. 1234.

UNITED STATES CIVIL-SERVICE EXAMINATION—STENOGRAPHER AND TYPEWRITER (MALE)—NOVEMBER 25, 1913.

The United States Civil Service Commission states that notwithstanding its efforts it has been unable to secure a sufficient number of male stenographer and typewriter eligibles to meet the needs of the service in the departments at Washington. Examinations are held every month except December. The next examination will be held in the larger cities throughout the United States on November 25, 1913. This will be the last opportunity that applicants will have to be examined until the fourth Tuesday in January. Young men who are willing to accept entrance salaries of $840 and $900 per annum have excellent opportunities for appointment. While the entrance salary is small, promotion is reasonably rapid for those who merit it.

Application forms and information in regard to examinations may be secured from the commission at Washington or from any of the district secretaries who are located at the post office, Boston, Mass.; Philadelphia, Pa.; Atlanta, Ga.; Cincinnati, Ohio; Chicago, Ill.; St. Paul, Minn.; Seattle, Wash.; San Francisco, Cal.; customhouse, New York, N. Y.; New Orleans, La.; old customhouse, St. Louis, Mo.

No. 1167.

UNITED STATES CIVIL-SERVICE EXAMINATION—LABORATORY ASSISTANT IN CERAMICS (MALE)—DECEMBER 10, 1913.

The United States Civil Service Commission announces an open competitive examination for laboratory assistant in ceramics, for men only, on December 10, 1913, at the places mentioned in the list printed hereon. From the register of eligibles resulting from this examination certification will be made to fill several vacancies in this position in the Bureau of Standards, Department of Commerce, at salaries ranging from $900 to $1,200 per annum, and vacancies as they may occur in other branches of the service requiring similar qualifications, unless it is found to be in the interest of the service to fill any vacancy by reinstatement, transfer, or promotion.

The person or persons appointed to this position will be stationed at the Pittsburgh (Pa.) laboratory of the Bureau of Standards, and will assist in original investigations in the chemistry and physics of clay and clay products.

As few applications are received for the examination for this position, qualified persons are urged to enter this examination:

Competitors will be examined in the following subjects, which will have the relative weights indicated:

Subjects:	Weights.
1. Practical and technical questions on ceramics, including also questions on geology and mineralogy	30
2. Elementary physics	15
3. General inorganic chemistry	15

Subjects—Continued.	Weights.
4. Thesis or report (to be submitted to the examiner on the date of the examination)	15
5. Education and technical experience (in ceramics)	25

Issued October 31, 1913.

I ask if there is any reason why women should not have the right to enter this examination and receive this employment.

No. 1165.

UNITED STATES CIVIL SERVICE EXAMINATION—LABORATORY ASSISTANT IN CHEMISTRY (MALE).

December 10–11, 1913.

The United States Civil Service Commission announces an open competitive examination for laboratory assistant in chemistry, for men only, on December 10 and 11, 1913, at the places mentioned in the list printed hereon. From the register of eligibles resulting from this examination certification will be made to fill vacancies in this position in the Bureau of Standards, Department of Commerce, at salaries varying from $1,000 to $1,440 per annum, and vacancies as they may occur in positions requiring similar qualifications, unless it is found to be in the interest of the service to fill any vacancy by reinstatement, transfer, or promotion.

The duties in connection with these positions will be of a routine nature for the most part of the first few years. Promotions are made to the more advanced work, involving original investigations, as opportunities arise and fitness is shown.

Competitors will be examined in the following subjects, which will have the relative weights indicated:

Subjects:	Weights.
1. General physics	25
2. General chemistry	50
3. Education and experience	25
Total	100

Applicants must show that they have been graduated or that they are about to be graduated from colleges or technical schools, or that they have attained an equivalent education or training.

Is there any reason why the positions mentioned in this order should not be open to women as well as men?

Here I would like to call to the attention of this House the fact that each of these orders contains in their first paragraph the words:

And vacancies as they may occur in positions requiring similar qualifications.

The effect of this is to keep women out permanently, both as to the position, in the first place, and as to the filling of vacancies which may occur later.

I now cite the following further orders, which I will abbreviate as much as possible:

No. 1154.

UNITED STATES CIVIL-SERVICE EXAMINATION—AID (MALE)—NATIONAL HERBARIUM, NATIONAL MUSEUM.

December 3, 1913.

The United States Civil Service Commission announces an open competitive examination for aid, for men only, on December 3, 1913, at the places mentioned in the list printed hereon. From the register of eligibles resulting from this examination certification will be made to fill a vacancy in this position in the Smithsonian Institution, National Herbarium, Washington, D. C., at $1,200 per annum, and vacancies as they may occur in positions requiring similar qualifications, unless it is found to be in the interest of the service to fill any vacancy by reinstatement, transfer, or promotion.

The duties of this position will consist of general work about the herbarium, including the preparation of material and its arrangement in the herbarium.

It is desired to secure persons having a fair knowledge of systematic botany and who are familiar with taxonomic methods and with herbarium work in general, including collecting, preserving, mounting, and labeling of plant specimens and their care in the herbarium. It is desirable that applicants have a fair knowledge of Latin, and preferably French and German also.

Competitors will be examined in the following subjects, which will have the relative weights indicated:

Subjects:	Weights.
1. Practical questions	60
2. Education, training, and experience	40

No. 1153.

UNITED STATES CIVIL-SERVICE EXAMINATION—AID, QUALIFIED IN CHEMISTRY (MALE).

December 3, 1913.

The United States Civil Service Commission announces an open competitive examination for aid, qualified in chemistry, for men only, on December 3, 1913, at the places mentioned in the list printed hereon. From the register of eligibles resulting from this examination certification will be made to fill a vacancy in this position in the Pittsburgh laboratory, Bureau of Standards, Department of Commerce, at a salary ranging from $720 to $840 per annum, and vacancies as they may occur in positions requiring similar qualifications, unless it is found to be in the interest of the service to fill any vacancy by reinstatement, transfer, or promotion.

Competitors will be examined in the following subjects, which will have the relative weights indicated:

Subjects:	Weights.
1. Elementary algebra, geometry, and trigonometry	25
2. General physics	25
3. Elementary chemistry	30
4. Training and experience	20
Total	100

Special consideration in rating the element of training and experience will be given to graduates of mechanical training, technical, or scientific schools, or to those who have had equivalent training in scientific or technical laboratories.

Statements as to training and experience are accepted subject to verification.

The Bureau of Standards furnishes excellent opportunity for young men having preliminary training in technical schools who wish to fit themselves for advanced scientific work. The work of the bureau includes scientific and technical work in physics, chemistry, and engineering. The aids are expected to assist those engaged in laboratory work and testing.

Note the fall in salary in the following, although there is no material difference in the required qualifications. The word "female" is added and the salary is cut "accordingly."

No. 1146.

UNITED STATES CIVIL-SERVICE EXAMINATION—LABORATORY AID IN PHYSICS (MALE AND FEMALE).

December 3, 1913.

The United States Civil Service Commission announces an open competitive examination for laboratory aid in physics, for both men and women, December 3, 1913, at the places mentioned in the list printed hereon. From the register of eligibles resulting from this examination certification will be made to fill seven vacancies in this position in the Bureau of Plant Industry, Department of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., at salaries ranging from $600 to $720 a year, and vacancies as they may occur in positions requiring similar qualifications, unless it is found to be in the interest of the service to fill any vacancy by reinstatement, transfer, or promotion.

It is desired to secure persons who have had at least two years' college training and who are interested in physics.

Competitors will be examined in the following subjects, which will have the relative weights indicated:

Subjects:	Weights.
1. Elementary algebra, geometry, and trigonometry	30
2. General physics	30
3. Elementary mechanical drawing	20
4. Education, training, and experience	20

No. 1143.

UNITED STATES CIVIL-SERVICE EXAMINATION—CHEMIST IN FOREST PRODUCTS (MALE).

December 3, 1913.

The United States Civil Service Commission announces an open competitive examination for chemist in forest products, for men only, on December 3, 1913, at the places mentioned in the list printed hereon. From the register of eligibles resulting from this examination certification will be made to fill vacancies in this position in the Forest Service, for duty at Madison, Wis., at salaries of from $1,600 to $2,500 per annum, and vacancies as they may occur in positions requiring similar qualifications, unless it is found to be in the interest of the service to fill any vacancy by reinstatement, transfer, or promotion.

The minimum salary is usually paid at entrance, and only in exceptional cases of unusual qualifications, including a large amount of valuable experience, will a higher entrance salary than $1,600 be paid.

Competitors will be examined in the following subjects, which will have the relative weights indicated:

Subjects:	Weights.
1. Organic chemistry	15
2. Chemistry employed in industries utilizing forest products	25
3. Thesis of not less than 1,000 words or publication on some subject bearing upon the work of the position (to be submitted to the examiner on the date of the examination)	20
4. Education, training, and experience	40
Total	100

An educational training equivalent to that required for the degree of bachelor of science or chemical engineer from a reputable college or university, and at least three years' actual experience in research or industrial chemical work, is a prerequisite for consideration for this position. It is desired to secure as applicants for this position persons who have a special knowledge of the chemistry of wood distillation, pulp manufacture, tannins, and gums derived from wood, and wood preservation.

Statements as to education, training, and experience are accepted subject to verification.

Applicants must have reached their twentieth but not their fiftieth birthday on the date of the examination.

The thesis may be either typewritten or in the handwriting of the applicant.

No. 2.

UNITED STATES CIVIL-SERVICE EXAMINATION—LIBRARY CATALOGUER.

January 7, 1914.

The United States Civil Service Commission announces an open competitive examination for library cataloguer, for both men and women, on January 7, 1914, at the places mentioned in the list printed hereon. From the register of eligibles resulting from this examination certification will be made to fill a vacancy in the position of library assistant in the Bureau of Education, Department of the Interior, Washington, D. C., at $1,000 a year, and vacancies as they may occur in both permanent and temporary positions of library cataloguer in the departmental service at Washington, D. C., at salaries ranging from $720 to $1,000 a year, unless it is found to be in the interest of the service to fill any vacancy by reinstatement, transfer, or promotion.

For the specific vacancy in the Bureau of Education, mentioned above, it is desired to secure a person qualified for bibliographical and reference work in educational literature.

Competitors will be examined in the following subjects, which will have the relative weights indicated:

Subjects:	Weights.
1. Library economy	30
2. Bibliography (including cataloguing and indexing)	35
3. German, and either French or Spanish	10
4. Education, training, and experience	25
Total	100

At least one year's training in a library school or one year's experience in actual library work in a library where modern methods are employed is a prerequisite for consideration for this position.

Statements as to education, training, and experience are accepted subject to verification.

Applicants must have reached their eighteenth, but not their fortieth birthday on the date of the examination.

Under an act of Congress applicants for this examination must be examined in the State or Territory in which they reside and have been actually domiciled in such State or Territory for at least one year previous to the date of the examination.

This examination is open to all citizens of the United States who meet the requirements.

The following sections of instructions to applicants would probably be called jokers by women applicants for Federal jobs:

CUSTOMS SERVICE.

73. In the customs service women are, unless otherwise specified, eligible for appointment to the following-named positions only: Deputy collector, clerk, stenographer and typewriter, inspectress, and cashier.

POST OFFICE SERVICE.

82. Married women will not be examined for the Post Office Service. This prohibition, however, does not apply to women who are divorced or to those who are separated from their husbands and support themselves.

CUSTODIAN SERVICE.

105. The custodian service covers positions the duties of which relate to the care and management of public buildings outside of Washington, D. C. Women are not eligible for appointment in the custodian service, except for the positions of clerk (stenographer and typewriter) and charwoman.

STENOGRAPHERS AND TYPEWRITERS.

139. Women are not admitted to examinations for the Isthmian Canal and Philippine services, and they are admitted to the departmental service examinations only twice a year, in the spring and fall.

140. Application forms may be obtained, and applications may be filed, at any time, except that applications from women for the departmental service are accepted only when the spring and fall examinations have been announced, unless the needs of the service require otherwise.

142. The demand for male stenographer and typewriter eligibles usually is greater than the supply. Promotion to the higher grades is reasonably rapid for those whose services prove satisfactory.

CERTIFICATION.

183. Separate registers are established for men and women, and certification is made according to the requisition of the nominating officer.

There is a rule of the Post Office Department that when a woman who holds a position as postmistress marries while holding office she loses her position, although she may be reappointed under her new name.

I understand that in the position of editorial clerk women who do the same work as men in the same position receive $900 per year while men receive $1,400 per year.

We are coming upon a time when women are demanding and will receive fairer consideration in the making of laws and in the administration of economic and moral affairs.

The Democratic Party has gone on record against permitting a committee in this House on the suffrage question. That party has thus arrayed itself against 4,000,000 women voters in the West, and in my opinion these women voters will be heard from at the next election.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND].

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. Mr. Chairman, as the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. SELDOMRIDGE] so well stated, the Western States, the suffrage States, if you please, are the States which have taken the lead in legislation of this character. California has a law similar to this upon her statute books, enacted in 1911 and amended in 1913. The constitutionality of the California act was upheld by the supreme court of that State in 1912 (124 Pac. Rep., 427).

The California law is, in my opinion, more far-reaching. For instance, I notice that in the classes of employment the California law includes public lodging houses, apartment houses, and places of amusement, which should not have been excluded from this bill, particularly places of amusement. In regard to the penalties imposed, the California act is more drastic. For the second offense an employer can be imprisoned. I believe this bill should carry similar penalties. The law in California up to this time has worked entirely satisfactorily. While it was first thought it might have a tendency to prevent women from obtaining employment, lower wages, and drive industries out of the State, so far the effect has not been as feared in some quarters.

California, Colorado, and the State of Washington have set an example that the Capital of the Nation may well follow. Let this be a model law for those States which have not seen fit to enact similar laws in the interest of the women compelled to toil. It speaks well for the manhood of the Nation that this meritorious measure has practically the unanimous support of the Members of this House.

It is a well-established fact that where women are subjected to the physical and mental strain of long hours their health is necessarily impaired. Not only do the women suffer ill effects, but even more serious is the influence upon future generations. It seems that argument should be unnecessary. I have, while a Member of this body, taken an active interest in the enactment and enforcement of laws to prevent the terrible white-slave traffic. Effective laws have been enacted, and Congress is generous in providing funds for the enforcement of the white-slave traffic laws now upon the statute books. But I consider laws of this character fully as important. They have a tendency to lessen the burdens of the girl compelled to labor, and there is perhaps less temptation to yield to those who, taking advantage of the situation, might attempt to lure by promises of an easier life.

My colleague and namesake from California [Mr. J. I. NOLAN], a consistent friend of the man and woman who toils, introduced a bill early in the session modeled after the California law. The pending measure includes many of the provisions of his bill.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD a copy of the California law.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by inserting the document referred to. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, before the gentleman takes his seat, I desire to ask him a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. Certainly.

Mr. FOWLER. I want to know when the California law was passed?

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. In 1911.

Mr. FOWLER. The reason I want to know is because I have read a report of the canneries in the gentleman's State and in Maryland, and I find that they were in the habit of working women and children as long as 17 hours a day in those canneries.

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. I do not think the gentleman will find that condition prevailing in California to-day.

Mr. FOWLER. I trust it has not been done recently or that it will not be done any more.

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. I do not think such conditions prevail in California.

Mr. FOWLER. I do not mean to say that there was a law to that effect, but there was a practice to that effect, and also that they even worked for less than $5 a week.

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. I do not think that is true in an enlightened State like California. I sincerely hope it is not true.

Mr. FOWLER. I can put a report of that character in a little speech I can make on the floor of the House.

Mr. J. R. KNOWLAND. Well, do not put it in my speech.

The following is the California law limiting the hours of labor for women:

The people of the State of California do enact as follows:

SECTION 1. An act entitled "An act limiting the hours of labor of females employed in any manufacturing, mechanical, or mercantile establishment, laundry, hotel, or restaurant, or telegraph or telephone establishment or office, or by any express or transportation company, compelling each employer in any manufacturing, mechanical, or mercantile establishment, laundry, hotel, or restaurant, or other establishment employing any female, to provide suitable seats for all female employees and to permit them to use such seats when they are not engaged in the active duties of their employment, and providing a penalty for failure, neglect, or refusal of the employer to comply with the provisions of this act, and for permitting or suffering any overseer, superintendent, foreman, or other agent of any such employer to violate the provisions of this act," approved March 22, 1911, is hereby amended to read as follows:

"SECTION 1. No female shall be employed in any manufacturing, mechanical, or mercantile establishment, laundry, hotel, public lodging house, apartment house, hospital, place of amusement, or restaurant, or telegraph or telephone establishment or office, or by any express or transportation company in this State more than 8 hours during any one day or more than 48 hours in one week. The hours of work may be so arranged as to permit the employment of females at any time so that they shall not work more than 8 hours during the 24 hours of one day or 48 hours during any one week: Provided, however, That the provisions of this section in relation to hours of employment shall not apply to nor affect the harvesting, curing, canning, or drying of any variety of perishable fruit or vegetable nor to graduate nurses in hospitals.

"SEC. 2. Every employer in any manufacturing, mechanical, or mercantile establishment, laundry, hotel, or restaurant, or other establishment employing any female shall provide suitable seats for all female employees and shall permit them to use such seats when they are not engaged in the active duties of their employment.

"SEC. 3. The bureau of labor statistics shall enforce the provisions of this act. The commissioner, his deputies, and agents shall have all powers and authority of sheriffs or other peace officers to make arrests for violations of the provisions of this act and to serve all processes and notices thereunder throughout the State.

"SEC. 4. Any employer who shall permit or require any female to work in any of the places mentioned in section 1 more than the number of hours provided for in this act during any day of 24 hours, or who shall fail, neglect, or refuse to so arrange the work of females in his employ so that they shall not work more than the number of hours provided for in this act during any day of 24 hours, or who shall fail, neglect, or refuse to provide suitable seats, as provided in section 2 of this act, or who shall permit or suffer any overseer, superintendent, foreman, or other agent of any such employer to violate any of the provisions of this act, shall be guilty of a misdemeanor, and upon conviction thereof shall be punished for a first offense by a fine of not less than $25 nor more than $50; for a second offense, by a fine of not less than $100 nor more than $250, or by imprisonment for not more than 60 days, or by both such fine and imprisonment. All fines imposed and collected under the provisions of this act shall be paid into the State treasury and credited to the contingent fund of the bureau of labor statistics."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LAFFERTY].

Mr. LAFFERTY. Mr. Chairman, immediately after the Supreme Court of California upheld the constitutionality of the eight-hour law for women in that State, which was in the spring of 1912, I wrote to Sacramento to the secretary of state for a copy of the law, and, changing it merely to make it applicable to the District of Columbia, I introduced it into this House. So far as I have been able to find, that was the first bill ever introduced in this Congress providing for an eight-hour day for females in the District of Columbia. The following December the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] introduced a substantial copy of the bill in the Senate, and two days later the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PETERS] introduced substantially the same bill in the House.

The bill of the gentleman from Massachusetts was favorably reported during the last Congress, and an effort was made to pass it through this House during the closing hours of the Sixty-second Congress, in which effort I had some little part. That is the history of the legislation. I do not think there is any doubt but that the law would have been passed long ago if we could have brought it to a vote in the House—that is, a record vote. That the bill is going to pass now, there is not any question.

The people of the United States favor an eight-hour law not only for women, but if the question were submitted to an initiative vote, they would enact the same kind of a law for men, women, and children. I favor such a law and have a bill pending for an eight-hour day for both men and women in this District. Eight hours is long enough during any 24 for any human machine to be diligently applied to any occupation. It is much longer than any Member of this House would continuously apply himself——

Mr. MANN. Speak for yourself, speak for yourself. [Laughter.]

Mr. LAFFERTY. To any occupation if he has any regard for the health that God Almighty put inside his skin, or if he has any regard for posterity that he may bring onto this earth.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAFFERTY. Certainly.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Without determining what regard the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] may have for his health, which I think is not what he ought to have, I am very certain that he puts in more time than this law provides, or twice as much.

Mr. MANN. And I shall be very glad to put my health up against the health of the gentleman from Oregon, and I make proffer now. [Laughter.]

Mr. LAFFERTY. I would be willing to pose for a photograph with the gentleman from Illinois at any time.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to be referee.

Mr. LAFFERTY. At the time I introduced this legislation I was living over here at the Willard Hotel in a little cuddy hole of a room, for which I paid $3 a day—$90 a month—and there were some old Irish women who were chambermaids there in that hotel looking after 30 rooms a day each.

They worked from 7 o'clock in the morning until 6 o'clock at night. They worked 11 hours each day. They worked every day in the week, Sundays and holidays, and never got a vacation. And two days out of each week they worked 17 hours, or from 7 o'clock in the morning until 12 o'clock at night. And they received the munificent sum of $15 a month for that service. And during the same year that corporation, so I am informed, paid a dividend to its millionaire owners of 40 per cent. You can not trust this matter to the owners of these great institutions. You can not trust the greed of mankind to treat humanity fairly when it comes to the matter of employment of men, women, or children.

I remember of speaking to an old lady employed over there at that hotel the day I introduced the bill, telling her that I had introduced it, and I said: "It will probably be a long time before it ever sees daylight out of the committee to which it was referred and probably a long time before such a bill becomes a law." But I am not a pessimist. I have always said that this country is growing better, and I want to congratulate the committee which reported this bill, and I want to congratulate the Democratic Party, which is in control of this House now, for having brought legislation of this kind to a vote. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. THACHER].

Mr. THACHER. Mr. Chairman, I give my hearty support to this excellent bill. It provides that in the District of Columbia, over which Congress has jurisdiction, no women shall be employed in any factory or mercantile establishment more than 8 hours in any one day, or 48 hours a week, and prohibits night work for girls under 18 years of age. Congress several years ago provided a child-labor law for the District of Columbia, and the present bill has been under consideration for more than a year, so that it is not a hasty piece of legislation.

We have listened to-day to eloquent tributes to one of our greatest Presidents, and it seems highly appropriate that on this day, rich with the memories of this beloved President, this bill, drawn to protect the health of the working women of the District, should come up for consideration. This bill has the support of Republicans, Democrats, and Progressives of this House, and I trust that it will pass unanimously.

Reference has been made to the fact that Congressmen are sometimes obliged to work for more than eight hours. The distinguished gentleman from Oregon [Mr. LAFFERTY] has just laid down the golden rule that eight hours ought to be the limit of a day's work. I presume that he would exempt Congressmen. At all events, I plead guilty to the soft impeachment, for I frequently find that I need more than eight hours to finish the day's job. There may even possibly be on some busy days 16 hours of employment for me; but of these I consider that eight hours are given up to work and eight hours to play, for, you see, I spend half of this time in my office and the other half in the House, and I will leave it to the imagination of the Members to guess which half I consider work and which half play.

No, Mr. Chairman; even if Congressmen are required to exceed the speed limit in the number of hours which they must work daily, I believe that there should be a proper legal limit for the hours of labor for men, women, and children. We ought particularly to protect and safeguard by humane laws our women and children, for they are the greatest blessings which we have.

As regards the eight-hour labor law for women, California, Colorado, Arizona, and Washington already have this law. Eleven States, including Massachusetts, have the 54-hour-per-week law. Twenty-two other States have set a limit of some kind to the hours of labor for women, but much still remains to be done, for there are States where little or no progress has been made in providing proper laws limiting the hours of labor. In Massachusetts there is a 54-hour law for women and a 56-hour law for men, and our textile mills of New Bedford, Fall River, and other cities of the Bay State have to compete with mills in other parts of our country where women work 58, 60, and, in some cases, more than 60 hours, while the men work, in some cases, in these mills from 60 to 66 hours. This seems to me uneven competition.

Furthermore, regardless of any other considerations, I believe that it is unfair to these women and men that they should be called upon to work for these extremely long hours. I believe that the children should also be protected. I stand for just labor laws for the protection of the men, women, and children of our country. If, under existing conditions, it is impossible constitutionally for Congress to enact a national labor law to protect the women and children of our land, I favor an amendment to the Constitution of the United States which will secure this desired legislation. I am ready to work for this end.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. KENT].

Mr. KENT. Mr. Chairman, this bill is to prevent the overwork of women in specified avocations in the District of Columbia. It follows the line of progress, of justice, and of rational economics.

We must realize, if we have any knowledge at all, that society can only be served by the productive enterprise of society. We must also realize, and we are forced to realize, that those who are producers in society must be protected in their production against waste of life, against risk of life, and against the strain of life. In other words, production may be increased temporarily by overworking our people, overstraining and destroying our people; but we must pay for it all in the end. Production is the chief factor. There can be nothing to divide or to distribute unless we first pay heed to encouraging production. This bill, to my mind, is wise, because it recognizes productive labor and provides for conserving the human forces of production.

I have no sympathy whatever with the idea of those men who believe that women ought to do nothing except to purr by the fireside and ought not to engage in productive labor. We are continuously demanding from society a recognition of the claims of those who can not be self-supporting. We ask more and more help for children, we ask recognition of the self-respecting claims of the aged, and we ask more and more help for the cripples and those inherently incapable. All this means that the adult efficient members of society must produce more and more. All is contained in the quest for adequate production, and then of rational distribution, with full recognition of the fundamental human right to live decent and adequate and broad lives, with due time for recreation.

I believe that women ought to work. I believe their first and fundamental duty is to reproduce the species. But when that duty is performed, they have a further duty, to help to sustain and to support society under such conditions as are wholesome, inspiring, and livable.

We must realize that all of us are forced to produce enough to supply all of us, and that means that we must support the aged, the infant, the crippled, the sick, and must provide for dependent motherhood out of the effort of the efficient. There is no room for idleness among the competent, or we shall all starve together. This bill, which is in the line of the conservation of human life and efficiency, is destined to aid toward a better society, and therefore toward the creation of better individuals, who can lead better lives. It should be passed. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield three minutes to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR].

Mr. MCKELLAR. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have asked my distinguished friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN] for a moment in which to record myself in favor of this bill. I am thoroughly and heartily in favor of this bill, because I believe it to be an act of long-delayed justice to the working women of this city. I might say, further, it is so obviously a just act that I believe if women had had the right to vote they would have had such a law on the statute books long ago. Men have had an 8-hour law in nearly every State of the Union—probably in every State of the Union—and men who work for the Government here work only 8 hours, and yet here in Washington, the seat of government, we have no law regulating the hours during which women may work. It is needless for gentlemen to talk about what women ought to do or what they ought not to do, whether they ought to work for a living or whether they ought not to work for a living. That is beside the question. It is a condition and not a theory that confronts us.

The fact that confronts us in the face is that they do work, and they are made to work longer than men work, ordinarily, and that we owe it to them to fix for them reasonable hours. This law is, as I stated before, but an act of long-delayed justice. I am delighted to know that the District Committee has reported out the bill.

I want to say further here that I doubt if there is a gentleman in this Hall who would be guilty of any act of discourtesy toward any woman, and I hope there will be no gentleman in this Hall to-day who will be guilty of being unfair to the women who work by recording a vote against this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I hope that the bill will pass unanimously. [Applause.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield just three minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SMITH].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SMITH] is recognized for three minutes.

[Mr. SMITH of Minnesota addressed the committee. See Appendix.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, according to my count I have eight minutes remaining.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has really 10 minutes remaining. The gentleman from California [Mr. KENT] did not use all of his time.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I will yield a portion of that to anyone who desires to address the committee. I suggest to the gentleman from New York [Mr. O'LEARY] that he might ask unanimous consent to close debate at the end of that time.

Mr. O'LEARY. Mr. Chairman, at the end of the time suggested by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] I will ask unanimous consent that all general debate close.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. O'LEARY] asks unanimous consent that general debate on this bill close at the end of 10 minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHELAN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHELAN] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. PHELAN. Mr. Chairman, I believe in the present movement, the spirit of which is embodied in this bill, to limit the number of working hours for women. In recent years women have in vastly increased numbers engaged in outside work of various kinds. I believe the door should be open to women and that they should be given every opportunity for employment for the purpose of bettering themselves or for the purpose of providing for those dependent upon them. I feel, however, that women in particular should not be required to spend too many hours in hard work. The number of hours which men have been compelled to labor in order to obtain a livelihood has been gradually decreased. Whatever argument applies for the shortening of the working hours for men applies with much greater force with reference to women. As a rule when a man completes the daily work at which he is employed he goes home for rest or recreation, as his choice may be. With women, however, in a majority of cases, their work is never done. A mother, in particular, can never say when her day's work is completed. After toiling all day to earn money to provide for her family she is obliged when she reaches home to care for her children.

We ought to have in this country such conditions that any industrious woman who works eight hours a day can earn enough money to provide the necessities of life and also at least some few comforts. The country is rich enough and resourceful enough to supply these women with necessities and comforts of life if the resources and wealth of the country receive the proper distribution. When a man by his individual effort, even though he may be a genius, can by his labor, physical and mental, pile up a fortune of several millions, a woman should be enabled in a modern civilized country to earn a livelihood by working eight hours a day.

Women employed by the Government are not obliged to work over eight hours a day. This bill, by establishing the eight-hour day in the District of Columbia, is but following the lines laid down by Congress in reference to Government employees. I believe legislation like this goes a good deal further than merely benefiting the women to whom it applies. It means a distinct aid in the mental, physical, and moral development of the children of this generation and the generations to come.

We must not tax the strength of women nor compel too continuous labor by women if their children are to be strong and good. The mother must be enabled to have time to give some care to her physical condition and some care and proper attention to her children. The spirit of this bill is the spirit of progress. Slowly but surely we are coming to realize that while human beings are compelled to work in this world, it was not intended that their destiny should be nothing but work. Every human being has a natural right to have some time for rest and recreation.

The passage of this bill, while its provisions are restricted to a limited area, is a step in the right direction.

I yield back the remainder of my time. I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHELAN] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object——

Mr. CURRY. The time for objection is past.

Mr. DONOVAN. I would like to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts if he would like to have incorporated in his remarks a statement that the gentlemen from Massachusetts should be required to work eight hours a day at least once a month? [Laughter.]

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PHELAN]?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. I yield, Mr. Chairman, to the gentleman from California [Mr. CURRY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. CURRY] is recognized.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Chairman, the agitation for the enactment of legislation to limit the hours of labor of both men and women started in the East, but was first accomplished in the West.

In 1887 the then governor of Connecticut addressed a message to the legislature of that State advocating the enactment of a 10-hour day, 6 days in the week, labor law. The law was not enacted at that session, but the idea permeated the whole country, and to-day many States have on their statute books the 8-hour day labor law.

At the legislative session of 1911 a woman's 8-hour day, 48-hour week, labor law was enacted in California. The provisions of the law were much more stringent and included more callings than the bill now under discussion applying to the District of Columbia. In 1912 the Supreme Court of California upheld the constitutionality of the act, and in 1913 the legislature broadened the act and included a number of callings not contained in the original act. The women of California vote; they exercise the franchise with discretion and judgment. They have a good influence on governmental matters. The men of California, however, did not wait until the women had a vote before enacting the women's eight-hour labor law. That law was enacted by the men before the women voted in California, but there is no doubt whatever but that the influence of women, even before they possessed the ballot, caused that law to be enacted.

One of the honorable Members in the course of this debate stated that he knows of an instance where a woman cook for a 40-room hotel has worked continuously every day for 20 years for a wage of $50 a month; that from appearances she is able to work for 10 years more, or longer, and that she is willing to so continue to work and is not asking for the enactment of this law, and he asked the question whether this law, if enacted, would apply to her and such cases as hers. In reply, I will say that in my opinion it does; but if it does not apply the bill should be amended so as to include such cases. Such continuous employment, without rest or holiday, is the refinement of cruelty and almost as bad as slavery. Most humane and considerate employers of labor have voluntarily and without legislative action installed the eight-hour-a-day system. Others have been forced to do so through the influence of the labor unions. It is the general custom now to give even domestic servants one day a week off from their labor.

I believe the conservation of American manhood and womanhood should be considered before the conservation of property, and that this Congress should at least give it as much consideration as it gives to the conservation of the natural resources of the country. The conservation of womanhood means the conservation of the vitality, health, and mental vigor of the race. The overworking of the young womanhood of the country who are and will in time become the mothers of its future citizens will deteriorate the race mentally, physically, and morally. I am in favor of this bill. I am glad that Congress will pass it to-day almost unanimously. I hope the good example set by a number of the Western States and that will be set by Congress to-day in the enactment of this law will result in the enactment of a similar law by those States that have not already placed it on their statute books.

I ask unanimous consent, Mr. Chairman, to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California [Mr. CURRY] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. GARDNER. I make the same request, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. GARDNER] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KELLY of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I also ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KELLY] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANN. I yield one minute to the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. SIMS].

Mr. SIMS. Mr. Chairman, I am certainly delighted that in the Congress of the United States the right to life and health are regarded as above the so-called rights of property. The so-called rights of property to destroy, if necessary, the life of the people in order to increase its earnings has been regarded almost sacred in this country in the past. I am certainly delighted to see the solid delegation from Massachusetts, with that of New York, the States that perhaps own more investment securities than any other two States in the Union, by their representatives in this body unanimously saying, "We propose to conserve human life and health rather than dividend payments on investment securities." I think we ought to congratulate them. I think it is the right spirit. "Radicalism" is breaking out in the East, and may it never cease its efforts until there be no East, no West, no North, no South where the right to health, the right to live as God intended us to live, is not placed above the right to earn dividends upon fixed capital investments. I want to congratulate the House upon this opportunity to thus place ourselves upon record, and I hope there will not be a vote in this House against the principle of this bill even if we do differ as to some of its details.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, a legislator ought to be a philosopher and a student of history and of the times. It is only in recent years, with the multiplication of machinery, that the abuse of long hours in factories has become so acute. Of course women always worked longer hours than men, when they kept house and raised children at home. I am sure my good mother worked 16 hours a day raising nine sons and taking care of a houseful of boys and other people. I do not know whether that can be avoided in many cases. But as we go on multiplying machinery, increasing factories, and increasing the intensity of manufacturing establishments, it is inevitable that the Government must step in and exercise its control for the purpose of preserving the health of the people and of those who are yet unborn; and second, for the purpose of protecting the amount which people shall receive as compensation. It is not wise for us to say that those who went before were wrong because they did not enact this legislation.

It is not wise for us to say that every State that has not enacted such legislation is therefore way behind the times. There was no difficulty in passing an eight-hour law like this in Colorado. No women worked in factories there. It is quite a different problem where great numbers are employed, and it takes time to adjust the relations not only between the employer and the employee in a particular place, but to adjust the relations between different parts of the country engaged in rivalry. I had hoped that this bill, for instance, might have included the Government establishments; and I have sometimes wondered at the generosity of the gentlemen who propose that women employed in private establishments shall have time for luncheon, and other time that they do not require in public establishments, and then Members of Congress, out of their generous souls, provide that stenographers in hotels shall only work eight hours a day, but that stenographers employed by themselves may work 16 hours a day. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time for general debate is closed. The Clerk will read the bill under the five-minute rule.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That no female shall be employed in any manufacturing, mechanical, or mercantile establishment, laundry, hotel, or restaurant, or telegraph or telephone establishment or office, or by any express or transportation company in the District of Columbia more than 8 hours in any one day or more than 6 days or more than 48 hours in any one week.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 1, line 3, by striking out the word "female" and inserting in lieu thereof the word "person."

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, if this amendment passes, it will not only protect the women in various employments enumerated in the bill but it will protect the men. During the Sixty-second Congress we had no trouble in passing an eight-hour law for those employed on Government works, and we have that law enforced to-day throughout the entire country, unless it is in a few instances on contract labor; and we passed a law for the purpose of reaching that character of work during the Sixty-second Congress.

In my opinion it is just as easy to pass this bill with this amendment, which gives relief to both sexes, as it is to pass it as it now stands. I stand here in the interest of labor, not for one class of people alone, but in the interest of labor throughout the country. And if this Congress will take this step and fix the hours of employment in the District of Columbia, it will be a precedent to be followed by the legislatures of the various States of the Union; and instead of working men and women for long hours there will be a fixed day with a fixed number of hours.

In the canneries of Maryland and California women and children have been worked as long as 17 hours a day on a wage of less than $5 per week. In the steel works of Pennsylvania and other States men have been worked as long as 17 hours a day for 7 days in the week.

Mr. MOORE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOWLER. I yield, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MOORE. As long as the gentleman refers to the steel works of Pennsylvania, I will call his attention to the farms in Illinois. Do they work on the farms in Illinois more than eight hours a day sometimes?

Mr. FOWLER. I am glad to say that the farmers in my State have caught the spirit of reform, and they go to work——

Mr. MOORE. With the sun.

Mr. FOWLER. About the hour of 7 or 8 o'clock in the morning, and they quit when the sun goes down.

Mr. MOORE. If the gentleman confines that to Illinois, I am satisfied.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, they do better than that now. That used to be the custom, but men on the farms in Illinois, and, as I understand, throughout the country have taken up this labor movement, and have extended to labor that humanitarian spirit which is pushing reform throughout this country.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOWLER. I will.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Does the gentleman consider that the Government has the same power over contracts made between individuals in the District of Columbia that it has over the work performed under Government contracts?

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, the District of Columbia is in a sense a territory belonging to the United States, and Congress sits as its lawmaking body, and it must submit to any law that is passed that is constitutional.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Then the gentleman considers that there will be no question about the constitutionality of the amendment he has proposed?

Mr. FOWLER. None whatever.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FOWLER. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent for five minutes more. Is there objection?

Mr. O'LEARY. I object.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I hope the gentleman will not object. I have taken no time in the discussion of this bill, and when I am through on this proposition I am through with the bill.

Mr. O'LEARY. My only object is to get this bill through without unnecessary delay.

Mr. FOWLER. I hope the gentleman will not force me to make a point of order of no quorum.

Mr. O'LEARY. Well, Mr. Chairman, I will withdraw the objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, I would not do anything to hinder or check the passage of this bill, for I have in my bosom a feeling for all people who are tied to the wheel of toil, and certainly woman has borne the brunt of manual labor in the past. Yes, borne the brunt, because in semi-barbarous times she did all the work while the men lay around fishing ponds angling. [Laughter.] Since the dawn of civilization woman has done her part of manual labor. I dare say that she has put in more hours of toil than man.

My experience teaches me that that is true. My mother worked as long as my father during the daytime, and when his day's work was over she cooked our frugal meal, supper, then cleaned up the dishes and righted the kitchen for the next day. I dare say nine-tenths of the good women in the past have been subjected to the same ordeal. I not only stand for the relief of the women of this country, but I stand for the relief of labor, wherever it may be. To say that man should be placed on a level with the beasts of burden to toil for long hours a day is to say to him that he hath a less degree of manhood in his make-up than the masters of wealth.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOWLER. I will.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Are not the men protected now under union-labor organizations all over the United States while women are unprotected?

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, if there is such a condition, which I do not doubt, that has been brought about by union labor, a much better condition could be brought about by the organization of women into labor unions, because if there is anything that a woman can do better than a man it is that which can be accomplished by the use of the tongue. There she is certain to excel. She can go to capital and labor conferences and outtalk any man any time in the day. [Laughter.] If she will organize as man has organized, in my opinion, she can get better terms than any labor organization has ever secured heretofore.

Mr. BRYAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FOWLER. Yes.

Mr. BRYAN. I wanted to ask the gentleman if any labor union or organization has requested him to offer this amendment at this place?

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, my honor as a Member of this House and the interest I have in labor has prompted me to offer this amendment. I would like to see the color of the man's hair that can stand up and vote against it and go back and face his constituents. We can pass this bill with this amendment and get a double benefit, but you defeat this amendment and you defeat the laboring men of this District, who are doing as much and more labor to-day than the women in the lines of business which are dealt with by the terms of this bill.

Although I want relief for the women as badly as any other man, I say now, gentlemen, that if you want to get a full measure of relief vote for this amendment, and it will not only be a relief in the District of Columbia, but it will sound the keynote throughout the land for relief from long hours of toil and for an eight-hour law in the States.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FOWLER had leave to extend his remarks.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] had desired to defeat this bill, he could not have done so more effectually than by asking Congress to pass this amendment. The courts have uniformly held that a general eight-hour law was unconstitutional, and, in fact, it has been so held by the Supreme Court of the United States. A general law has always been held unconstitutional.

Gentlemen will remember that the law passed by the State of New York making an eight-hour day for bakers was held unconstitutional because of the fact that it was held that that would be a general interference; if allowed for bakers, it would not be safe for any other vocation.

The ground upon which all of these eight-hour laws have been sustained has been because of exceptional circumstances. They have held laws providing for eight-hour law for minors and for those who work on railroads, dangerous occupations, were constitutional for that reason. They have held most State laws constitutional that provided an eight-hour day for women because of the exceptional circumstances, because of the fact that in order to protect their health it might be necessary to make an exception in their favor.

So I have no doubt that if we pass this law with the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois it would be held unconstitutional. If we pass this law, it will be held constitutional. But if we pass it and apply it to all, there will be no question that it will be held unconstitutional under the decisions of practically all of the States and under the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States.

I can not refrain from saying in this case that I never believed that the doctrine upon which these laws were declared unconstitutional, as stated by the courts, rested on good grounds. I believe that the State and the United States ought to have the right to pass a law, if they desire to do so, regulating hours of labor. However, I have not time to defend that position. I can only say that that is now the law, and that if we should pass an amendment such as the gentleman from Illinois suggests, we would merely make this law of no avail to anybody within the District of Columbia. Therefore, of course, it is the duty of all of us who desire to see this legislation made effective to vote against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I think no true friend of this bill can afford to vote for this amendment, outside of the constitutional question involved, looking at it only from the legislative point of view. The questions of the hours of labor in private employment for females and the hours of labor in private employment for males are entirely separated, one from the other. This is a Senate bill now before the House. I had thought at one time of offering some amendments to the bill, which I thought might possibly improve it, but I came to the conclusion I would not. If we pass the bill without amendment, or without any substantial amendment, it is very quickly disposed of. If we should enact in this bill the amendment proposed by my colleague, every man in the House, except my colleague, knows that the bill, when it goes back to the Senate, is as dead as a door nail [applause] and will never be heard from again, because it will require an entirely new consideration of the subject matter, to govern the hours of labor of male employees in these establishments, whereas the other matter is disposed of. I do not believe that those of us who wish to pass this bill governing the hours of employment of women ought to kill it by claiming, or being in earnest in claiming, that we want to govern the hours of labor of men. The whole bill would have to be remodeled. Every paragraph in it uses the word "female." The whole bill would have to be rewritten, and it might as well be thrown in the wastebasket as to require that it be rewritten.

Mr. O'LEARY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this amendment close in five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment close in five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, I feel that the speech just made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] ought to be replied to. If this were the only occasion where a speech of that character were made in this House I would think little of it, but it has become too common for men in this House to offer amendments and speak upon them either in total ignorance of the law—and in that case it is inexcusable—or if they are not ignorant of the law, then because they are, in effect, the greatest enemies of the cause which they seemingly are attempting to advance. In this case it ought to be clear to the gentleman from Illinois that in the adoption of this amendment he would not help labor at all, but that on the contrary he would deny to the class of labor that is included in this bill any of the benefits of the bill at all. I would not say this of the speech of the gentleman from Illinois if I did not know that he is a lawyer himself, and if the gentleman is not ignorant of the decisions of the courts upon this question then to get upon the floor and urge the amendment he does, knowing its consequences, I must say that he is an enemy of labor and not a friend of it.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman a question.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

Mr. FOWLER. I will be very glad for the gentleman to show wherein an amendment of the character I have offered would affect the labor in this District which is provided for by this bill.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman had listened to the remarks of the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] just a moment ago, it would have been entirely plain to him.

Mr. FOWLER. I disagree with the remarks of the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. LENROOT. If the gentleman is familiar with the almost uniform decisions of all of the courts of this country and of the Supreme Court of the United States, he would have been compelled to agree with him when he stated the law as laid down in the decisions.

Mr. FOWLER. There is no decision so idiotic on the statute books in any State of the Union or of the United States Supreme Court.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. Chairman, there is no arguing a proposition of that kind with the gentleman, if he is either so ignorant of the decisions of the courts of the country or if he pays no attention to them.

Mr. FOWLER. I know the decisions of the courts, and the gentleman from Wisconsin is the enemy of labor if he votes against this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Wisconsin has expired. All time has expired. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MANN) there were—ayes 1, noes 56.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "hotel," insert the words "boarding houses."

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I think it must have been an oversight on the part of the committee not to include those words when they were considering the bill. It seems to me that if we include the female employees of a hotel we should include those of boarding houses. I think it is just as important that the help in boarding houses should be given advantage of this law as that female help in a restaurant should be, and I hope that the amendment will be adopted.

Mr. O'LEARY. Mr. Chairman, while I agree with what the gentleman from Missouri says, I hope the amendment will not be allowed to govern the minds of gentlemen present. The committee felt that there might be many occupations that could be very rightfully brought in here, but this is a Senate bill and, as has well been said by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], if we encumber it with an amendment we will lose all. The committee therefore felt they ought not to encumber it with amendments, and I hope the House will not.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, I am opposed to this amendment, while in sympathy with its purpose. My only objection to this bill is that it does not go far enough; that it does not reach down to the lowest scale of female labor, the ordinary house servant, as she is called; the woman who works the longest hours, the woman who works the hardest, the woman who has the most disagreeable and obnoxious task. It is unfortunate that in this age and at this time the committee could not have brought in a bill that would have included this much-deserving class that needs sympathy and help far more than some of those who are so fully provided for in the bill.

The CHAIRMAN (Mr. CARTER). The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri.

The question was taken, and the amendment was rejected.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 3149. An act for the relief of Moses Chauncey;

S. 2811. An act to establish a fish-cultural station on Long Island, in the State of New York;

S. 54. An act for the relief of George W. Hoyt;

S. 657. An act to authorize the reservation of public lands for country parks and community centers within reclamation projects in the State of Montana, and for other purposes;

S. 2860. An act providing a temporary method of conducting the nomination and election of United States Senators;

S. 1032. An act to amend section 1342 and chapter 6, title 14, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and for other purposes;

S. 654. An act to accept the cession by the State of Montana of exclusive jurisdiction over the lands embraced within the Glacier National Park, and for other purposes; and

S. 3997. An act to waive for one year the age limit for the appointment as assistant paymaster in the United States Navy in the case of landsman for Electrician Richard C. Reed, United States Navy.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate bills of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and referred to their appropriate committees, as indicated below:

S. 3149. An act for the relief of Moses Chauncey; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 2811. An act to establish a fish-cultural station on Long Island, in the State of New York; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

S. 54. An act for the relief of George W. Hoyt; to the Committee on Claims.

S. 657. An act to authorize the reservation of public lands for country parks and community centers within reclamation projects in the State of Montana, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 2860. An act providing a temporary method of conducting the nomination and election of United States Senators; to the Committee on Election of President, Vice President, and Representatives in Congress.

S. 1032. An act to amend section 1342 and chapter 6, title 14, of the Revised Statutes of the United States, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

S. 654. An act to accept the cession by the State of Montana of exclusive jurisdiction over the lands embraced within the Glacier National Park, and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

S. 3997. An act to waive for one year the age limit for the appointment as assistant paymaster in the United States Navy in the case of Landsman for Electrician Richard C. Reed, United States Navy; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

HOURS OF EMPLOYMENT OF FEMALES IN DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 8. That the inspectors authorized by this act shall visit and inspect the establishments and places of employment named in section 1 as often as practicable, during reasonable hours, and shall cause the provisions of this act to be enforced therein and also the provisions of an act entitled "An act to provide that all persons employing female help in stores, shops, or manufactories in the District of Columbia shall provide seats for the same when not actively employed," approved March 2, 1895. They shall make a daily report to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, and also report any cases of illegal employment contrary to the provisions of this act to the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to call the attention of the committee to some amendments which, I think, ought to be made to this section. Gentlemen will notice that this section, being section 8, relates to the duty of inspectors. The terms of the bill provide that it shall be the duty of these inspectors to make a daily report to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia. It will be noted that two of these inspectors are to be women. It occurs to me there can be no question but that will be an impairment of their duty, not only adding considerable to their obligations, but it probably would be useless and valueless as a record of their work. I therefore have drawn an amendment that that word "daily" shall be made "weekly," and, following the report, have suggested that these reports should be in writing. Following that, there is a provision for the reporting by these inspectors to the corporation counsel of the District of Columbia. I think that these reports as to any violations of the law ought to be made at once, as soon as the violations are discovered, and for that reason I have asked to insert "at once," preceding the words "any cases," so that it will read "at once any cases of illegal employment."

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair will suggest to the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] that his amendment should be reported in the regular order.

Mr. TOWNER. Have they not been reported?

The CHAIRMAN. No.

Mr. TOWNER. I beg the pardon of the Chair. I thought they had been reported.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendments offered by the gentleman from Iowa.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 23, strike out the word "daily" and insert in lieu thereof the word "weekly."

Also insert the words "in writing" following the word "report."

Also, in line 25, insert at the commencement of said line the words "at once."

Mr. TOWNER. Gentlemen will see that, if it is required that these inspectors shall make a report every day to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia, it will probably be a report orally made, or at least hastily made, and will put upon them a burden that, I think, they ought not to be compelled to carry, if the reports are to be made daily.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TOWNER. I will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the gentleman necessarily place a forced construction upon the word "daily" when he says they are to make a "daily report"? Is it not entirely within the proper purview of the word "daily" that it may be in writing? It is presupposed it will be in writing, but not necessarily sent to the commissioners or presented formally to the commissioners each day. Now, as we view the bill, there will be no substantial amendment, I assume, because we have got next to the last section. I hardly think the gentleman's amendments are of serious enough import to warrant sending this bill to conference.

Mr. TOWNER. That is for the committee to determine. I admit it may not be of sufficient importance.

Mr. BOOHER. What objection would the gentleman have to making his amendment broad enough to strike out all that part of the section that requires any report to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia? We will have three different reports of violations of the law if that remains in.

Mr. TOWNER. I think the gentleman misapprehends the object of these reports. If the inspectors visit an establishment and find the conditions are satisfactory, that fact ought to be reported as well as a violation. I think that those reports should be made in writing. I think, however, they ought not to be more than once a week. I think to require the inspectors to make them daily is to make their work too hard, and will impair their usefulness.

Mr. BOOHER. I agree with the gentleman on that. Now, the inspectors keep a record, do they not, in their office? If an establishment is found to be running in accordance with law, that is the end of it. I do not see why you want it recorded in another office.

Mr. TOWNER. They are not required to keep a report themselves. The inspectors have no office. They will have no office except, perhaps, as it may be granted to them in the department building. They are not officials of that kind, but they are inspectors sent out on duty by the commissioners for the purpose of inspecting these various establishments. If they are required after a days work to make a report of that transaction, I think it will be imposing upon them a needless hardship sufficient to impair their usefulness.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. TOWNER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MANN. In making this daily report, is it not simply to file a blank in their own office as to what they discover during the day?

Mr. TOWNER. I think they will have no office.

Mr. MANN. Undoubtedly they will have an office provided by the District Commissioners, and will file a blank of that which they discover.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. TOWNER. There is nothing in this bill to imply that they will have either an office or keep records at all.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Missouri [Mr. BOOHER] is recognized.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I agree in part with what the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] says. I can not agree with him that these inspectors will not have an office. They will have an office, and have stenographers and clerks, and some of them will have private secretaries. They will keep a record of everything they do, and it is right that they should keep a record. A record will be found in their office, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] says. They will have blanks printed. They will go out and inspect the establishments and come in and fill the blanks in accordance with the conditions that exist. Why transfer a copy of it to another office? You are duplicating this record all the time. When they find a violation of law they will report the violation to the corporation counsel. He has a record then of the violation, and it will also be a record in their office.

Mr. MANN. Can the gentleman conceive from the reading of the report that they have got to take these to the commissioners and hand them to them?

Mr. BOOHER. They have got to file their reports in the office of the commissioners, as I understand it.

Mr. MANN. I should say not. In form it is, at least, to the commissioners, but filed in their own office.

Mr. BOOHER. Then it ought not to be in here. They will have an office, and it ought to be filed in their own office and kept there.

Mr. MANN. The District Commissioners are the ones that it is provided they should report to in the District of Columbia; but that does not imply that the commissioners see these reports or that they are handed to the commissioners.

Mr. BOOHER. They are filed in the office.

Mr. MANN. In the office of the inspector who makes the report.

Mr. BOOHER. This compels them to be filed in the office of the District Commissioners.

Mr. MANN. It provides for a daily report to the commissioners.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, this provision is merely duplicating what every good mercantile establishment requires of their outside sales agents, namely, to report the establishments they have called on during the day. That is a question of accounting for their services, on a formal blank, stating the places they have visited, and these reports made daily, in a week or a month will be handed over to the commissioners, and properly so, because the commissioners are these inspectors' employers.

Mr. BOOHER. Why hand them over to the commissioners if they are never going to look at them?

Mr. STAFFORD. The commissioners are the heads of this municipality, and they are the proper persons to whom they should report.

Mr. BOOHER. I sincerely hope, Mr. Chairman, that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa will prevail, anyhow.

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. Mr. Chairman, it is very unfortunate at this time to place any amendment whatever on this bill. An amendment means that the bill would go back into conference, and that its passage will be seriously impaired, or that it will be entirely defeated.

Now, the matter of these reports having been brought up, the last few sections of the bill dealing with the appointment and reports of the inspectors is taken, word for word, from the child-labor law of the District of Columbia. These reports are to be similar to the reports that the inspectors appointed under the child-labor law are required to make and are making to-day. These sections were drawn for the purpose of making reports in identically the same manner and by the same methods relative to the employment of women under this bill as they are made with reference to the employment of children under the child-labor law, and it follows out the provisions of the child-labor law passed a few Congresses ago.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. Certainly.

Mr. TOWNER. Is it a provision of the child-labor law that the inspectors under the child-labor law shall make daily reports to the Commissioners of the District of Columbia?

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. Sections 8 and 9 are taken, word for word, from the child-labor law.

Mr. TOWNER. Are the inspectors required to make daily reports to the commissioners?

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. Those sections are taken, word for word, as I understand it, from the child-labor law, and I understand that the inspectors under that law make daily reports.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. O'LEARY. Mr. Chairman, unless the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has something to suggest, I was going to ask that all debate close on this paragraph.

Mr. MANN. I shall want only two or three minutes. After I have concluded the gentleman can make that request.

Mr. O'LEARY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph close in three minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. O'LEARY] asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph close in three minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, all I wanted to ask about was in regard to a provision in section 5. I wanted to ask the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. PETERS] whether it is an offense when a person makes a false statement to the official in question. Is that intended to cover an oral reply? I should think the language would imply that. Does this make an offense of a conversation?

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. This is copied from the Illinois act of 1911. It is, word for word, copied from that law.

Mr. MANN. If such a law was passed by the Legislature of Illinois, then it is certainly a rotten piece of legislation—to make a conversation an offense.

Mr. PETERS of Massachusetts. New York and New Jersey have similar laws.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. The Chair would state that there is one minute remaining.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, is this amendment disposed of?

Mr. O'LEARY. Not yet.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would state that the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] really proposed three amendments, and the vote should be taken on each separately.

Mr. TOWNER. Without objection, Mr. Chairman, I ask that they be voted on together, in order to save time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER] asks unanimous consent that the three amendments moved by him be voted on together. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the amendments offered by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. TOWNER].

Mr. BOOHER. Are we voting on them all together?

The CHAIRMAN. Yes; on all three amendments together. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were rejected.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Mr. Chairman, I presume that all debate has closed?

The CHAIRMAN. One minute remains.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. The last section has been read, as I understand it?

The CHAIRMAN. No. The last section has not been read. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 9. That any person who violates or does not comply with any of the provisions of this act shall upon conviction be punished for a first offense by a fine of not less than $20 nor more than $50; for a second offense by a fine of not less than $50 nor more than $200; for a third offense by a fine of not less than $250.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Now, Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the figures "250," and for this purpose to call the attention of the gentleman in charge of the bill to the word "chapter" in section 7, line 11. There the word "chapter" is used instead of the word "act."

The importance of that, in my mind, lies in this: That the effectiveness of this act depends upon the power of these inspectors to enter upon these various premises. If they have no power to invade the premises against the wishes of the proprietors and managers, then this act amounts to very little, so far as those particular authorities are concerned.

Now, you confine the right of the inspector to entering the premises wholly to his suspicion with reference to the labor that is affected by this chapter. There is no labor described in this chapter, and your provision really would be a dead letter.

I would suggest to the gentleman in charge of the bill that he refer back to that, and move to strike out the word "chapter" and insert in lieu of it the word "act."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman ask unanimous consent?

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. Yes. I will ask unanimous consent to return to that.

Mr. O'LEARY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to line 11, section 7.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York [Mr. O'LEARY] asks unanimous consent to return to line 11, section 7, for the purpose of offering an amendment.

Mr. O'LEARY. Yes; for the purpose of offering an amendment as suggested by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, which the committee will accept.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, that is a dangerous thing to do. This is a Senate bill, and you must not amend it. It is holy. [Laughter.] It will go into conference if you amend it, and if it goes into conference it may never get out. I hope the gentleman from Pennsylvania will withdraw his objections to this bill and let it go.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. I have no objection to the bill.

Mr. BOOHER. We have been told time and time again not to make any amendment to this bill, because otherwise it would go into conference, and the conference would prove to be its failure. Let us do nothing of that kind. Let us keep our unholy hands off this act [laughter] and let it be passed, good, bad, or indifferent. In view of that situation, Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman objects.

Mr. TOWNER. I desire to reserve the right of objecting for the purpose of saying to the gentleman who is in charge of the bill that this use of the word "chapter," while unfortunate, will not in any way tend to involve the bill in the slightest degree, as my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE] well knows, and I am quite sure that he would not desire that so slight a verbal change should be made at this time if it will result in sending the bill back to the Senate.

Mr. BURKE of Pennsylvania. If the gentleman will yield, I do not contend that it would invalidate the bill; but I do contend that all the rights of the inspectors being based upon the power given them in that particular chapter, there is no reference whatever to any labor in that chapter 7, and if there is no reference to any labor being performed, they would have no right to enter, because there can not be any labor performed on those premises, because there is no reference to any labor in chapter 7.

Mr. TOWNER. The gentleman will remember that the courts will interpret these matters in order to carry out and effectuate the intention and purpose of the law, and the intent and purpose of this bill is so clearly expressed that I do not think the use of the word "chapter" there will be at all dangerous.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, may I interject this remark? The gentleman talks about sending the bill back to the Senate, and so forth. This bill will go back to the Senate as soon as it is passed, whether there is any amendment to it or not. It will be messaged back to the Senate.

Mr. MANAHAN. Reserving the right to object, I call attention to the fact that all the acts as they are printed in the Revised Statutes are marked "chapter," and it does not seem to me that any court would construe this act in the way suggested by the maker of this request.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection.

Mr. BOOHER. Mr. Chairman, I do not think I will object.

Mr. COOPER. I object, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. I move to strike out the last two words. I do so for the purpose of asking the gentleman in charge of the bill what would happen, under the terms of the bill, to one who commits an offense for the fourth time?

Mr. O'LEARY. As far as I can see, he would be punished as for a third offense.

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. I take it that under the language of the bill, after a man has violated the provisions of the law three times, and has paid his fine, he can then proceed to violate it as often as he likes.

Mr. O'LEARY. I would not advise the gentleman to enter into business in the city of Washington with that idea in mind.

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I think, notwithstanding the admonition of the gentleman from New York, I would be fairly safe if I did. The section provides that for a first offense there shall be a fine of not less than $20 or more than $50, for a second offense a fine of not less than $50 or more than $200, and for a third offense a fine of not less than $250. It seems to me that the bill provides for three specific offenses and then stops, and practically says that thereafter the law may be violated with impunity.

Mr. COOPER. What is the maximum penalty for the third offense? It says not less than $250, but what is the maximum?

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. Such an amount as the court may consider reasonable under the circumstances.

Mr. COOPER. Has the gentleman ever heard of a statute leaving it to the discretion of the court to fine a man any amount that he pleases?

Mr. MANN. Our criminal code does it all through.

Mr. COOPER. I never noticed it.

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. It would be limited by the jurisdiction of the court, anyhow.

Mr. COOPER. The maximum above which a court could not go in imposing a fine in a criminal case always is fixed by statute. The suggestion made during the debate that our present criminal code does not fix the maximum possible fine but leaves it to the court to fine a defendant as much as he pleases is an entirely mistaken one. The fact is that as to each offense the criminal code provides in so many words that the court may impose a fine of not more than a certain amount which is specifically named. The minimum is in his discretion, but not the maximum.

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I ask to withdraw the pro forma amendment and to insert after the word "third" and before the word "offense" the words "or any further."

The CHAIRMAN. If there be no objection, the gentleman will be allowed to withdraw the pro forma amendment. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 5, line 7, after the word "third," insert the words "or any further."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I hope that amendment may be agreed to. I do not know who really drew this bill. I am very sure that my distinguished friend from Massachusetts [Mr. PETERS], who first introduced it, could not have drawn the bill entirely, because there are so many crudities in it. I presume some distinguished gentleman from outside, who never had any experience whatever in the preparation of bills in Congress, drew this. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. BURKE] called attention a moment ago to the use of the word "chapter" instead of "act." There are many other things in this bill which are not wholly satisfactory. There is no limit as to the hours of labor, except theoretically. A woman can commence at 5 o'clock in the morning and be working at 10 o'clock at night under this bill, and nothing to prevent it. We will have bills after awhile that may perfect these imperfections; but it having been established that the bill is sacred because some unknown drew it, and because it is backed up by some very good women, whose hearts are in the right place but whose judgment of legislation is not perfect, there is nothing we can do, I think, but pass it and take the chances on the future.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. THOMSON].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. THOMSON of Illinois) there were—ayes 28, noes 43.

Accordingly the amendment was rejected.

Mr. SMITH of Minnesota. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MANAHAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. O'LEARY. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise and report the bill to the House with the recommendation that it do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

The committee accordingly rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill (S. 1294) to regulate the hours of employment and safeguard the health of females employed in the District of Columbia, and had directed him to report the same to the House, with the recommendation that it do pass.

The bill was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. O'LEARY, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

COMMISSION OF PHYTOPATHOLOGY.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table Senate joint resolution 110, authorizing the President to appoint a delegate to a commission which meets in Rome upon the suggestion of the French Government to study the diseases of plants.

Mr. CARTER. Reserving the right to object, I should like to ask the gentleman how long this will probably take.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. It should not take more than a minute.

Mr. MANN. It will take about a minute. It does not require unanimous consent. The gentleman can call it up.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I call up the joint resolution, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the joint resolution.

The Clerk read Senate joint resolution 110, authorizing the President to accept an invitation to participate in an international commission of phytopathology, as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to accept an invitation extended by the Republic of France to the Government of the United States to be represented by delegates in an International Commission on Phytopathology, to be held in Rome, Italy, February 24, 1914: Provided, That no appropriation shall be granted at any time for expenses of delegates or for other expenses incurred in connection with said commission.

The joint resolution was ordered to a third reading, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. FLOOD of Virginia, a motion to reconsider the last vote was laid on the table.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12579, the Indian appropriation bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oklahoma moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The question was taken, and the motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, with Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is now in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12579, of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12579) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I yield one hour to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], in a speech which appears in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of December 18, 1913, at pages 1169 and 1170, respectively, and certain other remnants of the shattered Republican Party who remain to echo what their distinguished leader says, have begun, both in and out of Congress, to make their usual attacks upon the Democratic legislation enacted for the people. Certain standpat and reactionary newspapers of the country have begun to utter their weird and denunciatory prophecies regarding the work of the Democratic Party since they were restored to power. They have begun to challenge the good faith of the Democratic President and the legislation already enacted and the Democratic program yet to be carried out. If the conditions in the country were ordinary and if the legislation already enacted could have before the next election sufficient time to be tested, I would not trespass upon the time of the House to make reference to these charges. However, the statements made by them are not without purpose, but are pursuant to a well-laid plan to instill doubt, fear, and disaster in the minds of our business men and the people of this country, when in truth and in fact there is nothing wrong or to be alarmed about.

To arrive at a just conclusion, and in order that we may make an intelligent prophecy as to what effect on the country the legislation the Democrats have passed will have, what method could be so wholesome as to examine one by one the bills passed and the votes had upon them? We can then better observe whether or not the legislation is tinged with playing politics, broken faith, broken promises, or of blasted rights. Again, what more wholesome method could be adopted than to observe if the bills passed first by a Democratic House and later by a Democratic Congress are not in strict accord with the party's pledges to the people on the stump; second, in strict accord with their platform pledges; third, in strict accord with the earnest wishes, hopes, and desires of the great bulk of the American people; and, fourth, their best interests as well. Let us again observe and see if the legislation and bills we have passed are bills that should be scoffed at and smothered by the Republican Party, and if they are bills that will in any manner disturb progress, true advancement, true accomplishment, true success, and the ultimate aggrandizement of the Republic itself.

On these propositions the Democratic Party joins issue with the remnant of the Republican Party and asserts that our bills are good bills and that the Democratic Party has kept well the everlasting faith.

In dealing with the accomplishment of our party since its return to power I shall first deal with the activities of the Democratic House when it came into power during the Sixty-second Congress, when the Senate and the Presidency were controlled by the Republican Party. I shall seek to stand side by side and compare, if you please, the votes and activities of the two national parties and try, if we may, to ascertain who was keeping the faith and who was faltering, halting, and trampling upon the people's rights.

ELECTION OF SENATORS BY DIRECT VOTE.

House joint resolution No. 39, providing for election of Senators by direct vote, passed the Democratic House on April 13, 1911. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 1st sess. 62d Cong., p. 243.) The vote stood 295 for, 17 against. Sixteen of the seventeen votes against the bill were cast by Republicans; I pause to express a regret that one Democrat failed to keep the faith.

It will be observed that the passage of this resolution on April 13 was one month and nine days after the Democrats came into power and was nine days subsequent to the convening of Congress in extraordinary session. The promptness with which the Democratic Party acted on a matter of such supreme importance to the people is simply significant of the fact that the Democratic Party is willing to do in office what it agreed to do while trying to secure office. The passage of this resolution in office was simply permitting the people to do well for themselves what had theretofore too often been poorly done for them by the too often inferior legislatures of the country. It was simply permitting the people to do well and openly and aboveboard for themselves what legislatures had too often been doing poorly, dishonestly, and clandestinely for them.

This legislation has been an issue in every campaign since my early childhood; yet, while the Republican Party was in full control of both branches of Congress and the White House for 16 years, they had each time promised the people this legislation on the stump while securing votes, but each time broke their pledges and turned the people away while in power.

Can the passage of this resolution by the Democratic House in 1911, and later passed by the Senate, approved by the States, and now the law be our undoing? Can this be the rock on which we must shipwreck and strand? Can this be one parcel of legislation that would disturb business or the country or its progress? Does legislation of this sort blast the progress and hope for advancement of this Republic? Can this be the legislation to which the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], the leader of his party, refers? If this legislation is so unworthy, why was it that only 16 Republicans could be induced to vote against it? Is it possible that from a membership of 391 Members only 17 patriots could be found who would vote against the election of Senators by popular vote? No; this can not be the bill to which the genial gentleman from Illinois refers. No; this can not be the legislation that will be our undoing. No; this legislation is the legislation promised by our party and delivered by it while in office; it is the legislation long sought at the hands of the Republican Party by the people, who have been grieved because they found it not. I feel that we can rest our cause with the people, so far as this one piece of legislation is concerned, and await their verdict. Let me pause to reiterate that this is not legislation promised but is legislation already enacted and delivered. Election of United States Senators by the votes of the sovereign people is now the law of the land.

PUBLICITY OF CAMPAIGN EXPENSES, SO THE PEOPLE MAY KNOW.

On the 14th day of April, 1911 (see CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 62d Cong., 1st sess., p. 268; 307 voted for this bill; no one voted "no"; absent and not voting, 82), the Democratic House, just 10 days subsequent to the convening of the first session of Congress after the Democrats were restored to power in the lower branch of Congress, passed by a unanimous vote a bill providing that in the future the American people might know who paid the expenses and who received the money for the election of their Congressmen and Senators.

PRESIDENTIAL PUBLICITY.

Later, on the 20th day of April, 1912, the Democratic House passed again without a roll call or division a bill requiring candidates for the Presidency to make known the names of their contributors and to file a full and complete itemized statement thereof. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 62d Cong., 2d sess., p. 5061.) These companion bills make it possible for the American people to know who furnished the money to control election; this lets them know who will control their Congressman after his election. These companion bills again take the people into their confidence.

Again, the Democratic Party is doing in office during the first year of its restoration to power what it promised to do while securing office. Again, the party was rendering substantial service to the people, which the Republican Party had steadfastly refused to do, although in full control of the Government for 16 long, weary years.

Can the passage of such bills, inaugurated by the Democratic House, which later became the law and are now on the statute books, enacted pursuant to a valid pledge, be playing politics? Can such bills that apply to every Democrat and every Republican Congressman here be denominated political bills and the playing of politics? Are these some of the bills that our opponents on the other side of the aisle are telling the country are poorly digested, are unworthy, untried, and phantomlike? No; in the last analysis their charges can not be true, for why should the people not know precisely what we do while trying to secure office and how we secure it? Has the time come when the party which is willing to have the X ray of publicity thrown on its every act to be characterized as demagogues, socialistic, and unworthy? Is this a bill that any Democrat is ashamed of, when no one of the 391 Members dared to vote against it? No; it is not possible that every Republican and every Democrat in the House would vote for a bill that was totally without merit; no, it is not possible that a bill with such a wholesome purpose, so strongly in the interest of the people who send us out here, can blast our party, either now or in the future, nor can it interfere with the country or its advancement and welfare. I pause to ask where is that Member of the present House who will print in language plain and unequivocable his opposition to the bill?

FARMERS' FREE-LIST BILL.

This bill passed the House on the 8th day of May, 1911, by a majority of 127. Democrats voting for, 209, and no Democrat against; Republicans for, 27, and 109 against; not voting, 37. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 1st sess. 62d Cong., p. 1121.) This bill later passed the Senate; was vetoed by your then Republican President, William Howard Taft, on the 18th day of August 1911. This bill passed the Democratic House a second time during the Sixty-second Congress; was passed a third time during the first session of the Sixty-third Congress as part of the tariff bill which was approved October 3, 1913, by President Wilson, and is now a law. [Applause.] This bill places on the free list every tool the farmer uses, from a garden hoe to the threshing machine. This bill removes the burdensome tariff taxes from the lumber with which American homes are built; this bill removes the burdensome taxes from the boots and shoes we wear on our feet; this bill removes the tariff taxes from all wagons, buggies, vehicles, and implements used by the farmer, so that he may purchase in an honest market in open competition, free from tariff, free from the special interests hiding behind tariff walls, the implements he must necessarily have to carry on his industry. This bill is openly admitted to be a blow at the Harvester Trust, giving the farmer an equal chance and advantage and justice to every producer who feeds the world. Can the passage of this bill render us unworthy? With the increased cost of living and the manifest clamor for the bright lights and the crowded city, can such relief to the American farmer blast, ruin, and destroy the confidence of the American people in the party that was responsible for this legislation? Is this emphatic, well-directed stroke at the American Harvester Trust, the most vicious of them all, to be our complete undoing? Is this the bill that the shattered remnants of the Republican Party complain of, cry out against, and denounce? Who is there here, when he comes to the parting of the ways, where one vote leads to the interest of the American producer and the other vote leads to the interest of the Harvester Trust, can long doubt which is the proper course to pursue? Can the Republican Party, shattered and torn though it may be, longer bolster up the fallacies that have been its undoing? Can they longer cry out against such legislation and expect to inspire confidence for themselves or their party? It will be remembered that President Taft, on the 18th day of August, 1911, vetoed the free-list bill. It will also be remembered, for it is still fresh in the minds of all of us, that he was cartooned, harpooned, stoned, and destroyed politically from one end of this country to the other. It will be remembered that he was then receiving the advice of the distinguished gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the then ex-Speaker Cannon, for whom the gentleman from Illinois has long served as an understudy. It will still be remembered what an almost pitiable plight that veto brought to him. It will be remembered that as a result of that veto and others like it he and his party crumbled to pieces and fell like weeds before the sickle. What is there left of the Republican Party that can longer cling to the fallacies of old? Who is there here, on either side of the Chamber, who could be expected to listen to the advice or prophecies of those so recently discredited, scorned, and shorn of power?

STATEHOOD FOR NEW MEXICO AND ARIZONA.

It will be remembered that the bill admitting fair Arizona and New Mexico into the Union passed the Democratic House May 23, 1911. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 1st sess. 62d Cong., p. 1529.) It will be remembered that during the long appeal that those two bright, new Territories had made to the Republican Party each Congress had heard them and had turned them away. I am proud the Democratic Party has to its credit the admission of these two bright, new States into the Union. It had long been the duty of the Republican Party to admit them. Who is there to-day who is ashamed of fair Arizona and New Mexico; who is there to-day who is not proud of them as new States; and who is there to-day who is not proud of their membership in both branches of this Congress? Can the admission of these two new States, either now or in the future, bring any blight upon the accomplishment of the Democratic Party? Can the admission of these fair, new States retard the onward march of progress in this Republic? Was there anything connected with the passage of this bill admitting these new States that would warrant the Republican Party in challenging our good faith or our desire to render faithful and patriotic service to the people? What cloud could the admission of these States into the Union bring upon the otherwise prosperous conditions enjoyed in the Republic? No; charges of this sort must fall. It was the solemn duty of Congress to admit these States; their population was sufficient, and under such favorable conditions it was the solemn duty of Congress to admit them. Who is there here now who will rise in his place and say they were admitted too soon, and who is there now who will condemn the Democratic Party for doing this patriotic service?

INCOME TAX.

The income-tax bill passed as a separate measure through the Democratic House on March 19, 1912, by a majority of 213. Democrats voting for the income tax, 178; Democrats voting against the income-tax bill, none. Republicans for the income-tax bill, 75; Republicans against the income-tax bill, 40; present, 6; not voting, 97. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 2d sess. 62d Cong., p. 3637.) This bill was later vetoed by President Taft. It again passed and became law as a part of the tariff act of October 3, 1913, and is now the law of the land.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Certainly.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. That is when we tore the mask from the face of the Republican Party, was it not?

Mr. MANN. No; that is where you followed the Republican Party that put the constitutional amendment through.

Mr. FERRIS. Oh, not at all; it was the Democrats that put it through. They begun it with resolution No. 39. They also ended it. It is now the law of the land.

Mr. FERRIS. This bill merely subjects the incomes of the rich to taxes, so that they will bear the expenses of government in proportion to the benefits derived from the Government. It is to-day, and has always been, a large component part of the expenses of the Government to protect the millions of the rich, and surely each citizen should contribute to his protection and the protection of his property in proportion to the benefits he enjoys. Can the passage of legislation of this sort by the Democratic Party during the first year of its return to power be treason that will bring about our undoing? Can the passage of this bill, which has been one of the first hopes of the Republic, be the rock on which we must strand and flounder? Can this be the bill that will amount to the complete displacement of the Democratic Party in the confidence and respect of the people? Is this the legislation that has in the past or will in the future make the task of the humble more difficult or unjust? Can the enactment of such legislation as this be an indicia of bad faith, broken promises, or blasted hopes? Is this in any sense tampering with the people's confidence and esteem? No; I do not believe the American people will accept your decree. I do not believe the American people will believe you or receive you; but, on the contrary, I think they will spurn you and scorn you and will withhold from you the power that you frittered away.

I assert that the Democratic Party from the day it was returned to power on March 4, 1911, down to this good day has kept the everlasting faith. Again, I assert that it will keep the faith while intrusted with the people's problems.

THE COTTON SCHEDULE.

The bill reducing the tariff on cotton cloth and cotton fabrics passed the Democratic House on the 3d day of August, 1911—yeas 202, nays 90, present 7, not voting 88; Democrats for the bill, 172; Democrats against the bill, none; Republicans for the bill, 30; Republicans against the bill, 90. The bill passed by a majority of 112. [Applause.] This bill was vetoed by President Taft on the 22d day of August, 1911. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Aug. 3, 1911, 1st sess. 62d Cong., p. 3584.)

Taft vetoed 30 bills during his four-year term, which are as follows:

THIRD SESSION, SIXTY-FIRST CONGRESS, VETOES.

H. R. 5015. A bill for relief of Clarence Frederick Chapman. (Page 1209, RECORD, Jan. 20, 1911.)

H. R. 12812. A bill to reduce duties on manufacture of cotton. (S. Doc. 108; p. 4393, RECORD, Aug. 22, 1911.)

SECOND SESSION, SIXTY-SECOND CONGRESS, VETOES.

H. R. 8853. A bill for relief of John L. Baird. (H. Doc. 574; p. 2528, RECORD, Feb. 27, 1912.)

S. 4862. A bill to investigate and settle certain accounts growing out of construction of Carbet Tunnel in Wyoming. (S. Doc. 878; p. 9230, RECORD, July 18, 1912.)

H. R. 9845. A bill authorizing sale of burnt timber on public lands. (H. Doc. 656; p. 4067, RECORD, Mar. 29, 1912.)

H. R. 18642. A bill to revise duties on iron and steel. (H. Doc. 908; p. 10931, RECORD, Aug. 14, 1912.)

H. R. 18956. A bill making appropriation for the Army. (H. Doc. 835; p. 8282, RECORD, June 17, 1912.)

H. R. 20347. A bill to allow Dixie Power Co. to dam White River. (H. Doc. 899; p. 10318, RECORD, Aug. 6, 1912.)

H. R. 21195. A bill to reduce duties on wool. (H. Doc. 903; p. 10603, RECORD, Aug. 9, 1912.)

H. R. 24023. A bill making annual appropriation for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses. (H. Doc. 910; p. 11025, RECORD, Aug. 15, 1912.)

H. R. 26321. A bill making annual appropriation for legislative, executive, and judicial expenses. (H. Doc. 910; p. 11472, RECORD, Aug. 21, 1912.)

S. 67. A bill for relief of Joseph Herring. (S. Doc. 950; p. 11866, RECORD, Aug. 26, 1912.)

S. 4948. A bill relating to inherited estates in the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma. (S. Doc. 899; p. 10261, RECORD, Aug. 6, 1912.)
S. 7343. A bill authorizing construction of dam across Coosa River, Ala. (S. Doc. 949; p. 11796, RECORD, Aug. 24, 1912.)
H. J. Res. 178. Joint resolution to create commission to investigate relative to establishment of permanent military camp grounds at Anniston, Ala. (H. Doc. 657; p. 4067, RECORD, Mar. 20, 1912.)

THIRD SESSION, SIXTY-SECOND CONGRESS, VETOES.

S. 2600. A bill to prevent public exhibitions of obscene pictures. (S. Doc. 1066; p. 2897, RECORD, Feb. 10, 1913.)
S. 3175. A bill to regulate immigration. (S. Doc. 1087; p. 3156, RECORD, Feb. 14, 1913.)
S. 4043. A bill to divest intoxicating liquors of their interstate commerce character in certain cases. (Page 4291, RECORD, Feb. 28, 1913.)
H. R. 28775. A bill making annual appropriation for sundry civil expenses. (H. Doc. 1451; p. 4838, RECORD, Mar. 4, 1913.)
H. J. Res. 210. Joint resolution authorizing President to appoint a member of New Jersey and New York Joint Harbor Line Commission. (H. Doc. 1339; p. 2553, RECORD, Feb. 4, 1913.)

Such a vast number of vetoes within a single presidential term signified a total disregard of the legislative branch of Congress, indicated strongly a wanton desire to ignore the wishes of the people, which resulted in his undoing from one end of the country to the other. His vetoes and his reactionary tendencies, bolstered up by the then discredited leaders of the Republican Party, will go down in history as the rock on which the Republican Party stranded and sunk. Let the vetoes and the total disregard and the rebuke administered to him by the American people in the election of 1912 be a word of warning to his successors of all political parties in the future. The rebuke was complete, his political future blasted, his party swept from power and left disgruntled, demoralized, disorganized, and alone.

Why did President Taft veto all these bills, enacted by large majorities in each case, when they were so universally desired by the people of this country? Why should his party leaders and advisers cause him to turn his back upon those who had given him power? How could he be justified in taking a stand on a matter so vital to the American people as to strip the legislative branch of its power and its very mission of service under the Federal Constitution? Had it been a bill that was of doubtful propriety from a constitutional standpoint, or one where the equities even partially balanced, it might be better understood, but for him to look on the one side and see America's poor asking for better cotton clothes, cotton bedding, and asking to be better clothed for less money, and on the other side the Cotton Trust asking to be let alone was inconceivable, unfathomable, and almost treason to any proper conception of justice. The only solution that could be advanced by those outside of his confidence would be that he was listening to the siren song and the advice of those who believe to do justice would bring panic and to do equity would be disastrous. Another solution might be advanced, and that is that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and the various understudies of his party had been making speeches behind closed doors similar to those made in a speech recently by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN], in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of December 18, 1913, heretofore referred to. The veto was abused more in the last two years of Taft's administration than could have been dreamed of in a Republic like ours, operating under a Constitution made for the benefit of all the people. It made us all shudder then to see the Chief Executive strip Congress totally of its allotted task under the Constitution. Our Republic has been pointed to as one that should blaze the way for all the rest, but Taft's veto robbed us of much of that halo of glory we have heretofore been able to claim. A king in a kingdom would have been more cautious than he; a king in a kingdom would have fared worse even than he. A king in a kingdom would have suffered violence to his person, while a Taft in a Taftdom suffered violence in political retirement from office, in disintegration of party, and a complete transformation of the political alignment of this country. [Applause.]

CHEMICAL BILL, IN THE INTEREST OF THE AFFLICTED, VETOED BY TAFT.

This schedule went to the President the first time as an amendment to the cotton schedule and was vetoed. The Democratic House passed it a second time, on the 21st day of February, 1912. Democrats for the bill, 177. No Democrat voted "no." Republicans for the bill, 2. Republicans against the bill, 127; answering "present," 11; not voting, 77. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Feb. 21, 1912, 62d Cong., 2d sess., p. 2294.)

Can it be possible that there yet remains sufficient of the dying embers of the stand-pat Republican Party who are willing to castigate and criticize the Democratic House for trying to strip the Drug Trust of their power to extort inhuman prices from the afflicted of this country? Will it not require more than bald charges of infidelity on the part of the progressive Democratic administration to secure from the people a verdict of unfaithfulness for the passage of this act? Can the fast-vanishing Republican Party longer cling to their benighted faith that it was right for President Taft to veto such a bill?

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I will.

Mr. BRYAN. The gentleman used the words "fast vanishing." Would he object to using the word "vanished"? It would suit the progressives better.

Mr. FERRIS. I think I have used fairly comprehensive language with reference to them.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman from Washington use the word "vanished" with reference to the Progressive Party?

Mr. BRYAN. Oh, no; the Republican Party.

Mr. FERRIS. The Democrats will vanish both of you when the time comes.

Can anyone wonder, when the Republican Party had even turned its back upon the afflicted of this country, that the voters of this country should have scorned them and turned them away? Is it any wonder that the conditions have changed since the Sixtieth Congress, when I first came to Congress, with reference to the majorities in this House? Can any of you wonder, when you observe that in the Sixtieth Congress the Republicans were in power in the House, with a majority of 57, while in the Sixty-second Congress there was a Democratic majority of 71, and in the Sixty-third Congress a Democratic majority of practically 2 to 1, with a Democratic Senate and a Democratic President? The people delivered their first verdict in the fall of 1910, when the Sixty-second Congress was elected. They delivered their verdict again in the fall of 1912, when you were shorn of power in the White House, in the Senate, and in the House branch of Congress. Still you are defiant; still you are denunciatory; still you are unwilling to do in office for the people what they have long asked for at your hands. What the verdict will be in the fall of 1914 none can tell, but judging the future by the past your ranks will again be thinned until you will be an object of pity rather than one of censure. Can there be no awakening of the smoldering embers of a once powerful though fallen party? Can there be no red blood corpuscles in the party of Lincoln and the sainted McKinley? Must a rebuke be administered to you more fitting and complete than the one received by you at the hands of the people at the election one year ago last November?

THE STEEL SCHEDULE.

This bill first passed and went to the President as an amendment to the cotton bill. It received the President's veto on the 22d day of August, 1911. The Democratic House passed it a second time on January 29, 1912—yeas 212, nays 110, present and not voting 8, absent and not voting 62; majority, 101. Democrats for the bill, 188; Democrats against the bill, 2; Republicans for the bill, 24; Republicans against the bill, 108. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Jan. 29, 1912, 2d sess., 62d Cong., p. 1502.)

We had, prior to this vote, assumed that a revision of the tariff taxes and a reduction of the same to a marked degree and a curbing of the Steel Trust in general was agreed to by men of all parties. The vote above shows 21 Republicans who kept the faith and 107 who faltered and voted no. The Steel Trust, with all its viciousness, in all its ramifications, is so powerful in the country, is so obnoxious to the country, that it seems inconceivable that the Republican Party would ignore what seemed to be the wishes of every man. So patent and so true is the statement just made that in his testimony before the Ways and Means Committee Andrew Carnegie, the steel king of the world, asserted that there is no longer needed any tariff on steel to protect the American manufacturer, as no other country on earth could compete with us, anyway. In the face of the testimony of such a high authority, in the face of what must be so nearly any agreed statement of facts, what could have induced President Taft to veto such a bill? Shall we conclude from the grumblings, the croakings by a standpat press or a standpat party that if they again had power they would repeal this bill? Is this one of the grounds on which they base their bland prophecy that we are one-termers; that we are not in good faith; that we are playing to the galleries; that we are not keeping the faith. No; we passed this bill and others pursuant to our platform pledges. We promised the people, while securing their vote, that we would pass such a law; it was our solemn contract to perform in office what we agreed to perform while trying to secure office. Here was a bill where the Steel Trust stood on one side with their briefs and high-salaried attorneys clamoring for a retention of the rates in the Payne law and fighting revision. They then prophesied, as you now prophesy, that such legislation would bring ruin and disaster to the country. President Taft and your party took up their cudgel and their fight. We, on the contrary, of the Democratic faith, took up the people's cause and their fight and passed the bill. Both parties went to the country and asked approval of their work. The people approved the work of the Democratic Party. The people banished you from power and rejected your work; and they not only banished your party from power, but they banished it from its very existence itself. It lives in tradition; it is a remnant of history. There is nothing left of it to build to, to bolster up. It may well be termed the vanishing party that lives in its history of long ago; that can point to nothing of immediate accomplishment that will recommend it to modern conditions.

FREE SUGAR FOR EVERY BREAKFAST TABLE.

The free-sugar bill passed the Democratic House on the 15th day of March, 1912, by a majority of 95 votes. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 2d sess., 62d Cong., Mar. 15, 1912, p. 3457.) Yeas 199, nays 104, answering "present" 5, not voting 86. Democrats voting for the bill, 175; Democrats against the bill, 7. Republicans for, 24; against, 97. This bill is a curbing to the Sugar Trust and a benefit to the American people who need cheaper food, and has since become a law as a part of the tariff act of October 3, 1913. The people have long been held in the firm grasp of the Sugar Trust. Surely the Democratic House did right in liberating the people from their unjust grasp; surely the Democratic House was not playing politics in passing this legislation, but, on the contrary, were helping every American citizen throughout every State in the Union. Here the equation stood out in bold-faced type in the American Congress: "Which shall you choose, the Sugar Trust on one hand, cheaper food for the American people on the other?" You of the Republican faith chose the Sugar Trust's fight, and we of the Democratic faith chose the people's fight and voted for the reduction. The verdict of the people was rendered last November. We assert it was a just verdict; you probably assert it was an unjust verdict; but in either event, how divergent our contentions may be, it was the last word on the subject. It was a court from whence no appeal can be granted. It at least discloses that both have sought the people's confidence; that we of the Democratic faith have found it and that you of the Republican faith have lost it, and the case is summarily closed.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I will.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I do not wish to interrupt my colleague who is making, I am sure, a splendid speech.

Mr. FERRIS. I agree to that. [Laughter.]

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. The gentleman is discussing the tariff, and has got to the sugar question, which his party said would provide cheaper food for the American people. I would like to know whether or not the gentleman is in favor of all the provisions of the Underwood tariff bill, especially those that relate to placing farm products generally on the free list.

Mr. FERRIS. I voted for the Underwood tariff bill, and I think it is the best tariff bill that was ever passed. How did the gentleman vote on free sugar?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I think I voted both ways. [Laughter.]

Mr. FERRIS. Which way did he vote the most? [Laughter.]

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I am opposed to putting sugar on the free list, and that is the way I voted.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman is probably one of the 96.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Just one more question. Does the gentleman think the farmers of Oklahoma believe in having farm products of South American States come into the United States and compete with their home products?

Mr. FERRIS. I do. I think that our soil is so rich and the climate is so good that nobody can compete with the farmers of Oklahoma. The tariff, as the gentleman knows, is a myth to get the farmer to vote for high tariff on steel and sugar and lumber. How did the gentleman vote on farm implements?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I got over onto the Democratic side on that item. [Laughter.]

Mr. FERRIS. Well, the gentleman has got some good left in him, but he did not get over on the Democratic side when we voted on the bill, so he faltered and failed when the people needed him the most. [Laughter and applause.]

GOOD ROADS.

The Democratic House on May 2, 1912, on a separate vote on the Shackleford good-roads amendment, adopted the same by the following vote: Yeas, 240; nays, 86; answered "present," 4; absent and not voting, 61; majority, 154. The Democratic House again passed a similar bill appropriating $25,000,000 from the Federal Treasury for aid to good roads, on a cooperative plan with the States, on February 10, 1914, by a vote of 284 to 42; answered "present," 5; not voting, 101; majority, 242. Party lines were not adhered to on this vote, most of the city Members voting "no," irrespective of party. (See daily RECORD of Feb. 10, 1914, p. 3432.)

Good roads are the property of all of us; all should therefore contribute to their upbuilding. Every civilized country in the world has done something toward the improvement of their highways save and except our own. In our Denver platform of 1908 we promised Federal aid to public highways; in the Baltimore convention of 1912 we solemnly pledged ourselves to Federal aid for the improvement of the public highways. In each case we did precisely in office what we promised to do while trying to secure office. You of the Republican faith have arranged tariff schedules for the manufacturer so that his riches have grown greater than he could have anticipated; you of the Republican faith have subsidized railroads with land grants until they have grown arrogant, powerful, and corpulent with wealth; you of the Republican faith have increased the appropriations for the Army and Navy until the patience of the tax-paying citizenship is almost exhausted. We of the Democratic faith have preferred to give the aid of the Federal Government first to the plain citizen who produces more every year than he himself consumes. We will again go to the country next November with an agreed statement of facts—you on the one side and we on the other. I shall not fear the verdict. I ask you, in the light of the recent past, will you fear yours?

CONVICT-LABOR LEGISLATION FOR AMERICAN LABOR.

On March 4, 1912, we passed our convict-labor bill under suspension of the rules; no roll call was demanded, two-thirds voting in the affirmative on a viva voce vote. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Mar. 4, 1912, 62d Cong., 2d sess., p. 2807.) No one on either side of the Chamber voted against the bill.

This bill, stripped of all its verbiage, declares that American labor shall not be compelled to compete with convict labor in this country. Can it be the playing of politics to exempt our American young manhood and womanhood from such competition? Is it bad faith to lift aloft and brighten the future of our men and women who toil? Is it unpatriotic or unfair to do for the toilers of this country what we would have done for our boys and girls? Is it lacking in good faith to do in office what we promised we would do while we were securing office? The equation again presented itself to the Democratic Party, and on the one hand stood the flower of our country, comprising the young men and women who toil, asking to be exempted from competition with convict labor; on the other hand stood grasping monopoly and special interest, asking to continue to employ contract labor, convict labor, and cheap labor in competition with our American boys and girls.

For 16 long years you of the Republican Party had every time taken your stand with the interests and with the employer and turned away from the one employed. For me and mine, I am proud that my party took its stand on the right side of this question; for me and mine, I cast my lot with the young men and young women who ask only to honorably toil in open competition with free labor and to be exempted from convict labor [applause]; we went to the country on this agreed state of facts and we received a verdict. For me and mine, I am willing to go on the battle field of American politics and meet you again and let the verdict be what it will.

EIGHT-HOUR DAY FOR AMERICAN LABOR ON ALL GOVERNMENT WORK.

This bill passed the Democratic House on December 14, 1911. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, Dec. 14, 1911, 62d Cong., 2d sess., p. 396.) No one even demanded a roll call; no one voted no.

This bill has long been the hope of labor; has long been the request of labor, with bowed-down head; is the hope of labor in the morning as he goes to his daily task; is the dream of labor as he returns at night with tired muscles but with rested brain. Can the passage of this bill be the bill referred to by our opponents across the aisle and the reactionary Republican press of this country? Can this be the Waterloo of the Democratic Party? Is this one of the fallacies and crimes within our party of which you complain? Is this legislation, enacted in the interest of labor, to make the man who toils forever turn his back on the hand that caresses him and gives him what he wants? Is this to be the iceberg of disaster that will sweep the Democratic Party to an unknown, unmarked, and watery grave? Pray tell us where do all these weird and spectacular prophecies hail from? What has happened that encourages you to make them? What moved the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] to make his speech prophesying trouble and disaster on December 18 last? Which bill is it that has so outraged the morals and the pledges to all the people? What bill is it that renders us political acrobats in the eyes of a just constituency? If the keeping of our word to labor and the keeping of faith with men who can not enter upon this floor and make their appeals known to us, can never get our ear or look into our face, is playing politics, let us all embrace it together, for surely such playing politics is golden in the eyes of every man.

ANTI-INJUNCTION.

The anti-injunction bill passed the Democratic House May 14, 1912, with 243 for and 31 against; present, 6; not voting, 113; majority, 212; no Democrat voted no. Thirty-one Republicans refused to allow this one request to American labor; no Democrat faltered and failed to do his duty. This may well be termed the one supreme wish of labor. This is their everlasting hope by day, their uninterrupted dream by night. This bill is the resurrection of their blasted rights. This is the one bill that guarantees to every laborer his solemn rights and will lift aloft the standard of his manhood and the improvement of his future. We of the Democratic faith promised the people of this country that we would pass this law if given power. Shall the fulfillment of that pledge to American labor in office be our undoing with labor? Would the Republican Party and the Republican President have us promise one thing and give another? Would the Republican leaders uphold us to kiss and then betray? No. The American people have never in the past, with their clear heads and grateful hearts, exacted any such toll as that, and it is my belief that they will not so exact it in the future. The American people are thinking, and labor is organizing for themselves to-day as they have never done in the past, and I thank the God that directs the destinies of men for it. They are not less patriotic than before, and they will not be less true to the men and parties that befriend them. To trust the people in the past has been but to inspire patriotism in their breasts and patriotic sentiments in their heads. To doubt them and to refuse to trust them has been your undoing and should in the future prove the downfall of parties and men who practice deceit, broken promises, and fraud upon them.

The anti-injunction bill has been the hope and the one wish of the toilers of this country since my boyhood. And all these years, with the Republican Party in full control, they have first heard them and then refused them. Have scorned them and then turned them away. Now, when the time has at last come when the Democratic Party is doing in office precisely what they said they would do while trying to secure office, must we bear the stigma of being called demagogues, hypocrites, slandered, abused, and considered unworthy of confidence and faith? No; it shall not be so. Lay on your charges, grumblings, croakings, and complaints mountain high and American labor will remove them and efface them with the closing of each day. [Applause.]

WOOL BILL.

This bill, reducing the tariff on wool and woolens, passed the Democratic House the first time on the 20th day of June, 1911; yeas 220, nays 100, present 6, not voting 61, majority 120. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 1st sess. 62d Cong., p. 2356.) It was vetoed by President Taft on the 17th day of August, 1911. The bill passed the second time on April 1, 1912, by a majority of 98—yeas 190, nays 92, present 9, absent and not voting 101; Democrats voting yes 171, Democrats voting no 1, Republicans voting yes 19, Republicans voting no 91. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of Apr. 1, 1912, 2d sess. 62d Cong., pp. 4141, 4142.) This bill was again passed as a part of the tariff act of October 3, 1913, and is now the law.

This bill was a curbing of the Woolen Trust and is an aid to every man, woman, and child in the country who wears woolens in the daytime or sleeps under woolen blankets at night. This was the one schedule in the Payne-Aldrich tariff act that President Taft said was indefensible in his Winona speech. This is the one schedule that everybody agreed to vote for a revision of on the stump, but only 19 Republicans would keep the faith after their induction into office; 91 of them voted no; the balance of them took to their heels and failed to vote at all.

By your false advice and garbled statements of the facts you forced your then already discredited President to walk in the valley of political death when you forced him at the special session in 1911 to veto these bills. You forced him to oppose in office precisely what he had stood for on the stump. You crucified his political destiny on an altar of broken promises and blighted faith. You surrounded him with conditions that caused him to go on the stump and defend himself as the criminal stands at the bar of justice charged with fraud, deceit, and crime. You humiliated this Republic in marshaling your then President to do a series of un-American tasks. Pitiable was it, indeed, to see him lose his own State in the primary for a second term. It is but Judas-like for the Republican Party to kiss and then betray. He vetoed the wool bill amidst your plaudits, kisses, and caresses, while most of your leaders took to their heels for personal safety.

OWEN-GLASS CURRENCY BILL.

This bill passed the House September 18, 1913—yeas 286, nays 85, majority 201; 251 Democrats voted yes, 3 Democrats voted no, 35 Republicans voted yes, 82 Republicans voted no; present 2, not voting 56. (See daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 1st sess. 63d Cong., p. 5505.) The bill went to the Senate, was passed by them, later came back to the House; the conference report was agreed to on December 22, 1913, there being 298 yeas, 60 nays, 76 not voting; total majority for the bill 238. (See daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 2d sess. 63d Cong., p. 1476.)

This is conceded to be the greatest piece of constructive legislation that has passed Congress in a generation. It was conceded on every hand that our currency laws were antiquated, inadequate, and out of harmony with the spirit of modern times. It is a distinguished triumph for the people in every respect. The provision in regard to the Government issue of notes to be loaned to the banks is the greatest triumph in currency legislation in a generation. Again, the bill provides for the Government control of the issue of money through a board composed of Government officials selected by the President, by and with the consent and advice of the Senate, this being an additional triumph for the people.

Second. State banks are permitted to share with the national banks the advantages of the currency system. So advantageous and so popular was the enactment of this legislation that not a murmur is now heard from the banks or the press in opposition to it. The people of all classes and creeds everywhere feel that the shackles are now stricken from their feet; that business may go on in an untrammeled way; that the wealth of the country will be more properly distributed for crop-moving purposes; that hording in the large centers will be prevented, to the great benefit of our rural communities and good results will flow from it in every avenue.

Surely it will not be condemned by the leaders of the Republican Party and the standpat press, who are yet willing to carry the grumblings, rantings, and forbodings of disaster and panic, for the Republican Party will not contend that this legislation was not needed, and that it has not brought great relief to business and the people in general.

BILL CREATING CHILDREN'S BUREAU.

This bill passed the Democratic House April 2, 1912. Yeas, 177; nays, 17; present, 8; not voting, 190. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 2d sess. 62d Cong., pp. 4226–4227.) This bill created a bureau to care for the children of tender years and unfortunate circumstances and conditions who come into the world to find circumstances and conditions more unfortunate than human flesh and blood were intended to indure. It provides a bureau that will care for unclaimed children, infanticide, orphanage, desertions, and lift aloft the standard of employment that is now being pursued by dangerous and deleterious methods; to prevent blight and disaster being heaped upon the boys and girls of to-day, who will on the coming morrow be the men and women of the day and the flower of our Nation. In fact, this Government is to supply discretion and exact justice for those of tender years and slight understanding of their own welfare.

I can not think the opposition can mean that bill, so wholesome and full of merit. I can not believe that the rank and file of the Republican Party would indulge their leader on the floor of this House to condemn such a bill. The future holds too much for us all to adopt any such narrow view. I can not believe that a just and scrutinizing public will ever believe we are guilty of the crime of playing politics when we seek to care for frail humanity and those who from infancy can not care for themselves. Every nation's success must of necessity depend upon the virile, strong, clear-headed individuals who make it up. Therefore this bill, conceived for the sole purpose of lifting aloft manhood and womanhood, seems to be charged and pregnant with patriotism rather than politics. So it seems if this be one of the bills referred to, their charges and complaints must again fail. If such be playing politics, let us all pray that the God of the universe quicken the understanding of all mankind until he may play politics, for such politics are as golden as the doctrine of the Christian religion itself. In fact, it is the religion of human sympathy, human justice, and equal rights, which is to-day and ever should be a towering element for good in this Republic.

THE LEVER AGRICULTURAL-EXTENSION BILL.

This legislation passed the Democratic House on the 19th day of January, 1914. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 2d sess. 63d Cong., p. 2001 of the daily RECORD.) So meritorious was this measure that not even a roll call was demanded. The viva voce vote showed 177 ayes and 9 noes. Surely under this statement of facts this legislation can not be attacked by men of any political faith.

THE UNDERWOOD TARIFF ACT.

This bill passed the Democratic House on May 8, 1913, by a majority of 142—yeas, 281; nays, 139; present, 1; not voting, 12. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 1st sess. 63d Cong., p. 1380, daily RECORD.) The conference report, embodying the Underwood bill plus the Senate amendments, was adopted September 30, 1913, by a majority of 151. Democrats for the bill, 250; Democrats against the bill, 1; Republicans and Progressives for the bill, 5; against the bill, 103. (See daily CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 1st sess. 63d Cong., p. 5818.)

Mr. BRYAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. I will.

Mr. BRYAN. Where the gentleman said the Republicans and Progressives voted for the bill to the number of 5, does he mind noting that there was one Republican and four Progressives?

Mr. FERRIS. I have not the data; I will accept the gentleman's statement.

This legislation from the first line to the last one was in the interest of the American people. It was passed in strict conformity to platform and party pledges. It was legislation that the American people demanded at the hands of the Taft administration that was by him and that party denied them. This is the legislation, the refusal of which by the Republican Party drove them from power. This is the legislation for the American people which demonstrates the willingness and readiness of the Democratic Party in office to keep the everlasting faith. The American people are so conversant with this legislation and it was given such great and unusual consideration both by Congress and the American people that further consideration of this legislation seems unnecessary.

FREEDOM OF PETITION FOR CIVIL-SERVICE EMPLOYEES.

On the 31st day of January, 1902, Theodore Roosevelt, then President, issued the following order placing a gag in the mouth of the 400,000 civil-service employees in this country:

FIRST EXECUTIVE ORDER.

All officers and employees of the United States of every description serving in or under any of the executive departments, and whether so serving in or out of Washington, are hereby forbidden, either directly or indirectly, individually or through associations, to solicit an increase of pay or to influence or attempt to influence in their own interest any other legislation whatever, either before Congress or its committees, or in any way save through the heads of the departments in or under which they serve, on penalty of dismissal from the Government service.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 31, 1902.

On the 26th day of November, 1909, Theodore Roosevelt, then President for a second term, issued the following order:

SECOND EXECUTIVE ORDER.

The Executive order of January 31, 1902, is hereby amended by adding "or independent Government establishments" after the word "departments" in the third and ninth lines.

As amended the order will read as follows:

All officers and employees of the United States of every description serving in or under any of the executive departments or independent Government establishments, and whether so serving in or out of Washington, are hereby forbidden, either directly or indirectly, individually or through associations, to solicit an increase of pay or to influence or attempt to influence in their own interest any other legislation whatever, either before Congress or its committees, or in any way, save through the heads of the departments or independent Government establishments in or under which they serve, on penalty of dismissal from the Government service.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

THE WHITE HOUSE, January 25, 1906.

The Democratic House, on May 2, 1912, by the passage of the Post Office appropriation bill containing a provision repealing those gag orders, repealed those orders and made the civil-service employees, numbering 391,350, free men under the Constitution, returned to them the rights that the Constitution guaranteed to them and that Theodore Roosevelt and Taft had taken from them. Was it wrong for the Democratic House to repeal it? Is this alienating the rights of the people in our employ? Is the repeal of those orders cowardice or demagogy under our Constitution? Is this one of the bills that you condemn? Is this one of the acts for which our unworthiness is forever established? Must we, because we uphold the constitutional rights of men, women, and children in the employ of the Government to be sacred and permit them to speak as free men, be scandalized and abused? I assert the Democratic House did right in repealing it. I prefer to believe Presidents Roosevelt and Taft did wrong when they established them. They were not just to our people. The restoration is what the fathers who wrote the Constitution said our people should have. Let us rest our cause here with the people.

ABROGATION OF BOSSISM IN THE HOUSE.

The Democratic House on April 5, 1911, abrogated Cannonism, bossism, and one-man power by a record vote of yeas 200, noes 135, present 1, not voting 52. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, 1st sess. 62d Cong., p. 57.) Democrats, yeas 198; no Democrat voted "no"; Republicans for, 2; Republicans no, 135.

The Democratic Party promised, if given power, that they would remove bossism from the American Congress and again make the House a deliberative body, as was intended by the fathers who wrote our Constitution. I think there will be few, indeed, who will say in this regard that we have not kept the everlasting faith. Under the old régime the Speaker appointed all committees. To-day they are elected by the House. Every section of the country gets representation and a square deal. Under this plan there are fewer pets and no man has all the power. I think a true statement of the situation would be that every man in the House has power in proportion to his experience and his ability. No one man has power to destroy another; no one man would be permitted to accomplish it. There is no longer strife and insurrection, but an era of good feeling, of great accomplishment, of short delays and good results flowing to the country in the way of wholesome legislation.

The Discharge Calendar makes it possible for the House at any time to call from an unwilling committee any bill that has been put to sleep by such committee. The Unanimous Consent Calendar and the Calendar Wednesday have removed all criticism of too much power being reposed in the Speaker. We have, in truth and in fact, restored the Congress to its deliberative function, and bossism no longer prevails among us.

The weird prophecies of our Republican opponents on the other side of the aisle as to our early falling out and our early disruption and disintegration seems to have fallen into disuse. I pause to ask what has become of these vague prophesies? Each year since the Democrats have been in power they have accomplished more nation-wide legislation than was accomplished by the Republican Party during its reign of power in a dozen years. How interesting it is to observe and to know that on every one of these bills which are asserted to be vicious from 25 to 90 per cent of the Republican membership have supported these bills above referred to. I ask, if our bills are bad bills and are bringing disaster to the country, what has become of the leadership of that Roderick from Illinois that he can not hold together the shattered remnants of that once boastful band? Where is the magic wand of that chieftain of old from the Danville district, who was here during the entire Sixty-second Congress and could hold only a small per cent of his own party in line on any proposition? What has become of the party of Lincoln and the sainted McKinley? Will the party, full of tradition, both beautiful and devoid of beauty, the party of many promises and few fulfillments, in the face of this voting record still persist in attacking everything that is good because it does not emanate from their own party? Will they still persist in attacking good things when they are so shattered and so torn that they can not vote as a unit even on adjournment? Will they continue to fight, oppose, and neglect legislation that the people need and spend all their time trying to discredit those who are moving steadfastly on toward the fulfillment of our promises made before election?

No; it is my abundant belief now, as it was then, that the people do approve of what we have done, and that they eagerly await what we expect to do in the future, as outlined by our President and our Congress.

The program to come may fairly well be defined as follows:

First. A rural credit system, where the farmer may, for the first time, come into his own by fair dealing with reference to procuring of loans at decent rates of interest.

Second. To remove the artificial restrictions to business that have grown up with the rapid development of the Nation's resources, and thereby curb, regulate, and, if necessary, to the end that justice may be done, destroy every trust within the Republic.

Third. To complete the physical valuation of railroads and other corporations, and thereby squeeze the water from the stock, so that the people may come into their own by decent rates and fair dealing.

Fourth. The prevention of interlocked directorates or duplication of directorships, which renders it possible for interlocked and interwoven institutions to oppress the public and retard the advancement of business development.

Fifth. The opening of Alaska and the development of her resources by lease laws, carefully safeguarded to prevent monopoly, and the early development of the country.

Sixth. The national enlarged grazing homestead law, so that in the arid sections of the West a home builder may take up a sufficient area of land on which to raise cattle and stock, and thereby maintain himself and his family without resorting to the ordinary channels of agriculture in an arid country where agriculture is not feasible.

Seventh. The solution of the Indian problem, involving 330,000 Indian allottees, scattered over the several States, with their millions of cash and property.

Eighth. An intelligent handling of the 700,000,000 acres of public domain in continental United States and Alaska, the millions of acres of forest reserve, and the untold millions of dollars worth of coal and mineral lands of the country, which have up to this time scarcely been scratched.

Ninth. The suppression of gambling in farm products, stocks, and bonds, insuring an open and honest market for the American producer.

Tenth. The solution of the Philippine question by their early liberation and ultimate independence.

REPUBLICANS NO LONGER THE PARTY OF PROGRESS.

Much has been said and much more written that the Republican Party was the party of progress and accomplishment, but lately we have heard little of this party slogan. What a spectacle it is for them longer to lay claim to being a party of progress and a party of accomplishment. Their recent record for progressive performances consists of the Payne bill. This bill has already been shot so full of holes that there is little sport in longer shooting at it. Its only genuine claim to progressiveness is that it traveled up instead of down. The passage of that bill progressed your party from Uncle Joe and 58 Republican majority in the Sixtieth Congress to Woodrow Wilson, a Democratic Senate, and CHAMP CLARK and a majority of two to one behind him in the Sixty-third Congress. The recent progressiveness of the Republican Party progressed them in Illinois from Lincoln in 1860 to Lorimer in 1909. This Republican progressiveness progressed them from a McKinley in 1896 to a Taft in 1912. They have traveled from Pinchot to Ballinger, from success to defeat, and they are still on the toboggan.

In the light of your scattered votes in this House, in the light of your recent disgraceful contest for the Presidency, where does this bland complaisance hail from? Be not too staunch in your doughty prophecies that the people will frown upon legislation enacted for their benefit. Be not too staunch in your reliance upon the lack of understanding of the American people. It is my belief, and the recent election but corroborates it, that the people are looking for action, not reaction. Their faces are turned toward the rising sun. They are facing toward the east, not toward the west.

No; it is my abundant hope that neither my party nor the representatives of my party on this floor will be frightened or retarded in their patriotic task of, first, standing by the good bills and good laws we have passed; and second, passing more of them as fast as the people demand. I pin my faith to the fact that we promised, if given power, that they would be passed. I pin my faith to the fact that the great bulk of the people of this country want them passed. I pin my faith to the fact that the people know better to-day than they have ever known before what they really want. I pin my faith to the further fact that they are going to have these bills passed some way, some where, and in the near future.

Let the reactionaries and political bosses go on in their weird unsound croakings of abuse. Let them slander the Democratic House in press and on this floor. Let them challenge our good faith, for surely the people are an intelligent people, for surely the people are a just people, and surely the people are our people. I shall not fear them; I do not fear them, but, on the contrary, I shall trust them and my vote shall be theirs. [Applause.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to know how the time stands.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has 2 hours and 10 minutes remaining and the gentleman from South Dakota 2 hours and 20 minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and Mr. BOOHER having assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore, Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12579, the Indian appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 32. An act to provide for the appointment of an additional district judge in and for the eastern district of Pennsylvania.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 23 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Friday, February 13, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Secretary of Commerce submitting estimates of additional appropriations for fish-cultural stations in the State of Kentucky and the State of South Carolina (H. Doc. No. 731); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting copy of a communication from the Acting Secretary of the Navy submitting an estimate of appropriation for authority to reimburse from the unexpended balance for depots for coal, fiscal year 1913, certain contract employees of the Navy Department who lost their personal effects through the loss of the lighter on which they were being transported from the steamship anchorage off Katalla, Alaska (H. Doc. No. 732); to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

3. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting schedules and list of papers, documents, etc., on the files of that department which are not needed in the transaction of public business and have no permanent value or historical interest (H. Doc. No. 733); to the Committee on the Disposition of Useless Executive Papers and ordered to be printed.

4. A letter from the Secretary of War, transmitting a letter from the Chief of War College Division, General Staff, in charge of the distribution of War Department documents, accompanied by a report of the documents distributed by the War Department during the fiscal year ended June 30, 1913 (H. Doc. No. 734); to the Committee on Expenditures in the War Department and ordered to be printed.

5. A letter from the Acting Secretary of Commerce, transmitting a detailed statement of the number of documents received and the number distributed by the Department of Commerce during the calendar year 1913 (H. Doc. No. 736); to the Committee on Expenditures in the Department of Commerce and ordered to be printed.

6. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting the paragraph of legislation for the urgent deficiency appropriation bill for the public building service, for compensation and traveling expenses of agents to select and recommend sites (H. Doc. No. 735); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

SENATE.

FRIDAY, February 13, 1914.

Rev. William Souper, M. A., of London, England, offered the following prayer:

O God, the God of wisdom, grace, and truth, be with us now at this time and enrich with Thy Spirit. Bless, we beseech Thee, this great Nation and lead them in Thy truth. Bless these Thy servants, the Senators, and grant unto them spirit of power and of love and of a sound mind. In Thy light may they see light clearly, and in Thy wisdom be made wise. Glory be to the Father and to the Son and to the Holy Spirit; as it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be, world without end. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

REPORT OF CHESAPEAKE & POTOMAC TELEPHONE CO. (H. DOC. NO. 597, PT. 2).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the president of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., transmitting, pursuant to law, the annual report of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co. for the year 1913, and stating that this report contains the actual figures for the year, and is to be substituted for the report submitted to Congress on January 14, 1914, in which the results of the operations of the company for the month of December, 1913, were estimated, which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by J. C. South, its Chief Clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bill and joint resolution:

S. 1294. An act to regulate the hours of employment and safeguard the health of females in the District of Columbia; and

S. J. Res. 110. Joint resolution authorizing the President to accept an invitation to participate in an international commission on phytopathology.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT presented a memorial of the Anaconda Branch, American Continental League, of Anaconda, Mont., and a memorial of the Edward Duffy Club, of Philadelphia, Pa., remonstrating against an appropriation for the celebration of the so-called "One hundred years of peace among English-speaking peoples," which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. WEEKS. I present resolutions by the General Court of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, favoring the construction of the proposed naval supply ship at the Charlestown Navy Yard. I ask that the resolutions may be printed in the RECORD and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

There being no objection, the resolutions were referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs and ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

THE COMMONWEALTH OF MASSACHUSETTS, 1914.

Resolutions relative to the construction of a supply ship at the Charlestown Navy Yard.

Whereas a new ship, to be known as a "supply ship," is to be constructed by the United States Government; and
Whereas bids for the construction of said ship have been submitted by various shipbuilding concerns; and
Whereas a bid has been submitted by the Charlestown Navy Yard for the construction of said ship which appears to be considerably lower than the lowest bid received from contractors: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy is respectfully requested by the General Court of Massachusetts to award the contract for the construction of said supply ship to the Charlestown Navy Yard.

Resolved, That copies of these resolutions be sent by the secretary of the Commonwealth to the Secretary of the Navy and to the Senators and Representatives in Congress from Massachusetts.

In house of representatives, adopted, January 14, 1914.
In senate, adopted, in concurrence, January 30, 1914.
A true copy.
Attest:

FRANK J. DONAHUE,
Secretary of the Commonwealth.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES.

Mr. PERKINS, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2553) to provide for the relief of certain enlisted men in the United States Navy, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 251) thereon.

Mr. WILLIAMS, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, to which was referred Senate resolution 270 providing for a stenographer to take hearings before the Committee on Mines and Mining, reported it with amendments.

Mr. SHEPPARD, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the bill (S. 3672) for the cession to the State of New York, in exchange for the lands required for the project approved by Congress March 4, 1913, of certain lands in the bed of the Harlem Ship Canal, heretofore ceded to the United States free of cost and now to be abandoned for the more direct channel, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 252) thereon.

Mr. KENYON, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 392) to create in the War Department and Navy Department, respectively, a roll designated as "the Civil War Volunteer officers' retired list," to authorize placing thereon with retired pay certain surviving officers who served in the Army, Navy, or Marine Corps of the United States in the Civil War, and for other purposes, reported it with amendments and submitted a report (No. 253) thereon.

Mr. PAGE, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 2538) to repeal sections 1538 and 1539 of the Revised Statutes, reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 254) thereon.

BRIDGE ACROSS ST. ANDREWS BAY.

Mr. SHEPPARD. From the Committee on Commerce I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (H. R. 11283) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the navigable waters of St. Andrews Bay, and I submit a report (No. 250) thereon. The report is on an ordinary bridge bill, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill as in Committee of the Whole.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MONUMENT TO MAJ. GEN. HENRY W. LAWTON.

Mr. ROOT. From the Committee on the Library I report back favorably, without amendment, the bill (S. 2440) providing for the erection of a suitable monument on the grave of Maj. Gen. Henry W. Lawton in Arlington National Cemetery, in the State of Virginia, and I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There being no objection, the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to consider the bill. It appropriates $5,000 to be expended, under the direction of the Secretary of War, in the purchase and erection of a suitable monument on the grave of Maj. Gen. Henry W. Lawton in Arlington National Cemetery, in the State of Virginia.

The bill was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

THE SOUTH CENTRAL TEXAS FLOOD (S. DOC. NO. 422).

Mr. FLETCHER. On the 3d instant the junior Senator from Texas [Mr. SHEPPARD] submitted the report of S. I. Kimball, General Superintendent of the Life-Saving Service, as to the services performed by the Galveston, San Luis, and Velasco life-saving crews, coast of Texas, relative to the south central Texas flood, and it was referred to the Committee on Printing for consideration. I report back favorably the matter with the request that it be printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDRESS BY HON. B. B. HARE (S. DOC. NO. 421).

Mr. FLETCHER. From the Committee on Printing I report back favorably a copy of an address by the Hon. B. B. Hare, assistant in agricultural education and rural economics, Department of Agriculture, on a plan to aid farmers in obtaining long-time loans at low rates of interest to buy and improve homes, and I am directed by the committee to request that the address be printed as a public document.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, that action will be taken.

ADDRESS BY HENRY LITCHFIELD WEST (S. DOC. NO. 420).

Mr. FLETCHER. From the Committee on Printing I report back favorably with the request that it be printed as a public document the manuscript of an address delivered by Henry Litchfield West, former Commissioner of the District of Columbia, before the du Pont Civics Class, Wilmington, Del., on the National Capital, submitted by the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. GALLINGER] on the 9th instant.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the address will be printed as a public document.

BOARD OF RIVER REGULATION (S. DOC. NO. 418).

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Printing, to which was referred Senate resolution 271, to print 10,000 copies of the substitute for S. 2739, submitted by Mr. NEWLANDS on the 12th instant, reported it without amendment, and it was considered by unanimous consent and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That there be printed as a document for the use of the Senate document room 10,000 copies of the substitute for S. 2739, the Newlands-Broussard river-regulation bill.

GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP OF ELECTRICAL MEANS OF COMMUNICATION.

Mr. FLETCHER, from the Committee on Printing, reported the following resolution (S. Res. 272), which was considered, by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That Senate Document No. 399, Sixty-third Congress, entitled "Government Ownership of Electrical Means of Communication," be reprinted with the accompanying papers and illustrations submitted by the Postmaster General in response to Senate Resolution No. 242, and that 1,000 additional copies be printed, of which 500 shall be for the use of the Senate document room and 500 for the superintendent of documents at the Government Printing Office, to be sold by him as provided by law.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

COMMITTEE SERVICE.

On motion of Mr. KERN, it was—

Ordered, That THOMAS J. WALSH, junior Senator from Montana, be appointed a member of the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation of Arid Lands to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Senator MYERS.

On motion of Mr. KERN, it was—

Ordered, That HENRY L. MYERS, senior Senator from Montana, be appointed a member of the Committee on Canadian Relations to fill the vacancy occasioned by the resignation of Senator WALSH.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS—GLADYS E. RODNEY.

On motion of Mr. DU PONT, it was—Ordered, That the papers in the pension case of Gladys E. Rodney (S. 3875, 62d Cong.) be, and the same are hereby, withdrawn, no adverse report having been made thereon.

THE INCOME TAX.

Mr. SIMMONS submitted the following concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 17), which, with the accompanying paper, was referred to the Committee on Printing:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That Regulations No. 33, United States Internal Revenue, being a compilation of the income-tax law and all regulations, with index, be printed as a Senate document, and that in addition there be printed for the use of Congress 62,000 copies in pamphlet form, to be apportioned as follows: Forty thousand copies for the use of the House document room, 10,000 copies for the use of the House folding room, 10,000 copies for the use of the Senate document room, and 2,000 copies for the use of the Senate folding room.

WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION LAWS (S. DOC. NO. 419).

Mr. FLETCHER. The Committee on Printing reports back favorably with an amendment Senate resolution 268. The amendment proposes to strike out the provision for printing as a Senate document additional copies of the report of the commission appointed by the National Civic Federation and the American Federation of Labor to study the operation of State workmen's compensation laws.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If I may have the attention of the Senator from Florida, what modification has been made in the resolution?

Mr. FLETCHER. We propose to eliminate the provision for additional copies and simply print the report of the commission as a Senate document.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. How many copies are provided for in the resolution?

Mr. FLETCHER. The resolution calls for the printing of the report as a document and for 5,000 additional copies.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. What was the proposition with reference to additional copies? I am not familiar with the language of the resolution.

Mr. FLETCHER. The resolution provided for printing the report as a Senate document and also for printing 5,000 additional copies. The committee acted favorably on the resolution, but eliminated the provision for additional copies, so that the usual number of copies will be printed as in every case of the printing of a Senate document. The matter of additional copies is not provided for in the report.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, that document is an exceedingly valuable one and one which will have a very wide circulation. I am personally very sorry that the committee has not provided for printing a larger edition. I suppose the cost of printing 5,000 more copies would not be very great. I wish it might be possible that the Senator would agree to the printing of 5,000 extra copies.

Mr. FLETCHER. I would have no objection, as far as I am concerned, to amending the report of the committee and providing for 5,000 additional copies. The cost of the additional copies would be $441.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It is a subject which is engaging the attention of nearly all the States and has had the attention of Congress as well. The investigation made by the joint committee of the Civic Federation and the Federation of Labor was a very thorough one. I do not know of anything upon this subject more useful that has been produced; at any rate, nothing more useful in recent years. If the Senator feels warranted in doing it, I hope he will agree to amend the resolution before it is passed so as to provide for 10,000 copies.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I will say to my colleague that this question was very carefully considered by the Committee on Printing and the amendment agreed to striking out the provision for printing 5,000 extra copies. There was some question as to whether the report should be printed at all as a public document. I wish to read now a letter from the Commissioner of Labor Statistics in the Department of Labor on this very matter and then refer to the letter in a brief way afterwards. This was written by the Commissioner of Labor Statistics:

I see by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the 7th instant that a resolution (S. Res. 268)—

That is the resolution just reported—

I see by the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the 7th instant that a resolution (S. Res. 268) has been introduced in the Senate and referred to your committee providing for the printing of a report of a commission appointed by the National Civic Federation and the American Federation of Labor on the operations of State workmen's compensation laws, together with an appendix. I am venturing to remind you that the Senate is at the present time printing a report on this general subject, Senate Document No. 336, which has as an appendix all the laws of the States on workmen's compensation and insurance. This report is in page proof at this writing, and it occurs to me that if, as I am informed, the appendix to the proposed report contains the State laws, you would not care to duplicate this rather large body of identical matter.

I will say to my colleague that that report is now ready to be printed, and it no doubt will be printed, and the committee thought it unwise to order extra copies of this report until we find out really which of the two reports is the better one to circulate or for which the greater call will be made.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If I understand the situation, they cover different matters. Of course it is of importance to have the text of the laws of the various States, but it will be found upon an examination of those various laws—and I think there are some 24 States which have adopted workmen's compensation laws—that they differ very materially one from another. The purpose of the investigation which was had by this joint committee was to compare those various laws and analyze them to some extent, and I understand that has been done.

Mr. SMOOT. It has been done in both the reports, but in the report now before the Senate it is a little more exhaustive, perhaps, than in the other report. But both reports are very lengthy, indeed.

Mr. FLETCHER. I think the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND] is correct in his statement that they covered quite different fields. The report to which the Senator from Utah [Mr. SMOOT] refers as having been referred to the Committee on Education and Labor and ordered printed is a compilation of the various laws of the States and of other countries, and it merely sets forth the acts, whereas the report which we are now considering analyzes and discusses the various laws. As I said, I think they cover different fields. This report does not undertake to set out in hæc verba the laws of the different States, but it is an analysis and a discussion and a consideration of all the various provisions in the different States of the country.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is my understanding of it.

Mr. SMOOT. The Commissioner of Labor Statistics does not so report, because he reminds us that the Senate is at the present time printing a report on this general subject——

Mr. FLETCHER. Of course.

Mr. SMOOT. Which is Senate Document 336, with an appendix giving all the laws of the States on workmen's compensation and insurance. In other words, it is a complete report made on this subject, and in connection with the report there is an appendix which includes all the laws of the different States, and that is what this report is.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The difference between the two reports is that one simply gives the provisions of the various laws without attempting to analyze them and compare them one with another. The great value of the report which has been presented by the committee is that it takes up these various laws and enters into a discussion of their operation in the various States; and the great usefulness of it will be that it will have a tendency to bring about a uniformity of legislation upon this subject which is very sadly wanting at present. There are almost as many different kinds of workmen's compensation laws in this country as there are States that have passed upon the subject. One deals with it from the standpoint of State taxation and State adjustment, as in Washington and Ohio; other States, as New York, from an entirely different standpoint; Michigan from another standpoint, and so on. It is a comparatively new subject in this country. It is one which we are concerned in. I mean by "we" Congress itself. It is exceedingly important that we should have all the light we can upon this subject.

Mr. SMOOT. If the resolution is adopted as reported now by the Senator from Florida, it will make of the report a public document. Then, if there is a great demand for copies after that, the Senate can act upon it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Except that it will cost more to print a new edition than it would to enlarge this edition.

Mr. SMOOT. All the plates will be preserved, and it will cost very little more than if the additional copies were printed at the present time. It may cost a little more, but the extra cost will be very little and we will know what demand there is for copies. I feel quite positive that the best way to proceed would be to adopt the report as submitted by the committee.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There can not be the slightest doubt about there being an exceptionally large demand for this document. It is a subject that is engaging the attention of nearly every State of the Union. Commissions are at work, and there are hundreds of people who are investigating it in its various phases. There is not the slightest doubt that an edition of 10,000 can be well placed without any difficulty whatever.

Mr. SMOOT. I understand that the associations which have made this examination and report are contemplating presenting an order for the printing of a number of copies that they may desire themselves. What they desired particularly was that it be made a public document, so that it could be passed through the mails without postage. That we propose to do. We propose to make it a public document, and it seems to me that if any of the railroads wanted to distribute 50,000 copies they should pay for the printing of them. I know that they are to be distributed through the railroads in some instances, and I believe that they ought to pay for whatever copies they desire to distribute. Then, if Senators want more than the usual number, of course we can consider the printing of those extra copies hereafter.

Mr. FLETCHER. I will say, Mr. President, that the resolution as introduced called for 5,000 additional copies, which is as many as the Senate can print, because we are limited to $500. The 5,000 additional copies would cost $441. We could not therefore, under the resolution, print 5,000 copies instead of 10,000, as suggested by the Senator from Utah [Mr. SUTHERLAND].

I am disposed to agree with the Senator that we are going to have calls for it and that it would be economy really to provide for those now, while the document is in press; but the committee thought otherwise, and I have reported the resolution as the committee instructed me. If the Senator desires to amend the report by adding 5,000 copies, that is a matter entirely with him.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The Secretary read the resolution (S. Res. 268), as follows:

Resolved, That the report of the commission appointed by the National Civic Federation and the American Federation of Labor to study the operation of State workmen's compensation laws be printed as a Senate document, together with the appendix accompanying said report, and that 5,000 additional copies be printed for the use of the Senate.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment of the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. The Committee on Printing reports to strike out, after the word "report," the words "and that 5,000 additional copies be printed for the use of the Senate."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Let me ask the Senator from Florida another question. How many copies will be provided for the Senate if the amendment of the committee is adopted?

Mr. FLETCHER. The printing of the regular number would provide about two copies for each Senator.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, it seems to me that it is a perfect absurdity as to a document of this character and of this value to simply print two copies for the use of each Senator, and I very much hope the amendment reported by the committee will be disagreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on the amendment proposed by the committee.

The amendment was rejected.

The resolution was agreed to.

APPOINTMENT OF VICE ADMIRALS.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The morning business is closed. The calendar under Rule VIII is in order.

Mr. BRYAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 4247) to increase the efficiency of the United States Navy by the appointment of six vice admirals.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, is it too late to object to the consideration of this bill?

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill has already been laid before the Senate on motion. The Secretary will read the bill.

The Secretary read the bill; and the Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, proceeded to its consideration.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to inquire what is the pay at present of rear admirals in the upper class or rank?

Mr. BRYAN. Rear admirals of the upper nine now get $8,000 and those of the lower nine $6,000.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What is the reason for increasing the pay of vice admirals to $11,000?

Mr. BRYAN. It is supposed, Mr. President, that vice admirals will be in command of fleets, and should, therefore, be entitled to increased pay. I will say to the Senator from Nebraska that I have here a copy of the hearings held before the Committee on Naval Affairs of the other House in December last, in which there is a comparison made of the pay for officers of the grade of vice admiral in our Navy and in other navies. The statement is sometimes made that the pay of officers of the different grades in the American Navy is larger than in other navies. While that may be so in some instances, when you compute the allowances made in addition to the salaries I do not believe it will be found to be true.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to know what is the pay of vice admirals in the other navies of the world?

Mr. BRYAN. I will say to the Senator that the pay of vice admirals in the English Navy on the home fleet is $13,766; on the China station it is $15,098. Even rear admirals in the English Navy, with their allowances, get $13,322. The rear admiral of the first home battle squadron gets $8,881; the rear admiral of the first home battle cruiser squadron gets $10,657; the rear admiral of the second home battle squadron gets $8,881; in the next class the pay is $10,657, and in another class $8,881.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill what reason there is for creating six new naval officers of this rank, with a very large increase in pay over the highest pay now given to rear admirals, aside from the assumed necessity of providing a rank for naval officers that shall equal the rank of the naval officers of other fleets with whom they may happen to come into temporary relations or contact? Is there any need in the Navy proper for the creation of these six additional officers?

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, that is a subject that has been considered for quite a number of years. The United States is the only power in the maintenance of navies that has not this grade of officers. The vice admiral of any other navy outranks any officer in the American Navy, and in case of combined action by the fleets of different nations the vice admiral of a very small power takes precedence over any officer in the American Navy.

I will say to the Senator that on February 2, as appears in the House hearings, the Secretary of the Navy was present, and made this statement:

In the recent situation in Mexico, when we requested Admiral Craddock to let Admiral Fletcher have command and leadership there, we had to cable to England and ask permission for that. They granted it, but they did not seem to think that this Government should have made the request.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I am somewhat familiar with the supposed need for having naval officers of higher rank than those we now have, and there may be such need; but it seems to me very doubtful whether there is any public need for giving to those officers a salary of $3,000 a year greater than we now pay to any other naval officer.

Mr. BRYAN. I will say to the Senator that it would not be $3,000 greater, considering the fact that rear admirals when at sea have an increased allowance which amounts to $800 a year, making their salary $8,800 instead of $8,000.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BRYAN. I do.

Mr. KENYON. My inquiry is aroused by the suggestion of the Senator from Nebraska. Can the Senator from Florida tell us, in addition to the salary, what perquisites these vice admirals will enjoy?

Mr. BRYAN. At sea, my understanding is, they do not get anything in addition to their $11,000, and when they are not on sea duty they will only draw the pay of a rear admiral. We have three fleets—the Atlantic, the Pacific, and the Asiatic—and it is desired to have in command of each of these three fleets officers who will outrank the rear admirals of other navies or rank along with vice admirals of other navies. It is assumed that at some time or other it will be necessary to send a vice admiral to replace one on duty; and so provision is made for six for the three fleets, with another provision that when not on sea duty they will get the pay of rear admirals.

The Navy Department thought that it was rather a niggardly policy to say to a vice admiral, "When you are not on sea duty and come back on shore we will reduce you to the rank of rear admiral for the single and sole reason of reducing your pay"; but the objection has been made that we do not desire to pay more to vice admirals on shore than we do to men in actual service. So the Navy Department yielded that point. The bill has been drawn so that when not on actual sea duty and when in the United States a vice admiral will only receive the pay of a rear admiral.

Mr. KENYON. It would seem to me that the pay is rather large—$11,000. Is there any particular reason why a vice admiral should receive more than a rear admiral?

Mr. BRYAN. In comparison with what other countries pay, I do not think the salary is too large.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I also feel that the pay is excessive. We may concede that a necessity exists for raising the rank so as to prevent our officers from being superseded when our fleets come in contact in American waters with fleets of other great countries, but there certainly is no public necessity for making the salary as great as is provided in this bill; so I move as an amendment that the salary be fixed at $9,000. If that shall be adopted, I will also move that when these officers are upon land they shall not be demoted temporarily either in salary or in rank. I think it ought to be——

Mr. OVERMAN. Would it not cost the Government much more money than under this bill if we should provide that these officers should not be demoted in salary when they are on land, so that when on shore duty they would get $9,000?

Mr. BRYAN. It would cost more, of course.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then I shall leave that as it is and simply move that $9,000 be substituted for the figures in this bill.

Mr. BRYAN. Then it will amount to an increase of only $200 for vice admiral over rear admiral.

Mr. BRISTOW. Why is not that enough? The rank is what the officers want. It seems like these fellows want to rank ahead of somebody else when they go to a party somewhere. Now, let us give them the rank without the increased pay, for $9,000 is a pretty good salary for men who are life officers and retire on three-quarters pay. We are now paying more than a million dollars a year to retired officers, who are the ornaments of the military establishment.

Mr. THOMAS. I should like to inquire what necessity exists for the addition to our Navy of six vice admirals?

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, I can not better answer that than by asking the Secretary to read a memorandum prepared by Paymaster Gen. Cowie, of the Navy Department.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

The United States is the only naval power on earth that confides the command of a powerful battle fleet to a rear admiral, who is prevented, whatever his individual capacity, by the very limitations of his low rank from rendering the most efficient services. Personal ability is handicapped by official status. The recognition of this fact should truly give us pause. Even the Chinese, Portuguese, and Danish navies, which are negligible in comparison with ours, have vice admirals, who take precedence over the commanders in chief of our great Atlantic Fleet, in the handling and fate of which is wrapped up so much of the hope, of the pride, and the destiny of the people. Such a condition of affairs lowers the prestige of the American Nation. The matter is a broader one than the feeling of personal slight and indignity bound to be experienced by any particular flag officer. That phase of the question, however intrinsically just and needful of correction, is entirely lost in the larger ones of national standing and national interests, which must inevitably continue to suffer so long as suitable rank is denied to the commanders of our fleets. It is bitterly humiliating to realize that in any combined operations or international functions where naval forces are involved, the flag officers of our mighty Republic are predestined to take the lowest place, and thus, under the working of world custom and agreement as strong practically as law, prohibited from exercising the degree of control and influence to which, in their representative capacity, they are rightfully entitled. The blush of shame invariably arises with the knowledge that only American flag officers must always submit, with what grace possible, to having their commands placed to the rear in lines of march and fleet formation; must always fire the first salute, always pay the first call, and always yield general precedence to foreign officers at state and social functions or other occasions of public demonstration. The Stars and Stripes are automatically assigned to inferior position. Such surely is not to the liking of our proud people. These relegations have to be acquiesced in without regard to the comparative superiority or dignity of the nations represented. It is merely a truism to assert that the rank of our commanders in chief is altogether incommensurate with the importance of their duties and of the country which they serve. It is also true that this lack of fitting representation of our country by naval officers of a rank commensurate with its own position as one of the foremost in the world is frequently and freely commented upon by the higher officials of other nations, many of them expressing their great surprise at the failure of Congress to have long since supplied this to them glaring omission in the personnel of our Navy.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, this matter of giving increased rank to naval officers is not a new question. It has been recommended by successive administrations of both parties as being necessary for the greater efficiency of the service, as it is now recommended by the present Secretary of the Navy, and very wisely recommended, as I think.

Of course it is very easy to say that this is to be done simply because it will give the officer a little more rank, and he personally wants to take a higher place at social functions; but we overlook the fact that these men abroad represent the United States, and some people, though they care nothing in the world about the officer, do not like to see the representative of the United States put in that position. However, that is probably a mere personal idiosyncrasy.

The real thing is that in any serious operations it becomes a matter of great practical importance, as it did in the Mexican case, which the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] cited. If I may quote a historical instance, when France sent out the army under Rochambeau to cooperate with our forces, Rochambeau had a rank equal to that of Washington; and the French Government directed Rochambeau to pay to Washington, when he appeared in their camp, the military honors accorded to a marshal of France, which at once recognized that he was to be in command of the united forces. From that grew the common story that Washington was a marshal of France. Of course he never was; but they directed that there should be paid to him the military honors that were paid to a marshal of France, in order to make sure that there could be no dispute as to the command of the allied forces. It was very essential, as I think you will all agree, that Washington should be in command of those allied forces.

We can not, by sneering at them, get rid of these military ranks which are recognized all the world over among civilized nations. It is a practical question. If we are in the presence of trouble, as we are in Mexico, and have our ships there, it is a matter of practical importance that the commander of our vessels, who probably will command twice or three times the number of ships that any other nation will have there, should have military precedence over the officer in command of perhaps a single ship or two ships from some other power. That has been recognized by the Navy Department, and I think by every one who has given any consideration to the question.

This bill contracts it to the smallest possible point by making the rank temporary and not retiring officers as vice admirals, as I understand. Of course, it must give them some increase of pay. The amount of that increase is for Congress to determine; but I believe the bill arranges that the increased pay shall cease when they are not on actual duty.

Mr. WARREN. That is not exactly right, is it? It is when they are at sea or on land in parts of the Government possessions other than the continental United States. That is to say, in Hawaii, Porto Rico, or the Philippines they would have the same rank as on sea, according to the bill as I read it.

Mr. LODGE. I do not understand that. They would have the rank at sea, of course. If they had a vice admiral's command they would have the rank wherever the fleet happened to be; but the pay is not to continue when they are on shore duty, as I understand.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Massachusetts yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; with pleasure.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the object is to secure for American naval officers proper precedence and proper consideration, why could it not be just as well secured by giving them increased rank without any increased compensation?

Mr. LODGE. Undoubtedly it could be. I suppose the increased compensation was suggested by the Navy Department because they did not wish to seem unreasonably mean.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It would look very much more as though they were trying simply and solely to serve the country if they should ask only for increased rank and not for increased compensation.

Mr. LODGE. They are not asking for it. It is the department which is asking for it. No officer is asking for it. The Secretary of the Navy is asking for it, and I suppose he thought it was only decent that with the increased rank there should go somewhat increased pay.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If the sole object is that we may be properly represented, it seems to me the bill might provide for the increased rank while providing that they should receive the pay of the former grade. It strikes me it would have more the appearance of being absolutely altruistic and national in its purpose if that were the case.

I do not propose to make any objection to the passage of the bill; but I notice that in all these cases where we are taking care of our dignity we also take care of the financial representative of our dignity.

Mr. LODGE. In every bureau in the departments of the Army and the Navy, when an officer is appointed he is given during his tenure of the bureau a certain rank and pay. Of course when his service in the bureau ceases the rank ceases and the pay ceases; but the pay has always gone with the increased rank, and it seems to me not unreasonable to give some increased pay. The increased rank undoubtedly will bring an increase of expense.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I would like to suggest to my colleague that the increased rank, and the necessity for it, presupposes that the fleet will be doing duty with the naval organizations of other nations. This adds materially to the expense which the admiral incurs, because he must do more or less entertaining which is not personal in any sense; it is official. There is no allowance made in our Navy for such purposes except for special occasions. An allowance is made for such purposes to the commanding officers of fleets, I think, in every navy in the world. Therefore this increased compensation will quite likely be used for purposes which in other services would be provided by an appropriation made directly for it.

Mr. LODGE. That is very true, Mr. President. In other services a large allowance, or a very substantial allowance, is made to the officers in command of fleets for entertaining, because there is a great deal of official entertaining which they have to do, and which they can not avoid. They are not men of large means and it falls pretty heavily on them.

Mr. WARREN. It is not important, Mr. President, but I think I am right in what I said before. I will read section 2:

That the annual pay of vice admirals when on sea duty, or on shore duty beyond the continental limits of the United States, shall be $11,000.

Mr. LODGE. I am not aware that I said anything to contradict that—and it is not important if I did—because I was not trying to argue that point. I think they should have some advance in pay.

We have given the rank of ambassador in a good many cases. In the case of Turkey we rather forced it upon them, for the simple reason that while the ambassadors of the other powers had the entrance at any moment to the Sultan or to the Vizier who had charge of foreign affairs our minister, with only the rank of minister, was kept dangling in the anteroom until the ambassadors had been satisfied.

You may say that that is all an absurdity and all ridiculous, and that, according to our ideas, it should not exist; but it does exist. The position of ambassadors was settled by the treaty of Vienna, and they have a recognized rank in every nation on earth. Therefore we found it profitable to confer the rank of ambassador; and in Turkey, where it was really specially needed, we increased the pay of the ambassador by the purchase of an embassy, so that he gets the rent of his house.

I think they all ought to have better pay. I am not at all interested in the individual nor in his social aspirations nor in his desire to take position, nor anything of the kind, but wherever a man represents the United States, either diplomatically or in a military way, I am interested in seeing my country properly represented, without ostentation, but properly and with dignity.

It seems to me it is necessary and wise to give this additional naval rank. While an officer is in command of a fleet at sea he certainly ought to have it, and I should be inclined to give him not a large but a reasonable increase of pay while he occupies that position, just as we give an increase of pay to a bureau chief while he occupies that position.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I trust that I am as sensible of the necessity of doing what is required for preserving and maintaining the dignity and character of the Government of the United States as any other Member of this body. I have the most profound respect for the opinion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], and I am sure he has given the best and most cogent reasons for the creation of this new line of naval officers.

Of course, I am quite aware of the fact that what is generally known as precedence involves a condition that is universal among the nations as regards both their own affairs and their mutual intercourse. It is one thing that is common to civilization, and extends from Timbuctoo to Washington.

I am also sensible of the fact that, whether we will or no, we must to some extent conform to the requirements which custom, both in official and in social lines, has prescribed, and which has crystallized into unwritten law. But I think that wherever we can properly and consistently we should place restrictions upon this custom; and this country, republican in form, where all men are theoretically supposed to be equal, should take the lead in so doing.

We have gotten along for a good while with our present complement of officers for the Navy. We have done away with active admirals and with vice admirals, and to-day rear admirals constitute the highest form of official service in the Navy. How long that has been the case I can not say; but whether for a long or a short time, we have not up to this moment experienced any inconvenience or embarrassment by reason of the fact.

It may be and probably is true that other countries whose naval strength is insignificant compared to our own have an official staff, comprising vice admirals and perhaps admirals, without any designation or adjective attached to their names, in consequence of which the social customs of nations require that the commander of an American vessel should walk or stand behind some of the functionaries of some of the other navies at social or official functions. But I can not conceive that any disgrace or any reproach or any sort of reflection can grow out of that situation, unless we are willing to proclaim it against ourselves.

For my part, I have never been much of a stickler for precedence. It makes no difference to me whether in social or other matters any particular line of distinction is observed. It is all artificial and perhaps meaningless. It certainly should not possess the importance that it seems to possess both socially and officially.

Now, is there any necessity for increasing the efficient staff of our Navy at this time by the creation of 9 or 11 vice admirals?

Mr. WARREN. Six.

Mr. THOMAS. By the creation of six vice admirals or any number of vice admirals for any of the reasons which have been so far assigned to raise the efficiency of the corps? I confess I perceive none. Yet it may be that the matter is of sufficient importance to require the passage of this act, but I can easily imagine how, if we created a half dozen vice admirals, it might be very easy for other countries to create the rank of admiral, if, indeed, that position does not already exist, in consequence of which we would be confronted directly with the same situation officially, and what is more important, perhaps, socially.

Mr. WARREN. We have an Admiral now, but the rank is of a personal nature, and it dies perhaps with the person holding it.

Mr. THOMAS. Then, if we have an Admiral now, I assume that he takes precedence of everybody in the Navy.

Mr. LODGE. He does.

Mr. THOMAS. Good.

Mr. LODGE. I believe he takes precedence in every service in the world. I think no one ranks above him.

Mr. THOMAS. Very good. Then, if trouble occurs in Mexico whereby the conjoint action of our fleet and others is necessary, we might draw out this Admiral from his retirement and send him down there to take command of the whole fleet.

Mr. BRYAN. Perhaps the Admiral is not physically able to go.

Mr. THOMAS. Perhaps Admiral Dewey is not physically able to go. Of course, I appreciate the fact that he holds that position by virtue of his great services to the Nation, and justly deserves the distinction conferred upon him.

Mr. LODGE. He holds it, of course, by virtue of an act of Congress.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; but in view of that suggestion, Mr. President, for the purpose of meeting and discharging our social obligations, for that is what they amount to, whereby the dignity of the United States can be upheld upon all social and other occasions, why not just create one Admiral by statute? I do not suppose that because a man is a vice admiral he is any better commander than if he were simply a rear admiral. Why not take the rear admirals that we have at present, or some portion of them, and make them vice admirals?

Mr. BRYAN. That is exactly what the bill provides.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes; do away with the rear admirals entirely. If the rear admiral is an official who must bring up the rear whenever put in official or social intercourse with other nations, let us call him something else, so that our naval officials may be like the officials of some more experienced navy and give them the highest possible rank without reference to the extent of our naval equipment.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. THOMAS. I do.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think the Senator from Florida made a mistake in replying to the interrogatory of the Senator from Colorado. The bill does not simply give to our rear admirals the temporary rank of vice admiral, but it creates six new officers. We will still have the same number of rear admirals that we have now, but we add to the list of officers six new vice admirals.

Mr. BRYAN. If the Senator from Colorado will permit me, I did not intend to say that the number in the grade of rear admiral would be reduced, but I said to the Senator from Colorado that vice admirals would be taken from the grade of rear admirals. Why not let some of the rear admirals be vice admirals? That is what I meant.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. But the real fact is the bill does increase the present list of officers of the United States Navy drawing $11,000 each, if they are at sea all the time. It makes that addition to the present force without any apparent need for it.

Mr. THOMAS. I am obliged to the Senator from Nebraska for calling my attention to that fact. My reading of the bill was somewhat hasty and my first impressions were entirely consistent with the statement of the Senator from Nebraska, but I accepted that of the Senator from Florida because he is much more familiar with the bill than I am, and as a consequence is presumed to know more about the details.

I do not know that I care to occupy the time of the Senate any longer in the discussion of this matter beyond adding to what I have said the statement that, in my judgment, we are incurring an entirely needless expense and creating a line of officers for which there is, at present at least, no necessity. I am perfectly willing to take chances with the commanders we now have, who, I think, will maintain the dignity of the Navy and assert its power and precedence wherever and whenever necessary; and if, forsooth, they should come in conflict with some custom whereby in the course of events they should be placed one yard in the rear of somebody else, I am unable to perceive how it will complicate our affairs, how it will detract from our dignity, or how it will affect our prestige or interfere with the laws of progress. There is so much that is personal about matters of this kind that it is extremely difficult for me to separate the gold from the dross. I believe that in all these matters we should act as a republican Government should, leaving it to the good sense of our rulers and to the wise judgment of those who come in contact with others to determine whether or not we comply with all that any sensible rule of dignity or courtesy may require.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President, I will say very frankly that I am sorry that the bill has come up for consideration this morning. I have no intention of blaming the Senator in charge of the bill, because I know how important these matters are. Nevertheless, the bill was reported only a couple of days ago, and those of us who are interested in certain matters have not had an opportunity to look up the case as we would like to look it up.

There is a good deal to be said along the line of maintaining precedence and rank. It is something that enters into our diplomatic life and military life. It is important in a way in the Army and in the Navy. I am one of those who were in the Senate before we had ambassadors, and I remember the debates against our aping the habits and customs of other countries, and that it was belittleing in us that we should conform to their methods. I am not one of those who rail at the observance of rank, precedence, and so forth. I do not object to having vice admirals.

We have admirals under the law on the Navy side of the Military Establishment, or we can have them; and vice admirals and rear admirals as well. We have in the Army, or did have, in its original framework, general, lieutenant general, major general, and brigadier general. A brigadier general stands equal to a rear admiral of the lesser rank; the major general with the rear admiral of the upper rank. We now have no lieutenant generals to correspond with vice admirals, and no general to correspond with admiral. I am of the opinion that we ought to have in the Army one or more lieutenant generals. I am of the opinion that when some great general has distinguished himself, his grateful Nation may reward him by making that particular officer a general the same as they made Dewey the Admiral of the Navy.

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator will allow me——

Mr. WARREN. I yield.

Mr. THOMAS. I wish to say that I am in hearty accord with that sentiment. I believe these distinctions should be conferred upon men who have earned them. My objection to this bill is that it creates by wholesale, as it were, a distinct line of officials, the purpose of which, as I gather it from the report, is one that does not commend itself to my judgment as being necessary. There is no question but that our Government should at all times utilize its high places by conferring them upon men who have justly earned them.

Mr. WARREN. Now, the Senator from Colorado touches a point on which I agree with him. I do not believe that we need, in addition to the present number, six extra admirals in the Navy at the present time at a salary of $11,000 when on shore duty abroad or on sea duty, with the rank, to make it plain, of lieutenant generals. It is my own opinion that if we should have one, two, or three vice admirals and should take them from the nine present rear admirals of the first rank, without filling their places, we would have enough.

I notice that the bill itself mentions admirals that are not doing duty now—that is to say, admirals on the extra list. With the 18 admirals, for all of whom it seems they can not find places, I certainly object to making 24 or 25 in number altogether.

I was sorry to see the bill come up, because I wanted time, and I thought others might, to place themselves right upon this question. Our Navy is one of which we have a right to be proud. It is one which we have built up at great expense, and we propose to build it still larger. I believe the only time I have ever cast a vote against any proposition that was recommended after full investigation for the Navy was when I voted for two battleships instead of four. I want to vote for every well-considered measure for the benefit of the Navy, and I do not want to vote against things for the Navy because the Army does not have them. However, I wish to say in all seriousness that those who vote for this measure must expect, of course, to resurrect the office of lieutenant general in the Army, either for one or more, and have officers of that rank. The Army is the older or senior arm out of which the junior arm was taken, and to place the Army where there is not a single officer in that entire body but who must go away to the foot of the table, speaking socially, or must be in the rear everywhere is hardly fair. I believe we ought to have right now vice admirals of the Navy and also lieutenant generals of the Army, one to three of each, as circumstances demand, and perhaps one general of the Army.

The very argument that was made, and so well made, why there should be higher rank in the Navy—and I indorse it—is equally applicable to the Army. It is not that I propose to vote to defeat this bill because of increased rank, but I am one of those who certainly expect that those who believe we should provide sufficient rank for the Navy should also believe in provision of equal rank for the Army.

The point that I make now is that, with the light I have, I am utterly and absolutely opposed to adding six admirals to the number we now have.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], in his remarks, said that he had never known of any embarrassment that this Nation had had by reason of the lower rank of our naval officers. I remind him that this Nation was not only embarrassed but was absolutely humiliated in the Boxer rebellion, when Lord Seymour had charge of the American soldiers as they went into Peking, and this Nation had to send over Gen. Chaffee in order that our troops could be commanded by an American. Germany, it will be well remembered, in order to get charge, sent a field marshal there. We have got to recognize the fact that the nations of the world lay a great deal of stress on rank.

What is the condition in Mexico to-day? There is England with 2 little cruisers. There is our admiral with 26 battleships. Yet England, by reason of the fact that she has a vice admiral, would take charge in case we had to go into Mexico with our marines and we would have to take a back seat.

Mr. THOMAS. If my friend will yield for a moment, I want to repeat that I know of no cause for embarrassment resulting from this discrepancy in rank. If we invite it, if we submit to it, that is a different proposition. But take the last instance suggested by the Senator from North Carolina. If I understand him correctly, Great Britain has a couple of cruisers in the waters of Mexico and we have 26 battleships; that the commander of the cruisers in the British Navy has a higher rank than the commander of our 26 battleships; and because of that fact we would be obliged to surrender the command of our Navy to the British officer, or at least submit to his leadership, in the event of mutual hostilities against Mexico. If we did so, it would be of our own volition and consent. In other words, we would take off our hats to the commander of the smaller allied force, simply because he holds a higher rank than the officer who commands the larger one. That may be military tactics or naval strategy, but to my mind it smacks of absurdity.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I am informed that in case we had to send marines into the City of Mexico this officer would take charge and define the policy to be pursued. Whether we surrender to it or not, we do not want friction with England. England would not submit to it for a moment that the vice admiral should be commanded by an American rear admiral. We could demand it if we had an officer there of equal rank, but when we have an officer of a lower rank the officer of the superior rank takes precedence; the English officer takes rank over the American officer, although we have 26 battleships and England has 2 little cruisers.

Mr. THOMAS. That simply reduces the science of war to matters of punctilio; that is all.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President——

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. THOMAS. Just a moment. I want to make this suggestion. Let us carry the matter still further. Suppose when the Panama Canal is opened we are down there with 26 battleships. The Panama Canal is ours. A single vessel of the Chinese Government, with its complement of admirals, vice admirals, rear admirals, captains, lieutenants, ensigns, and midshipmen, is also there. Will the Senator contend that because of this custom we must allow the Chinese vessel to enter and head the procession through our own canal?

Mr. OVERMAN. I did not say that.

Mr. THOMAS. That is the legitimate consequence of the Senator's contention.

Mr. OVERMAN. Not at all.

Mr. THOMAS. It is the legitimate deduction.

Mr. OVERMAN. I spoke of the nations acting together, engaging in a joint operation.

Mr. THOMAS. But we propose to act together jointly at the opening of the canal. The first procession of vessels through the canal will be composed of ships from all the world's navies. If this matter of precedence is so supreme that it can not be set aside or avoided even in war, then certainly it follows that if a smaller vessel in the canal procession has the officers of highest rank it must take precedence of everybody else, and if our fleet is commanded by an officer of the lowest rank we must bring up the rear in the march of the navies through the great canal. I confess that these matters do not appeal to my sense of propriety or fairness.

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield to the Senator from New York.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President, we never subject our officers to the command of anybody, except the officers of the United States, but there are certain recognized commands, both in the armies and in the navies of the world, and the persons who exercise those commands, according to the recognized use of language, receive certain designations. What seems to me to be the plain sense of this subject is that when we have an officer to exercise a given command we should call him by the title that in accordance with the ordinary use of the English language indicates the command that he holds. I think that is all there is to it.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. ROOT. Wait a moment. If an officer is to command a regiment, we call him a colonel; if he is to command a brigade, he should be called a brigadier general, he should not be called a colonel; if he is to command a division, he should be called a major general, and he should not be called a brigadier general; if he is to command a corps, he should be called a lieutenant general; if he is to command a fleet, he should be called a vice admiral.

We have somehow got into the habit of being afraid to give to our officers the proper title which indicates the command they exercise. I have not examined this bill, but I understand——

Mr. OVERMAN. I want to ask the Senator from New York if it is not true that by reason of the fact that we did not have a vice admiral Lord Seymour did take charge of the troops entering Tientsin?

Mr. LODGE. When they made the first advance.

Mr. OVERMAN. When they made the first advance; and did he not take charge by reason of his rank?

Mr. ROOT. That is probably the case; not that he commanded, but that the American marines acted in cooperation with the English forces, and the general movement was under the direction of the English officer.

Mr. OVERMAN. Of course the English officer directed the whole policy. While our officers immediately commanded the marines, they acted under Seymour's orders.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I think that the Senator from New York, in his usually clear and concise manner, has expressed the whole situation in a nutshell. Why can we not give that designation to the officer which he ought to have in connection with the command which at the time he exercises? That is the whole thing. Why create a fleet of admirals, if you please, for the purpose of meeting this difficulty, if it is one? It would be much better, and more in consonance with the fitness of things, to provide by law that the commander of a fleet shall be a vice admiral during the period of his command, and that that smaller body which is appropriate to a rear admiral shall be commanded by an officer bearing that title at that time. There is a great deal in that proposition. Of course an officer ought to bear the designation of the thing that he at the time represents. Here we are going to create by this bill six vice admirals; we are going to add them to our list of officials supposedly because it is necessary to maintain the dignity of the Nation and shield its precedence in the event of social or official intercourse with other nations. The price is too great for the object in view.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, we have a great fleet on the Pacific coast. According to the argument of the Senator himself we ought to have a vice admiral to command there. We have a great fleet down on the Atlantic; we ought to have a vice admiral to command there, according to the Senator's argument; and according to his argument we also ought to have a vice admiral in command of the Asiatic Fleet.

Mr. THOMAS. Yes. Now, let us provide by law that when such an officer——

Mr. OVERMAN. This bill, as I understand, provides that whenever a rear admiral or a vice admiral, as the case may be, comes home he loses his rank; that is, he only holds his rank when he is in command. That is the way I understand the bill.

Mr. THOMAS. That is one of the phases of the bill, but this proposition is not necessary. When one of our rear admirals is in command of a fleet and exercises the powers of a vice admiral, we should provide by law that he shall be a vice admiral, and not create a number of them, as it is now proposed to do.

Mr. OVERMAN. I should like to ask the Senator how much money is involved in this proposed appropriation?

Mr. THOMAS. Eleven thousand dollars a year for each one of the vice admirals, in the way of salaries.

Mr. OVERMAN. Oh, no.

Mr. THOMAS. As I understand it, $11,000 is provided for each one of them.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator does not understand the bill as I understand it.

Mr. THOMAS. It may be that I do not understand it at all.

Mr. OVERMAN. The Senator may be right; but let us see whether he is right or whether I am right. I understand that the rear admiral is to be promoted to vice admiral, but that increases the salary only $1,000 a year. How much is the whole amount involved in this bill? I will ask the Senator in charge of the bill that question.

Mr. BRYAN. I think it is about $4,000 or $5,000 a year.

Mr. OVERMAN. The whole amount involved is only about four or five thousand dollars a year. We are haggling here over that amount which is involved in placing our commanders on an equal rank with officers of the other navies of the world.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, it may be, although I think otherwise, that only four or five thousand dollars are involved here; but many items of four or five thousand dollars amount to a great deal at the end of the year.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator please, I think he misunderstood me. It is only an addition of $1,000 a year.

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator will allow me, I shall now read the bill, which will probably settle our controversy. It provides:

That the active list of the line of the Navy is hereby increased so as to include the grade of vice admiral, which grade shall consist of six officers, four of whom shall be appointed within one year from the passage of this act and the remainder shall be appointed as soon thereafter as practicable. Appointments to the grade of vice admiral shall be made by selection by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, from among officers on the active list—

If you are going to "increase" the list of the Navy officials, you must add to it the six more officers who are called vice admirals.

Mr. OVERMAN. If the Senator please——

Mr. THOMAS. Just a moment, if the Senator will permit me. The second section of the bill provides:

SEC. 2. That the annual pay of vice admirals when on sea duty, or on shore duty beyond the continental limits of the United States, shall be $11,000; when not on such duty they shall be entitled to the pay and allowances of a rear admiral of the upper nine.

Six times eleven are sixty-six—$66,000, subject to the deduction which comes from the proviso of the section which relates to these officers when they are not upon the active list.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the Senator does not understand it.

Mr. THOMAS. That may be.

Mr. LODGE. I only wish to ask a question. It seems to me that on the face of the bill we keep the present number of rear admirals and add six vice admirals.

Mr. THOMAS. Precisely.

Mr. LODGE. I do not think that is necessary.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not so understand it.

Mr. LODGE. I think what we ought to do here is to give the President authority to select six men from the rank of rear admiral and make them vice admirals.

Mr. OVERMAN. That is what I understand the bill does.

Mr. LODGE. Then we add two or, say, three thousand dollars a year to their pay when on this duty.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think that is the intention of the committee, and that is the way in which I understand it.

Mr. LODGE. I do not remember the exact number of admirals we now have. How many are there?

Mr. WARREN. There are 18.

Mr. LODGE. As I understand, there are 18 rear admirals, and adding 6 rear admirals will make the number 24. I did not help prepare the bill, but I do not understand that it was the intention to make 24 admirals, vice and rear.

Mr. OVERMAN. I do not so understand.

Mr. LODGE. It seems to me, if you take one-third of the existing rear admirals and have the number stand 12 rear admirals and 6 vice admirals that we shall reach our point. I am not aware that the Navy is asking for more rear admirals.

Mr. THOMAS. The Senator from Massachusetts, I think, is exactly right.

Mr. OVERMAN. I think the department understands this bill as I understand it, and I want to see whether the chairman so understands it.

Mr. BRYAN. The Senator is mistaken.

Mr. WARREN. Before the Senator proceeds, will he allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. OVERMAN. I yield with pleasure to the Senator.

Mr. WARREN. This bill provides, in the first place, an increase as to the active list of the Navy. It says:

That the active list of the line of the Navy is hereby increased so as to include the grade of vice admiral, which grade shall consist of six officers.

Then it later goes on to provide how they shall be retired at 62 years of age, or at 65 if continued in the service by special order. There seems to be another matter here—I will not say it is a joker, because I am inclined to think that everyone connected with the legislation is working in good faith—but the fact remains that, after providing—and it is a good provision—that no officer shall be appointed a vice admiral until his physical fitness to perform all the duties of that grade has been established to the satisfaction of a board of medical officers appointed by the Secretary of the Navy,

It continues:

Provided further, That any officer now or hereafter carried in the grade of rear admiral as an extra number shall cease to be an extra number if appointed a vice admiral.

The facts are that we have so many rear admirals now, and four extra numbers in that grade, that it is rather odd that the President can appoint four the first year and the others when convenient; but there is not a thing in this bill anywhere that repeals the present law, which provides for nine rear admirals of the first grade and nine rear admirals of the second grade, and if any of those rear admirals are appointed to the grade of vice admiral there is nothing in the law to hinder the places of the rear admirals of the first grade being filled as they go up to the higher rank—the rear admirals in the second grade going up into the first grade, and so on. If the intention is not to increase the Navy, let us say so in the bill.

I do not object to the appointment of vice admirals; I wish to be understood as to that. But with four extra rear admirals now, what is the reason for creating six additional vice admirals and not reducing the number of rear admirals correspondingly?

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, it was not the intention of the Navy Department to reduce the number of rear admirals from 18 to 12. It was their intention that the number of rear admirals should remain the same as at present, with nine in the upper grade and nine in the lower grade. I assume that they would prefer, rather than to have the bill fail, to have the number of rear admirals reduced. I asked the officer who was sent here by the Secretary of the Navy the specific question, and he said it was because they need more admirals than they have to-day; that they could not afford to reduce the number, which is 18.

I think I have some information here that might be of value: The number of rear admirals in the British Navy is 56; in the German Navy, 22; in the French Navy, 30; in the Japanese Navy, 38; in the Russian Navy, 28; in the Italian Navy, 14; in the Austrian Navy, 67; in the Spanish Navy, 8; in the navy of Holland, 8; and so forth.

As I have said, it was not the intention of the Navy Department to reduce the number of rear admirals. If Congress sees fit to do that, it is for the Congress to say.

Neither can I see, Mr. President, that this adds to the expense of the Navy the amount of the salary of each vice admiral, because the men who would be promoted to that rank are now drawing salaries as rear admirals, and you would certainly not add, therefore, the total amount of the salary of vice admirals to the expenses of the Navy. You must, if you add the $66,000, subtract from that what the officers advanced would have received in the lower rank.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. LEWIS in the chair). Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. BRYAN. I do.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let me ask the Senator from Florida is it not a fact that if six rear admirals are promoted to be vice admirals their places would be also filled, so that the net result would be the addition of six naval officers with the rank of vice admiral, and each one would have the salary of a vice admiral when at sea or on foreign shores, and the salary of a rear admiral, with his allowances, when on shore duty in the United States?

Mr. BRYAN. That is true.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. So that it does add six high-salaried officers?

Mr. BRYAN. There is no question about that.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. That is exactly what I have been contending.

Mr. BRYAN. In regard to the question as to the increase involved, of course the total salaries of the six vice admirals would not be added——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. There may be a little fraction of difference.

Mr. BRYAN. Because you must deduct the amount of salary the officers are now drawing in the lower grade.

Mr. THOMAS. At what would the Senator put the aggregate increase?

Mr. BRYAN. I have not estimated it. It would be a very difficult thing to figure it out, because if you should promote six rear admirals to the grade of vice admiral, and should then promote six captains to the grade of rear admiral, certainly you would not ignore the fact that they were drawing salaries as rear admiral or captain, as the case might be, before the promotion occurred. The aggregate increase, therefore, is a mathematical proposition which the Senator from Colorado can figure out as well as I.

Mr. THOMAS. Oh, yes; I can figure it out, but I thought perhaps the Senator, being in charge of the bill, had made the computation, or that it had been made by the department for him.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. BRYAN. Certainly.

Mr. SMOOT. I was simply going to say to the Senator, if I understood his statement correctly, that there would be six vice admirals added to the Navy list; there certainly would be the expense of paying those six vice admirals over and above the present cost.

Mr. BRYAN. Oh, no.

Mr. SMOOT. It could not be otherwise, Mr. President.

Mr. OVERMAN. You would have to subtract the amount of the salary the rear admiral was drawing before his promotion to the grade of vice admiral.

Mr. SMOOT. Not at all, because the law provides that there shall be nine rear admirals; and, if you advance those rear admirals to the grade of vice admiral, some officers of lower rank will have to takes the places of the rear admirals.

Mr. BRYAN. But those other officers are also drawing a salary now.

Mr. SMOOT. That does not make any difference.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Florida yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BRYAN. I yield the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York is recognized by the Chair.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, I desire to say, in response to the suggestion made by the Senator from Colorado [Mr. THOMAS], that, as I view the provisions of this bill, its passage will involve an additional expense of $57,000 a year. It provides for the designation of six vice admirals, three of whom shall receive $11,000 a year, or $33,000, and the other three of whom shall receive the salary of a rear admiral, $8,000 a year, making a total of $24,000, which added to $33,000 makes a gross amount of $57,000. I take it that it would be very difficult for the Senate of the United States to justify its rejection of this measure because of such an expenditure.

The objections that I have heard to-day with reference to this measure are not novel ones. As has been stated by the Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN], they were heard in Congress when an attempt was made to raise our legations abroad to embassies. That involved, as this legislation does, a recognition of rank for which the United States is not responsible. I can well understand that, as between individuals, a citizen of the Republic may have respect for precedence or he may disregard it; that is his privilege; but a matter such as this which is now before the Senate affects the pride of the Republic, if it does not really touch its honor, and as one Member of this body I should never cast a vote which would tend to lower the dignity of the United States in its relations with other powers simply to save $57,000.

Mr. WARREN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from New York yield to the Senator from Wyoming?

Mr. O'GORMAN. Just as soon as I conclude.

It makes a great difference with respect to the prestige of the United States whether its representatives, be they diplomatic officers or officers of the Navy or the Army, have to stand aside while representatives of other nations move on and take precedence over them. If I understand the sentiment of the American people, they would disapprove of opposition to legislation of this kind.

I think we owe it to our country, we owe it to our flag, we owe it to the prestige which all of us should be eager to maintain and sustain, to see that in foreign relations the representatives of the public service of the United States shall be at least on a par with the representatives of other nations.

Mr. WARREN. I wish to ask the Senator a question. I entirely agree with the Senator in the sentiments he has expressed, but if I understood his figures correctly, I can not subscribe to his computation.

Mr. O'GORMAN. The bill provides for the creation of a grade known as vice admiral. It will consist of six members. The salary of each will be $11,000 a year, only, however, while the vice admiral is on sea duty, or on shore duty beyond the continental limits of the United States. When not on such duty, the vice admiral will receive the pay of a rear admiral.

Mr. WARREN. Yes; that is true.

Mr. O'GORMAN. It is estimated that of the six vice admirals provided for by this bill, only three will be entitled to the larger compensation.

Mr. WARREN. There are six admirals, whatever their salaries may be, in addition to the present ones. So many of them as are doing sea duty, or shore duty in the noncontinental parts of the United States, will draw $11,000 each. The balance will draw $8,000 each. So you must multiply 6 by $8,000 to start with, and then add the difference. Is that the way the Senator arrives at it?

Mr. O'GORMAN. That would produce the result of $57,000.

Mr. WARREN. And, of course, in addition to that, there will be the allowances that accrue to the officers of higher rank.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Whatever the allowance may be.

Mr. WARREN. I simply wanted to be sure the figures given were correct.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I should go as far as any Member of the Senate in promoting economy in public expenditures; but when I have seen bill after bill go through, against my protest, providing large appropriations for post-office and Federal buildings in obscure corners of this continent, each one of them involving amounts largely in excess of this amount of $57,000, I marvel that there should be one Senator willing to deprive this country of the recognition it ought to receive in every part of the globe.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I agree most cordially with all the Senator from New York has said, and I certainly should not allow a question of $57,000 to stand in the way. I am perfectly ready to vote for the bill as it is. I agree with the Senator from New York that we ought to do this for the dignity of the Nation. It is not a question of the individual admiral or the individual ambassador; it is the credit of the representative of the United States that is involved; and though we all cheerfully recognize our own superiority in morals and manners to all the rest of the world, at the same time we do not want to appear, as a Nation, like either a boor or an outlaw.

I should think 18 officers of flag rank were enough, because I understand some of our admirals are not at the present moment employed. If the department feels that we need 6 more officers of flag rank, I shall be only too glad to support the Secretary and the department in granting them, and they can be added in the appropriation bill; but until that time it seems to me it would be well to amend this bill so as not to increase the total number of officers of flag rank. We can do that by adding another proviso:

Provided further, That the total number of vice admirals and rear admirals shall not exceed the number of rear admirals of both grades now provided by law.

Mr. WARREN. That is all right.

Mr. LODGE. That would reduce the expenditure, which to me does not seem very important in a matter of this sort.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Will the Senator repeat the last amendment?

Mr. LODGE (reading)—

Provided further, That the total number of vice admirals and rear admirals shall not exceed the number of rear admirals of both grades now provided by law.

That would mean simply an increase of $3,000 to each of the vice admirals on sea duty.

Mr. SMOOT. Or a total of $18,000 at the most.

Mr. LODGE. Or a total of $18,000 at the most.

Mr. BRYAN. Of course, ordinarily it would not be that much.

Mr. LODGE. No; ordinarily it would not be as much as that, but that would be the outside figure. In that way we get the rank—which I deem of great importance, for the reasons stated by the Senator from New York, upon which statement I can not possibly improve—and we leave the admirals properly graded. If we need to provide in the future additional men of flag rank, it can be very easily done.

I offer that amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, in connection with the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts I wish to suggest that lines 3 and 4 should be modified so as to meet the purpose of the amendment by striking out the words "is hereby increased so as to" and inserting the word "shall," so that the language will read:

That the active list of the line of the Navy shall include the grade of vice admiral.

Mr. LODGE. Yes.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Does the Senator mean to strike out——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Senators will please let the Chair ascertain the parliamentary status. Does the Chair understand that the Senator from Massachusetts offered an amendment?

Mr. LODGE. I did; yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Chair understand that the Senator from New York offers a substitute for that amendment, or that he offers an amendment to the amendment?

Mr. O'GORMAN. I offered, first, a suggestion to the Senator from Massachusetts, which he has accepted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Massachusetts——

Mr. LODGE. The Senator from New York offers an amendment to another part of the bill, in order to make the whole bill conform to the amendment which I offered.

Mr. WARREN. That is right.

Mr. LODGE. That is, in the third and fourth lines of the first page, he proposes to strike out the words "is hereby increased so as to," and to insert the word "shall."

Mr. O'GORMAN. That is correct.

Mr. LODGE. So that it will read:

That the active list of the line of the Navy shall include the grade of vice admiral.

The amendment offered by the Senator from New York is made necessary by my amendment and should be acted on first, and then it will make the whole bill harmonious.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will have to rule that the amendment tendered by the Senator from Massachusetts goes to one portion of the bill, and the amendment tendered by the Senator from New York to another portion, and therefore that the amendment first proposed will be first for the consideration of the Senate. The Chair recognizes the Senator from Colorado to address himself to the pending first amendment, namely, the amendment of the Senator from New York.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, will the Senator from Colorado yield to me for a moment?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield for an inquiry?

Mr. THOMAS. I yield.

Mr. BRISTOW. I wish to make a parliamentary inquiry. I understand that the pending amendment is the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], to strike out "$11,000," in line 9, page 2, and insert "$9,000."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair will confess ignorance on that subject, having come in in the meantime; but the Chair accepts the statement that such is the pending amendment. Does the Chair understand that the Senator from Kansas desires that first to be disposed of?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do; yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That being the pending question, the Senator from Colorado is recognized under that amendment.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. President, I shall support with a great deal of pleasure the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE]. My present purpose, however, is to reply to some of the suggestions made by the junior Senator from New York, which seem to reflect upon the position I have taken concerning this bill.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Colorado yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. THOMAS. I do.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I am sure the Senator from Colorado must have misunderstood the spirit in which I referred to him or his remarks a few moments since. What I said was not at all a criticism of his attitude, and did not imply any want of respect for his opinions. Few Senators have been more consistent than the Senator from Colorado in advocating economy in public expenditures.

Mr. THOMAS. I very cheerfully accept the statement of my friend the Senator from New York, and, of course, I acquit him of any intentional reflection upon either the motive or the substance of my statement; but I feel impelled, nevertheless, to say that this is not a matter of dollars and cents with me if the dignity of the United States or the necessities of its Navy are actually involved. To my mind, however, we can save this additional amount of money and at the same time do no injury whatever either to the dignity or to the prestige of this country.

The amount itself, relatively speaking, is, of course, insignificant. As an item in the ordinary appropriation bills which we enact every year it would hardly be noticed. It is a fact, however, as to small as well as to many large appropriations, that we are prone to support them, in many instances, upon the spur of the argument that to oppose them is to reflect upon the dignity and prestige of the Government of the United States. It has been one of the most prolific bases of extravagant appropriations by the Congress of the United States, perhaps the most prolific of all so-called arguments in support of them.

Referring to the criticism of the Senator from New York, I am aware that enormous appropriations, which perhaps were not so important as this, have been put through the Senate and the House, and that it looks somewhat inconsistent to haggle over a small matter in view of the record which we have made in that regard. I believe, however, that during the short time I have been here I have contributed in some degree toward a limitation of the expenditures of this Government to the actual requirements of the hour. To my mind, unless every reasonable limitation is enforced, not only as to large but as to small appropriations, we are soon going to reach a volume of expenditure which will subject us to the just criticism of being a four-billion-dollar Congress instead of a two-billion-dollar Congress, as has been the case for so long.

I was amazed at the statement made the other day by the senior Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST] to the effect that from the organization of this Government down to the present hour we have spent $700 upon aggressive and defensive wars, paying for wars that have been fought and preparing for wars that are anticipated, where we have spent $1 for other purposes of administration. In other words, the ratio of our expenditures upon military and naval affairs upon wars fought and wars anticipated is to expenditures for other purposes as 700 is to 1. Of course a great proportion of this vast outlay has been made up of small items like this one, which in the aggregate always amount to millions; they also become fixed charges, and provision has to be made for their payment, not only when they are initiated and enacted, but for all time thereafter.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a moment?

Mr. THOMAS. Certainly.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I simply wish to observe that it is perhaps unfortunately true, as the Senator from Colorado has stated, that a very large proportion of our Federal expenditures goes for the maintenance of the Army and Navy, but I know the Senator from Colorado will admit that in that respect our showing as a Nation is far more satisfactory than that of any other great nation on earth.

Mr. THOMAS. If the Senator has reflected upon the subject and has come to that conclusion, I should hardly dare to dispute it, because, generally speaking, I find his views to be sound and reliable.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I have only to suggest that surely Germany contributes a far larger proportion of her federal expense to her army and navy than we do.

Mr. THOMAS. She does.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Great Britain also does the same thing.

Mr. THOMAS. She does appropriate a larger proportion of her revenues; but, so far as the actual amount is concerned, I think the Senator will find that our appropriations equal, if they do not exceed, those of Germany, whereas our Army is scarcely one-tenth, perhaps not one-tenth, the strength of her's, while our navies are about of equal size. In other words, they have more to show for their expenditure than we do.

I do not know that it would be possible to put a stop to or even place a limitation upon the progressive expenditures for these purposes, because the nations of the earth are running a mad race in the effort to outstrip each other in the extent and character of their naval armament. We are building vessels which become obsolete before they are completed. We have today a fleet which, I am credibly informed, is short in men and officers to the extent of 3,000 officers of the line and 6,000 men.

Hence, in regard to this matter, I felt and I still feel that we can in all things keep in view and preserve every element of dignity, of prestige, and of honor to which this Nation is entitled and at the same time largely limit our expenditures, and whether the amount be great or whether the amount be small, it is our duty to do so. I therefore have been unable to perceive—and I am delighted that so many of the Senators seem to coincide with that view—any necessity whatever for adding to our roll of staff officers of the Navy an additional number of vice admirals.

In that connection, of course, the matter of increased expenditure becomes an item for consideration, and I am glad that what now seems to be a compromise has been reached whereby the opposing views of all Senators here may be reconciled upon the amendment which has been offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question still is upon the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK].

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I shall support the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska, which would fix the salary of these vice admirals at $9,000 instead of $11,000.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Florida?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. BRYAN. If the Senator will permit me, I will state that so far as the members of the Committee on Naval Affairs are concerned, after a consultation, we have agreed, so far as we may do so, to accept the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. BRISTOW. I have no objection to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts provided the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska is accepted.

Mr. BRYAN. Oh, no; I thought the Senator was referring to the number of officers of the grade of rear admiral in the Navy.

Mr. BRISTOW. I am opposed to creating another set of naval officers and fixing the salary at $11,000 a year and incidental perquisites, because I do not think it is necessary. Our Government has gotten along very well——

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I should like to ask the Senator how large an increase this makes?

Mr. BRISTOW. Six vice admirals, and the increase over the salary of the rear admirals would be $3,000 per annum, a rear admiral's salary being $8,000 and the salary of the vice admiral being fixed at $11,000.

Mr. O'GORMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. O'GORMAN. May I be permitted to say a word in answer to the inquiry of the Senator from New Jersey?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield for that purpose, he having the floor?

Mr. O'GORMAN. I will take but a moment.

Mr. BRISTOW. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. O'GORMAN. I desire to say to the Senator from New Jersey that in a few moments, according to my mode of calculation, I figured that the passage of the bill and the creation of six vice admirals would involve an expenditure of $57,000. I am still under that impression, but I may be in error, because I have been advised by the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. OVERMAN] that he was informed by the department that it would really involve an expenditure not to exceed $12,000 a year.

Mr. OVERMAN. I wish to say that I was not informed officially by the department, but I was talking with one of the chiefs of bureau about the bill, and he told me, not officially but in conversation, that the increased expenditure would be only about $12,000.

Mr. BRISTOW. That, of course, is all right, and I do not question the accuracy of the information, but I make the prediction that it will result in six naval officers drawing $11,000 a year perpetually and continually from the day that it is authorized by the law. There is an effort made on the part of the officers of the United States Government insidiously to work into law increases of salary at every session of Congress and almost every month that Congress is in session, and this is another effort along the same line.

I would like to have some Senator, if he has any leisure moments, to look up the number of salaried officers that have been added to the pay roll of the United States Government within the last 10 months.

We have been pursuing a system of the most astounding extravagance in the creation of additional offices of high rank and in a time of profound peace. I believe it is safe to assert that there has not been such a period of increase in the civil pay roll since the Government was established as during the period since the 4th of March last. Still we are pursuing a campaign country-wide seeking some means by which we can reduce the cost of living, and at the same time we are piling up taxes on the American people without limit and without the slightest hesitation. Here it is proposed to create another set of officers drawing salaries aggregating $11,000 a year, with perquisites double the amount that is earned by the average citizen of the United States, and you are taxing the people to pay the bills.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. KENYON. I inquire of the Senator or any other Senator as to what these perquisites are. I am just curious to know. Does the Senator from Kansas know what they are?

Mr. BRISTOW. I am not advised; but I have been told by members of the committee that they aggregate about $1,600 a year. I do not know how accurate it is, but that is the statement made to me by another Senator.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understand that they are not perquisites; they are allowances that are received by the admirals when on shore duty to take the place of what they receive at sea. Is not that true?

Mr. WARREN. They receive extra pay on sea duty.

Mr. WEEKS. There seems to be a good deal of confusion about this question. I should like to clear up this particular point at this time. The bill provides that vice admirals shall receive only $11,000 when they are at sea in command of three specific fleets. Therefore, there can be only three of them at sea at any one time, with an added salary of $3,000. So the total additional cost, if my colleague's amendment is accepted, under the most extreme circumstances would amount to only $9,000. An admiral at sea has no perquisites whatever. It is only when he is on shore that he has allowances, and they are an allowance for rooms, for heat, and for light. Therefore, as his salary goes back to $8,000 when he is on shore, this act does not add anything to his pay.

Mr. WARREN. May I ask the Senator from Massachusetts a question?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield further for the colloquy?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. WARREN. The officer at sea draws additional pay?

Mr. WEEKS. Under this bill?

Mr. WARREN. Under the law.

Mr. WEEKS. Under the law they have an increase in their pay when at sea of 10 per cent.

Mr. WARREN. That applies not only to sea duty but to shore duty.

Mr. WEEKS. To sea duty and outside the limits of the continental United States.

Mr. WARREN. Ten per cent is allowed extra when they are at sea, and when they are at home it is not allowed. That is the allowance the Senator speaks of.

Mr. WEEKS. Ten per cent will be allowed in that grade.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas will proceed.

Mr. BRISTOW. Whatever insidious efforts may be used to establish this rank in the Navy, it means in the end the creation of a rank, with the full expense it will possibly incur upon the Government. We usually start in these innovations in the most insidious manner possible; but ultimately the expense mounts up year by year, as I have indicated it will. There is not any doubt about that.

Some criticism of the expenses for the construction of Federal buildings throughout the country has been made, principally by the Senator from New York. I believe he declared it to be extravagant. I am willing to admit that there have been public buildings erected where, in my opinion, they were not needed or where there have been larger amounts expended in the construction of public buildings at places than were necessary; but I invite this to the attention of the Senate, and if any Senator will inquire he can verify the fact. The public buildings of the United States which are owned to-day by this Government will invoice for more money than the United States Government has paid for them. You can take the expenditures for public buildings since the Government was created down to the present time and take an inventory of the property of the United States Government in those buildings with its value at the present time, and I make the prediction that they are worth more to-day than they cost. I invite any doubter of that statement to inquire into the facts and he will find his doubts will be removed.

Mr. KENYON. I do doubt it, Mr. President.

Mr. BRISTOW. I know the Senator from Iowa doubts it, but that is because he has not looked into it.

Mr. KENYON. I know of public buildings that were amply good for all purposes of the Government with perhaps a little addition which might have been built that were absolutely torn down and the foundation had to be dynamited in order to use another appropriation that Congress had made. What I had in mind is where the money has been wasted in that manner.

Mr. BRISTOW. I will admit, as I said, that there have been buildings erected where they should not have been erected, in my opinion, and money has been expended in excess of what was necessary. But I repeat the statement. Take the property of the United States to-day in its public buildings as they are now and take an inventory of the value, and it will amount to more than the Government has expended for public buildings since it was created.

Mr. KENYON. I am not going to quarrel with that, because in cities like New York, Chicago, and Boston there has been a great addition by reason of the increased value of the land. What I had in mind was where a public building has been torn down as being inadequate and an expenditure made for the construction of a new building in order to help send men back to Congress. That has been done many times.

Mr. BRISTOW. I am not saying, and I do not pretend to say, that all the expenditures that have been made for public buildings have been justified, but I do say that the expenditures have been wiser and better than the expenditures that have been made for either branch of the military establishment. We will spend ten or fifteen or twenty million dollars for a battleship that in 10 years goes onto the scrap heap. We keep that up year by year under the pretense that they are great agencies of peace. The time has been when a man would put a gun in his pocket and walk around the streets or travel through the country and allege that he was taking the firearm with him to protect himself. It was just as much an agency of peace with him as a battleship is to a Government.

Mr. President, I think that there is creeping into the military establishment of the United States——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair asks for order.

Mr. BRISTOW. I know this is all a matter of amusement to those who have the responsibility of expending the public money and levying taxes on the people to secure the money to pay these bills, and then, after voting for these extravagances, they will go out and make great speeches about reducing the cost of living.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. ASHURST. It may be a matter of amusement to some Senators, but it is not a matter of amusement to me. The Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW], in my judgment, is entirely correct in his position on this question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas will proceed.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I have said about all I care to say. I intend to support the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska reducing the salary of these officials that it is proposed to create here and fixing it at $9,000 per year instead of $11,000.

Mr. WEEKS obtained the floor.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask the Senator from Massachusetts to yield to me for a moment. I ask the consent of the Senate to withdraw my amendment, for the reason that the amendment which was offered by the senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] and accepted by the Senator from Florida [Mr. BRYAN] rather obviates the objection which I had in mind that the bill would add six high-salaried officers to the Navy. The limitation which the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts has made removes, to my mind, the objection as far as that is concerned.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Nebraska asks leave to withdraw his amendment. Does the Chair hear objection?

Mr. BRISTOW. I shall object to its withdrawal; or, if it is withdrawn, I shall myself renew it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There being objection to the withdrawal, the amendment remains before the Senate. The Chair so rules.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts has the floor. Will he yield?

Mr. WEEKS. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. I would not ask the Senator to yield for the purpose for which I rose, because it is my purpose to make a motion, and would not impose on the Senator's courtesy to that extent.

Mr. WEEKS. Mr. President, I intended to discuss this question of expense. It has always been amusing to me, since I have been in Congress, to hear either body take an hour or two hours or three hours discussing a matter that involves a few thousand dollars when they frequently vote away millions of dollars without what seems to me sufficient consideration.

The total possible additional expense, as I have already stated, if the amendment offered by my colleague is accepted, will be $9,000 under this proposed act. Even as the bill was presented to the Senate the increased expense could be only $55,800, less the possible increases every five years which are paid to officers who serve five years or more in a grade; that is, there is a 10 per cent increase if an officer serves five years in a grade, and 20 per cent if he serves 10 years in a grade. So $55,800 would be reduced by such increases as might arise from this length of service. But under this proposed amendment the increase is $9,000, nothing more and nothing less, and it does not increase the emoluments that go to officers under any circumstances.

The main point to be considered in this legislation is whether it is desirable to revive the grade of vice admiral in the Navy. On that point I want unhesitatingly to assert that it is desirable from many viewpoints, but it is especially essential, Mr. President, because our fleets are frequently serving in cooperation with other fleets.

It is not any great burden to place on the rear admiral in command of our fleet to call first on the vice admiral of some other fleet or the rear admiral of some other fleet; but when we come to cooperate with landing parties, as may be frequently necessary in the service, so that our men are serving in cooperation with the men of other navies, then it is of vital importance, if we are furnishing the larger number of men, especially, that our commanding officers shall rank the officers of the other services.

The only possible objection I can see to the bill as amended by my colleague will be to the increase of $9,000 a year in the expense. I believe it is desirable from the standpoint of the service and the standpoint of the country, and therefore I hope the bill may be passed as amended. I am not entirely satisfied that we would not be justified in somewhat increasing the number of admirals. There are now, as I figure it, 24 admirals on the active list, but 6 of those, at least, are extra numbers, some of whom are men who do not go to sea because they were educated as engineers, and they were made extra numbers because they were engineers and had not served in the line, and therefore they could not be put in command of a fleet.

There are actually at sea with the fleets at this time eight rear admirals and there is one rear admiral in command of the reserve fleet, or nine admirals actually in command, so that unless we increase the number of admirals they are going to be at sea at least half the time.

Senators may say that that is not a hardship and that that is not an argument for an increase in the number of admirals. I am not quite sure that it is, and yet the argument that has been made that we have a large number of rear admirals who are idle, performing substantially no service, is entirely without justification. I think we might properly increase the number of admirals by three; that is, by the number of vice admirals who will be actually in command of the fleet; but as the amendment which has been offered has been accepted by the committee, I am content to leave the matter, as far as I am concerned, in that form.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now recurs upon the amendment of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK], to the withdrawal of which the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW] objected. Is the Senate ready for the question?

Mr. BRISTOW. I should like to have the yeas and nays on that amendment.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the Secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. DU PONT (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON]. He is not present, and I withhold my vote.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from South Dakota [Mr. CRAWFORD] to the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] and vote "nay."

Mr. MYERS (when his name was called). I have a pair with the junior Senator from Connecticut [Mr. MCLEAN]. As he did not respond, I withhold my vote.

Mr. NELSON (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. BACON], and I withhold my vote.

Mr. SAULSBURY (when his name was called). I am paired with the junior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT], and therefore withhold my vote.

Mr. SIMMONS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. CLAPP]. I am advised, however, that if he were present he would vote upon this amendment as I would vote. I will therefore vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. STERLING (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from South Carolina [Mr. TILLMAN]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] and vote "yea."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CLARKE], who is absent. I transfer that pair to the Senator from Ohio [Mr. BURTON] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. WEEKS (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] and vote "nay."

Mr. WILLIAMS (when his name was called). I wish to transfer the pair which I have with the senior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PENROSE] to the Senator from Maine [Mr. JOHNSON]. I vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. LODGE (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], but as he would vote on this question as I have voted, I will allow my vote to stand.

Mr. CLARK of Wyoming. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. STONE]. In the absence of that Senator, I withhold my vote.

Mr. REED. I wish to inquire if the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] has voted?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is informed that the Senator from Michigan has not voted.

Mr. REED. I have a pair with the Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] which applies, I think, under the circumstances. I therefore withhold my vote.

I desire to state that my colleague [Mr. STONE] is still detained from the Senate by illness.

Mr. RANSDELL. I desire to announce that the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. THORNTON] is absent on account of sickness.

Mr. KERN. I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. BRADLEY]. In his absence, I withhold my vote.

Mr. SHEPPARD. I wish to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague, the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON], and to state that he is paired with the Senator from Delaware [Mr. DU PONT]. This announcement may stand for the day.

I wish to further announce the absence, on official business, of the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. JAMES]. He has a general pair with the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WEEKS].

I wish also to announce the unavoidable absence of the junior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. VARDAMAN].

Mr. SMOOT. I desire to announce the necessary absence of the senior Senator from Michigan [Mr. SMITH] and the junior Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND].

Mr. DU PONT. I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] to the junior Senator from Maine [Mr. BURLEIGH] and vote. I vote "nay."

Mr. MARTINE of New Jersey. I desire to announce a pair existing between the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] and the Senator from Michigan [Mr. TOWNSEND]. The Senator from Arkansas is absent on official business.

I have also been requested to announce a pair existing between the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. GORE] and the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. CATRON].

Mr. SMITH of Maryland (after having voted in the negative). Since voting I realize that I have a pair with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM], but I understand that he would vote as I have voted, and therefore I will let my vote stand.

The result was announced—yeas 13, nays 40, as follows:

YEAS—13.

Ashurst	Kenyon	Smith, Ariz.	Works

So Mr. HITCHCOCK's amendment was rejected.

Mr. BRISTOW. On page 2, line 16, before the word "years," I move to strike out "sixty-two" and to insert "sixty-five."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair begs to request the Senator from Kansas that he withhold his amendment until the pending amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] shall be disposed of.

Mr. BRISTOW. The pending amendment was a simple announcement that the Senator from Massachusetts intended to move an amendment. Two amendments can not be pending at the same time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas is of the same judgment as is the Chair. Will the Senator from Massachusetts allow the Chair to inquire whether his amendment was offered?

Mr. LODGE. My amendment was offered and comes next in order for disposition.

Mr. BRISTOW. Let me inquire how it comes next in order for disposition when it was not pending at the time the amendment just disposed of was adopted, and then, immediately, I obtained the floor and offered an amendment?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I do not care to bicker over it. I think the amendment is in order, because the Chair recognized me when I offered it, not knowing of the previous amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair was of the same opinion that——

Mr. LODGE. But if the Senator from Kansas wants to offer his amendment now, he is perfectly welcome to do so.

Mr. BRISTOW. It is purely a question of parliamentary procedure, and my contention is that my amendment is now in order.

Mr. LODGE. It is not a question of parliamentary procedure that is worth contending for.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Massachusetts, as the Chair understands, is content to have the amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas first considered and then his own amendment to follow. The amendment proposed by the Senator from Kansas will be stated.

The SECRETARY. In section 3, page 2, line 16, before the word "years," it is proposed to strike out "sixty-two" and to insert "sixty-five," so that if so amended it will read:

SEC. 3. The vice admirals shall be placed on the retired list at the age of 65 years.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I can not see why it is necessary to retire the admirals or the vice admirals of the Navy, or the rear admirals, at the age of 62. It is simply for the purpose of getting them out and permitting others to come up and enjoy the high grade, so that, sooner or later, they will all be on the retired list in the highest grades that are available. In my opinion, it is becoming a burden to the American people to carry such a large number of retired Army and Navy officers. Army officers are retired at 64 years of age and naval officers at 62 years. I do not believe that there is occasion to retire these officers at so early an age as the law provides. I want them to remain, in these high grades at least, until they are 65 years old.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, one word on the amendment. The age of 62 years is the age established by law, and it has been for many years the age for the retirement of naval officers. In the Army an officer may retire at 62, and must retire at 64 years of age. That age was adopted long ago, on the general proposition that, though there might be here and there a man who would be fit for the highest commands at sea at the age of 62 years, the chances were that it would not be so, and that it was the part of wisdom to have the officers in command of the great fleets of the Nation less than 62 years of age. Whether or not that proposition is correct—and I am inclined to think it is—it does not seem to me that it is a question which ought to be settled in a bill of this character, which merely deals with a question connected with one grade. The age of retirement affects the entire service of the Navy and of the Army; and I think it is too large a question to be dealt with at this time in this bill.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, we are creating a new grade. When we create a new grade, there is no reason why we should not fix the age at which the officers of that grade shall retire. It can be done in this bill; and in this bill is the place to do it, if we believe that it is proper legislation. I do not believe that we ought to load the retired list of the military establishment with these high-grade officers now. As I have said, it is becoming a burden to the American people; it is mounting up until it amounts to millions of dollars.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas proposes to raise by three years the age limit at which officers of the Navy shall be forced to retire. Upon that amendment I want to be very briefly heard. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], who opposes any change, has stated, in his usual clear and lucid manner, his reasons for antagonizing the amendment. The reasons given are those which were advanced when the retirement law was enacted, namely, that only young men are capable of managing fleets and armies. The public for many years has listened with astonishing patience to that dictum. I have never believed it was a good-faith statement. I believe now that the real reason for fixing an early age for retirement was to make room for promotions. We have by this law established an endless chain, every link of which brings its burden of taxation, to be borne by the people. We graduate as many young officers as we can; we promote them as rapidly as possible; we force them out of the service by law. When we get rid of them it is upon the basis of a retirement at large pay. Unable to restrain our impatience, we establish plucking boards to make vacancies. When neither death, disease, nor time make vacancies fast enough, the plucking board gets busy and the retirements and promotions go gaily on. What wonder that the expense of the Army and Navy mounts from year to year and continues to mount. Every bill that is brought in adds a little to the sum total. No bill takes off anything. Once create a position and it enjoys eternal life; once increase a salary and it remains stationary until it is again raised. The old illustration of the snowball that grows constantly as it is rolled over applies, with this difference: The snowball will melt beneath the rays of the spring sun, but the salary list possesses the quality of perpetual growth.

Mr. President, there may have been a time in the history of the Navy and Army when so many officers had passed the period of activity that it was necessary to do something to temporarily relieve the situation. In my opinion that condition no longer obtains. To my mind it is, under any circumstances, utterly ridiculous to lay down the hard-and-fast rule that the officers of the Army and Navy shall be retired at 62 and 64 years willy-nilly. About one-third of the membership of this body far exceeds those ages. In my judgment no man ought to be retired from the Army or the Navy merely and only because he has arrived at some certain age. An officer should be retired only when a board honestly passing upon his case can say that by reason of the infirmities of nature he has passed the point of efficiency.

I do not know where this system of pensioning by "retirement" is going to end. We appoint judges of courts, and we retire many of them when their brains teem with knowledge and their opinions, ripened by experience, are of the greatest value. We make Army officers, and we retire them in the full flood and bloom of their days of usefulness. We create officers of the Navy, we educate them at enormous expense, and I do not begrudge that expense, but having thus educated them we proceed to retire them when years of mental activity and physical power are stretching before them. I maintain that all this is only a part of that philosophy which seems to be universally accepted by those who work for the Government, viz, that the fundamental maxim to be observed is "the greatest amount of money for the least possible labor."

If these men were engaged in any line of business activity, they would not retire at the age of 62 or of 64; they would continue their exertions for many years. What man in private life is permitted to retire on full pay or half pay at a fixed age limit? In private life men do not think of throwing away the ripest and best years of their lives. Why not apply the rule to Senators and retire them, say, at the age of 60 at full pay? One reason is that the people get a chance to retire Senators, and do retire them when they cease to be of any use, and that rule ought to be universal. Men ought to be retired when they cease to be of value. If you retire the Army and Navy officers when no longer able to serve efficiently, no one will complain about the pay. My opinion is that we are carrying this system to an extreme, which is becoming not only ridiculous but dangerous.

The proposition that is now being forced upon the attention of the country is that we ought to retire the civil employees of the Government upon half pay or some other kind of pay. These men who come here to Washington soliciting positions, desiring them because they were better positions than they could obtain at home, who hold on to them with a grimness and determination that is admirable, at least for its tenacity and force, now claim that because the Government of the United States has furnished them snug berths for many years, it should therefore pension them for life.

I know how unpopular it is to protest against giving away the public money, but, Mr. President, I say to the Senate and to the country that if we ever establish a civil pension list in this country it will continue to grow, until ultimately it will be a burden equivalent to the war pensions of the land. If the people who have desired and obtained positions under the Government of the United States, who have clung to them with tenacity and pertinacity, were working for private individuals, they would expect to lay by before old age came on enough to take care of themselves. Once, however, they secure a place under the Federal Government they insist the job is theirs as long as they can work, after which they must be carried on the roll as pensioners. The civil pension is the next thing that will be forced upon Congress. When it is, you will find plaintive appeals made on behalf of these governmental employees; and once you establish the system, I make you this prediction, that those who now are willing to make affidavit that they are sound in limb, wind, and eyesight will produce equally conclusive evidence that they are utterly unable to do an hour's work. They will stand in line to sign the pension rolls, and the people's money, raised by taxation of the people, will be devoured as the lice devoured Egypt.

I believe an individual working for the United States Government in the civil service or in the Army or Navy ought to be treated fairly. He ought to receive a just compensation, but he ought to have no special privileges. He has no right to a pension. He has no right to be insured and looked after by the Government—not a whit more than a person working for a private citizen. I except, of course, soldiers and sailors who are injured in the line of duty.

Accordingly, I am in favor of the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, because it is a step in the right direction. I hope to see the day when we will retire no man on account of his age, but shall retire him only because of inability to longer serve efficiently. So far as my poor voice goes, I am protesting now, and will continue to protest, against this modern heresy of taking every man who works awhile for the Government of the United States in the civil service out of the class of earners and making him the beneficiary of a pension, to be voted to him out of the taxes of the people. The people who draw no pensions must bear all their own burdens and, in addition, the burdens of pensions paid to others.

Who pensions the laborer in his old age? Who retires the mechanic at half pay? Who provides for the farmer after he has passed his sixtieth milestone? Who grants public largess to the vast multitude who have never held a public berth and who have never even seen Washington? Who looks after those who, not being so fortunate as to be educated at the public expense in a military school, educated themselves or went without? Who provides all these with years of slippered indolence? Who bring them pipe and rocker and bids them sit in the sunshine? Who says to them, "Rest you here and feed at the public crib until death do you part"? These have no advocates in the Capitol to insistently proclaim their woes or push their pension bills. They never tugged the public pap, and hence must make shift of necessity. In the winter of their lives they must bear their own burdens and also bear the weight of pensions laid for the benefit of those who hold the jobs they never could hope to obtain.

If we are going to pension everybody and retire everybody who is in the governmental service, let us extend the beneficent system to all of those people who never yet were successful in getting a Government job. I am in favor of the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, two years ago I asked the Secretary of the Navy for a list of the retired officers of the Navy with their various ranks, and on March 18, 1912, a report was made. I suppose the number of officers on the retired list is certainly no less now than it was then, and probably it is greater now. This was the summary: "Number of rear admirals on the retired list, 210."

Mr. REED. How many on the active list?

Mr. BRISTOW. I have that somewhere and will find it in a moment.

Mr. WARREN. There are 18 on the active list.

Mr. BRISTOW. Eighteen, I am told.

Mr. REED. I want to ask the Senator——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WORKS in the chair). Does the Senator from Kansas yield to the Senator from Missouri?

Mr. BRISTOW. I do.

Mr. REED. How long does the Senator think a business could be run that had 18 active men and 210 retired men, all drawing salaries?

Mr. BRISTOW. I think that needs no answer; it answers itself.

In addition to the 210 rear admirals, there were on the retired list 49 commodores, 102 captains, 100 commanders, 63 lieutenant commanders, 79 lieutenants, 61 lieutenants (junior grade), 110 ensigns, and 123 warrant officers. The expense of maintaining the retired list of the officers of the Navy for that year was $2,898,901. That is growing year by year; and I think it is time we were putting a stop to the mounting up of this number of retired officers, that is a burden upon the American people, and, as the Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] has said, it is increasing the taxes year by year to keep it up, and the taxes are being paid by men and women who do not earn one-third of the pension which these retired officers are receiving in many instances.

Mr. REED. Mr. President, one remark of the Senator from Kansas recalled to my mind a specific case, that of Capt. Chambers, of the Navy. This man, who had charge of the aerial service and had perfected many improvements in the hydroaeroplane, who invented the device by which the hydroaeroplane could be put in flight from the deck of a vessel, a man of the keenest intellect, in the very perfection of his powers, capable, so far as appearance went, of 20 years more of labor, who did not desire to be retired, was arbitrarily taken out of the service. At the time he was probably in better physical vigor than any man in this Chamber. This retirement system is in vogue to make more officers and not for the purpose of improving the service. I say that it has risen to the point of a scandal, and I intend on some other occasion to have something more to say about it. At the present time I am in favor of adopting the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW].

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, just a word. I am rather inclined to support the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas, but I do not know what effect it might have upon the laws we have already passed controlling our Navy. Therefore I would say to the Senator that I would very much prefer that this whole question should be brought before Congress and be dealt with in a way that will not only reach this question of retired officers, but other questions that are just as vitally important.

Mr. BRISTOW. Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senator from Utah that if we wait until that time we will never get anything done. I have had this matter before the Senate upon several occasions during the last five years, and the best way is to start now. The amendment can not affect anybody except the new officers we are now creating, and we certainly can fix a rule, so far as they are concerned, that will not affect anybody except these men, and then we will see if we can not bring up the retired list, as a whole, to the standard we are setting here in the creation of these new places.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas [Mr. BRISTOW].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. President, in view of the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Kansas, I suggest a further amendment to strike out the first proviso and to strike out the word "further" in the second proviso, because that provision will be useless with the adoption of the amendment of the Senator from Kansas.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, lines 16, 17, and 18, it is proposed to strike out "Provided, That the President may continue them on the active list until the age of 65 years"; and in line 18, after the word "Provided," to strike out the word "further."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment proposed by the Senator from Florida.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question now is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 9, after the words "vice admiral," it is proposed to insert:

Provided further, That the total number of vice admirals and rear admirals shall not exceed the number of rear admirals of both grades now provided by law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. SMOOT. Mr. President, I should like the Secretary to again state the amendment. I did not quite catch it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The Secretary again stated the amendment.

Mr. SMOOT. In other words, the amendment has reference to the personnel act of March 3, 1899, in which it is provided that there shall be 18 rear admirals; and the amendment provides that whenever a vice admiral is appointed the number of rear admirals shall be reduced.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair understands that to be the effect of it. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LODGE. Now, Mr. President, the amendment of the Senator from New York [Mr. O'GORMAN] is necessary to make the bill conform to the amendment just adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is upon agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from New York, which will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 1, line 3, after the word "Navy," it is proposed to strike out the words "is hereby increased so as to" and in lieu of those words to insert the word "shall," so that if amended it will read:

That the active list of the line of the Navy shall include the grade of vice admiral—

And so forth.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended, and the amendments were concurred in.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

LOUISVILLE & NASHVILLE RAILROAD.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, on behalf of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I report back favorably, with amendments, Senate resolution 254.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the resolution. It is a matter of great urgency, as will be shown by certain correspondence with the Interstate Commerce Commission, which I am going to send to the desk and ask to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution? The Chair hears none.

The Senate, by unanimous consent, proceeded to consider the resolution, as follows:

Whereas under Senate resolution 153 the Interstate Commerce Commission was instructed and directed to investigate and report certain facts regarding the methods and practices of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, and the ownership of certain subsidiary railroad companies by the Louisville & Nashville Railroad; and

Whereas the investigation instituted by the Interstate Commerce Commission pursuant to said resolution has in some of its phases been suspended on account of the refusal of H. L. Stone, general counsel of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, to permit the examiners, acting under the authority of the Interstate Commerce Commission, to have access to certain files and records, as has been communicated to the Senate by Hon. E. E. Clark, chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission: Therefore be it

Resolved, That a special committee, consisting of five Senators, be, and the same is hereby, created for the purpose of assisting the Interstate Commerce Commission in said investigation, and that said committee be, and hereby is, authorized to subpœna and examine witnesses, to hear testimony, require the production of papers, documents, and records that may be pertinent to the investigation; and to this end the said committee be, and is hereby, authorized to employ such legal and clerical assistance as may be necessary.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. The resolution is merely reported favorably with amendments. No formal report has been written.

Mr. SMOOT. I will ask the Senator whether this resolution was referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate?

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. Yes; and it is reported by it favorably, with amendments.

Mr. SMOOT. And this is the report from that committee?

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. This is the report from that committee.

Mr. SMOOT. When was the resolution submitted?

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I think on the 23d of January.

Mr. SMOOT. I will say to the Senator from Tennessee that I thought the resolution was just introduced by him, and that is the reason why I made the inquiry.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. No; it was submitted on the 23d of January.

Mr. WILLIAMS. It has been pending in the committee for some time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendments proposed by the committee will be stated.

The SECRETARY. On page 2, line 1, after the word "witnesses," it is proposed to insert the words "to administer oaths."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. In line 5, after the word "legal," it is proposed to insert the words "assistance at a compensation of not to exceed $50 per day and expenses, and in the aggregate of not exceeding the sum of $3,000."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. Before the word "clerical," in line 5, it is proposed to insert the word "such."

The amendment was agreed to.

The SECRETARY. At the end of the resolution it is proposed to insert: "such compensation, assistance, and expense to be paid out of the contingent expenses of the Senate."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I offer an amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert after the word "Senators," in line 2, page 1, the words "to be appointed by the Vice President," so that it will read, if amended:

That a special committee, consisting of five Senators, to be appointed by the Vice President.

And so forth.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to have the resolution read as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

Resolved, That a special committee, consisting of five Senators, to be appointed by the Vice President, be, and the same is hereby, created for the purpose of assisting the Interstate Commerce Commission in said investigation, and that said committee be, and hereby is, authorized to subpœna and examine witnesses, to administer oaths, to hear testimony, require the production of papers, documents, and records that may be pertinent to the investigation, and to this end the said committee be, and is hereby, authorized to employ such legal assistance at a compensation of not to exceed $50 per day and expenses, and in the aggregate of not exceeding the sum of $3,000, and such clerical assistance as may be necessary, such compensation, assistance, and expense to be paid out of the contingent expenses of the Senate.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN. Mr. President, it seems to me it is a little bit unusual for a committee to be appointed from the Senate to assist an organized body in an investigation which falls clearly and entirely within the jurisdiction of that body. I should like to have some explanation from the Senator as to the necessity of the appointment of a senatorial committee to assist the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I will say to the Senator from Oregon that this resolution was introduced as the result of correspondence with the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission and grows out of the fact that the Louisville & Nashville Railroad is refusing to give access to certain records which the Interstate Commerce Commission believes to be necessary for it to make a report to the Senate in accordance with Senate resolution 153.

A very unusual condition exists. The Louisville & Nashville Railroad is about the last of the large railroad systems to adhere to the old policy of "the public be damned." The Louisville & Nashville Railroad is clearly out of step in the march of progress. It is not attempting to meet the conditions that exist to-day by becoming law-abiding, but is continuing to defy the law and to challenge its power. Only recently it has denied the duly appointed examiners of the Interstate Commerce Commission access to certain files which the Interstate Commerce Commission believed necessary to examine in order that the investigation ordered by the Senate might be completed.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I should like to ask the Senator from Tennessee whether the Interstate Commerce Commission has not by law the power to require access to those files?

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. We believe, and the Interstate Commerce Commission evidently believes, that it has that power; and it has instituted a mandamus proceeding looking toward that end.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then why not leave to the processes of the law the natural operations of the Interstate Commerce Commission under its conceded powers?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Tennessee yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I do.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I suggest that the Senator from Tennessee permit to be read the letter from Mr. Clark to me, together with the memorandum thereto attached signed by Commissioner Meyer.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. Yes; I ask that they may be read, and they will answer the question of the Senator from Nebraska.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In the absence of objection, the matter referred to will be read.

Mr. NEWLANDS. Before that statement is read, as I am called away from the Senate, I should like to make a statement on behalf of the Interstate Commerce Committee.

That committee is now in session with reference to important trust legislation. This resolution was passed, calling upon the Interstate Commerce Commission to make this investigation. The commission has been obstructed in the investigation, and it is thought that the most expeditious way of getting at the facts the commission seeks is to have the cooperation of a committee of the Senate which, under its general powers, can pursue the inquiry and can punish for contempt.

The usual course would be to refer this matter to the Interstate Commerce Committee. It has been very properly referred to the Committee on Contingent Expenses, for it would have to go there also. I have consulted the members of the Interstate Commerce Committee, and while they feel that in due course all these resolutions should go to that committee for consideration, they feel that this is a matter of exigency. Therefore the committee does not demand the reference to it of this matter.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President, I did not understand the Senator from Nevada to say that he had consulted all the members of the Interstate Commerce Committee.

Mr. NEWLANDS. No; I have not been able to consult all of them. The matter came up very suddenly. I should have been glad to present it to the committee at its session this morning if I had known it was coming up.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. If the Senator will wait a moment, I think it would be well to have the memorandum read.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Just one word, because this is relevant to what has just been said. It is in explanation of the fact that it is proposed to create a special committee.

In that connection I wish to say that as a rule I am very much opposed to the creation of special committees to make inquiries and investigations. Under ordinary circumstances the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate would have amended the resolution by substituting the Interstate Commerce Committee for the special committee. When, however, we got to thinking about the fact that at this time the Interstate Commerce Committee is occupied, and very soon it will be overwhelmingly occupied, with very important work in connection with antitrust legislation and other things, we really did not think it would have the time to attend to the work properly and expeditiously. Therefore we reported out that part of the resolution without amendment, as it appears.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I do not quite understand the provisions of the resolution, and therefore I will ask the Senator from Tennessee or the Senator from Mississippi, if he has charge of the resolution, whether it contemplates having the committee of Senators proceed to make this investigation in their own way, or as mapped out from time to time by the Interstate Commerce Commission?

Mr. WILLIAMS. In their own way.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. And does it contemplate that the Interstate Commerce Commission shall be discharged from further investigation under the prior resolution of the Senate?

Mr. WILLIAMS. It does not. The Interstate Commerce Commission is still, through the Department of Justice, following up the mandamus which has been granted to force the production of these papers.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. If the Senator from Connecticut will permit this memorandum to be read, I think he will understand it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. With great pleasure. I wanted some information on the subject.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The matter called for will be read.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I hope it will.

The Secretary read as follows:

INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION,
Washington, February 11, 1914.

Hon. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Further replying to your favor of the 31st ultimo, relative to Senate resolution 254, I inclose you copy of a memorandum to the commission from Commissioner Meyer, who has immediate charge of the investigation into the affairs of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co.

The memorandum indicates clearly the general situation, and the commission feels that the investigation can be facilitated and expedited if, in some such way as is proposed in the resolution above referred to, the Senate should exercise its power to secure information which apparently we will be unable to secure except as a result of the mandamus suit referred to in the memorandum.

Yours, truly, E. E. CLARK, Chairman.

MEMORANDUM TO THE COMMISSION.

FEBRUARY 10, 1914.

In order that the commission might fully respond to Senate resolution No. 153, several of our examiners were sent to Louisville, Ky., to inspect and examine certain accounts, records, and memoranda kept by the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co.

Section 12 of the resolution directs the commission to secure information concerning the amounts of money subscribed, expended, or contributed for "maintaining political or legislative agents, or contributions to political campaigns, and for creating sentiment in favor of any of the plans of any of said railroads." Section 13 calls for data concerning pass issues.

Information from our examiners has been to the effect that Wible L. Mapother, first vice president of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co., was the official under whose direction any of the subscriptions, expenditures, or contributions contemplated by section 12 of the resolution would be made, and that data in regard thereto, especially records of subscriptions and not yet paid, would most probably be found in Mr. Mapother's files. On account of the peculiar manner in which requests for passes have been recorded by this company, I am advised that the same office would have to be consulted to secure the information desired under section 13 of the resolution. Our examiners have reported that Mr. Mapother refused to permit an inspection of the files under his charge before they were examined either by himself or his chief clerk, claiming that they might contain private or privileged communications which he wished to remove before the examiners made their inspection.

Following this action on the part of Mr. Mapother, our examiners were instructed to keep a close watch on the files under his jurisdiction to ascertain, if possible, to what extent they were being altered. It soon developed, according to their report, that entire files were being removed and substantial portions of other files extracted. Two of the examiners endeavored to remain in the file room during the course of the revision, apparent secretion, and destruction of those records when Mr. Mapother entered and with an oath forcibly ejected each of our representatives. I am advised that this official of the principal railroad company against which the Senate resolution is directed referred to our examination as "police surveillance," denounced our examiners as "spies," and in a threatening manner warning our representatives that they would have to "lick" him before they could obtain his files. He refused access to them. He also denied them access after regular working hours to the building containing these files and boasted that his company had hitherto refused to furnish files to the commission without serious consequences, saying, "We refused files to you people before and are not in jail yet."

The solicitor for the commission has proceeded to Louisville, and in cooperation with the Department of Justice instituted a mandamus proceeding in the courts. Realizing the time that must elapse before a final judicial decision can be rendered and the futility of attempting a complete collection of the data called for by the resolution until these memoranda and records can be examined intact, or as nearly so as is now possible, I wish to suggest the advisability of calling this matter to the attention of the Senate, which body may be able to adopt some more expeditious method of procuring the necessary files and of obviating the obstruction encountered by the commission's representatives.

(Signed) MEYER, Commissioner.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. There is attached thereto a telegram from Mr. Mapother, vice president of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad. From reading the telegram, I think he confesses all and avoids very little of the accusations made by Commissioner Meyer; but in fairness to him I ask to have the telegram printed in the RECORD.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Let us have it read now.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. Very well; I ask that it may be read now.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HITCHCOCK in the chair). The Secretary will read the telegram.

The Secretary read as follows:

LOUISVILLE, KY., February 12, 1914.

Hon. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,
Chairman of Committee to Audit and Control Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

The memorial of the Interstate Commerce Commission to the Senate concerning the examination of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co., based as the memorial is on reports to the commission by its examiners, does the Louisville & Nashville Railroad Co. and me personally a very great injustice.

The statement that when I ejected two of the examiners I did so with an oath is absolutely false. The ejection was from a file room and not from my office, and was not until the conduct of the examiners had become such that no self-respecting man could submit to it any longer. I did denounce their methods as "Russian-spy tactics," and such they were; and as I am a free-born American and not a Russian serf, I demanded that I be treated as a gentleman.

I have endeavored in every reasonable way to facilitate the work of the examiners, having turned over to them the directors' room for their exclusive use, and they have examined hundreds of the files of my office during the six weeks of their presence here, but they have, however, demanded the right to take possession of all the files of my office of every character, whereas I was advised that communications between the company's representatives and its attorneys were by the law privileged, these having been the subject of the correspondence between General Counsel Stone and the commission, and I insisted upon the right to see the files they desired to examine, so as to see if they contained any such communications.

As to files relating to passes, will say that every file in every department bearing upon this subject has been promptly turned over to them as requested, until yesterday, when I informed them that as the matter was now in court, each side should stand upon its rights and they could only examine files relating to passes since January 1, 1911, the date fixed by the thirteenth paragraph of the Senate resolution. The statement that I boasted that we had refused files before and were not jailed yet is wholly untrue. I never said this nor anything like it. The only thing I said on any kindred subject was that, in referring to the general counsel's refusal to turn over the law department's files, I said this had been submitted to the Senate and nothing further had been done, meaning simply that no disposition had been made of the matter.

The examiners attempted, practically, to take possession of my office and watch every movement of myself and clerks. To this I refused to submit, saying that I did not consider myself a crook, and had never permitted a guard to stand over me while I worked, and I did add that they would have to "lick" me before they could stand over my desk and supervise my work; and I believe you would have done the same.

The press report announces that the effect of this memorial has been to induce you to decide upon bringing at once out of the committee the resolution providing for the appointment of a Senate committee to aid the commission in this investigation. I respectfully ask that you will not do, on account of the ex parte and unfair report of these examiners, what you would not otherwise have done, as you know this matter is now in court where the extent of the powers of the commission in reference to a wholesale search and seizure of a citizen's private papers will be determined. I trust you and your committee may see your way clear to allow the matter to be settled there.

W. L. MAPOTHER,
First Vice President L. & N. R. R. Co.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. Mr. President, Mr. Mapother's position is merely that he will submit to the Interstate Commerce Commission such files as he, and not the commission, deems relevant and pertinent to the investigation.

There is nothing surprising in this attitude of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad. It is typical of the policy of that company and its subsidiary companies. One of its subsidiary companies, the Nashville, Chattanooga & St. Louis Railroad Co., began after the passage of this resolution to destroy and burn some of its records. I hold in my hand a report by one of the examiners of the Interstate Commerce Commission, showing that he has been at Nashville, at the main office of this company, and has witnessed there the burning of certain records dating back as far as 1865. While it was the insistence of the railroad company that they were burning records only up to 1906, the examiner states that he has found certain records among those being burned that should not properly have been destroyed; that the company had a force of 10 men employed in burning the records, and that it was admitted that these men were not expert accountants, and therefore were not competent to discriminate as between the records which under the law they are entitled to burn and those which they are not entitled to burn.

It is our belief that if this committee is raised by this resolution it can stop some of the lawlessness which is now being committed, and can give material assistance to the Interstate Commerce Commission in making an accurate report to the Senate at an early date of the matters upon which it has been requested to report.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I am not very familiar with the proceedings which have already been had in this matter, and I should like a little information on the subject.

As I understand, the Interstate Commerce Commission were directed by a resolution of the Senate to make an inquiry, and they were proceeding through their agents to make it, and in the course of the proceedings some agent of this railroad company refused to produce certain papers or books. Am I correct thus far?

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. That is true.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. As I understand, under the interstate commerce act when a case of that kind arises, assuming the power of the Interstate Commerce Commission to engage in the inquiry at all, the remedy is to apply to a court and proceed against the contumacious witness, or the witness who refuses to produce papers. Have any proceedings of that kind been instituted?

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. Proceedings of that character have been instituted by the Interstate Commerce Commission through the Department of Justice. A petition for mandamus has been filed requiring the officials of the railroad to produce these records and files; but it is evidently the belief of the Interstate Commerce Commission, as indicated by the correspondence between the commission and Senator WILLIAMS, and of those of us who have investigated the question, that if a Senate committee can proceed along the same lines of investigation the desired facts may be obtained more expeditiously, and thus without waiting for three or four years to elapse, which will be necessary to try the constitutional questions raised in that lawsuit, access to these files may be obtained while they are almost, if not entirely, intact.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. What interests me in the matter is to determine what power a Senate committee would have in such a matter.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. It would have the power to subpœna witnesses and order the production of these papers and files, and if the railroad wrongfully or illegally refused, it could punish for contempt.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does the Senator think a committee of this body would have the power to summon witnesses in a case pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission, and, if the witnesses refused to appear, to punish those witnesses for contempt?

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. Such is not this situation; but in this matter I think the committee could make a report to the Senate and the Senate could punish for contempt.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Would not that depend upon what was the purpose of the Senate inquiry?

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. Of course if it were on matters that were not relevant, that would be true; but as a practical matter I do not believe even the Louisville & Nashville Railroad would show the same contempt for this body that it has apparently expressed for the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The inquiry which is instituted by the Interstate Commerce Commission, I assume, is for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not there has been a violation of law on the part of this railroad company. Is that correct? It is to ascertain whether passes have been issued in violation of law, and so on. That, of course, would be clearly within their jurisdiction; but I can not understand upon what theory it would be a matter within the jurisdiction of the Senate.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I take it the Senate can appoint a committee to investigate and to get possession of certain facts on any subject upon which it is competent for us to legislate. It is upon that theory that all Senate investigations are made.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If a citizen or a corporation were charged with a crime and the matter was being investigated by a United States district attorney or by the Attorney General or by a grand jury, does the Senator think that the Senate could step in and compel the attendance of witnesses to investigate that matter?

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I think the Senator ought to reverse that proposition. Does the Senator think an investigation of the Senate could be halted because certain court proceedings grew out of it?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It would depend upon what——

Mr. LEA of Tennessse. If the Senator will pardon me, the Senate started this investigation, and the agency it originally chose was the Interstate Commerce Commission instead of one of its committees. It is believed that if the Senate, too, investigated the question that that investigation could be pursued more expeditiously, at least, by the action of both the commission and a committee.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am not at all certain that the Senate or both Houses of Congress have any power to investigate the subject as to whether or not a law of Congress has been violated. That question is one which belongs peculiarly to the executive department. Of course the Senate and the House have the power to investigate a question, to ascertain facts to enable it to determine whether or not legislation shall be passed, but merely to investigate to determine whether or not a crime has been committed it seems to me would not be within the competency of the Senate at all.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. In the simple question of an investigation as to whether certain facts are true or false, it may follow that if the alleged facts are true, then crimes may have been committed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then the statute already passed by Congress has been violated.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. And the further question whether legislation that has already been enacted is effective or whether additional and supplementary legislation is necessary.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If they ascertain that the statute has already been violated, of course the only thing then remaining to do is to institute a prosecution under the statute.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. That is true if the statute is effective.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. With that matter of course Congress would have something to do. Was that the purpose of the original resolution?

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. That was a part of the resolution wanted. The part of the investigation that has been halted was whether certain facts exist, whether as a question of fact certain abuses had been committed.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. May I ask to have the resolution read. I was not in the Senate when it was read.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Before that is done I wish to say that as chairman of the committee I sent this resolution to the Interstate Commerce Commission and asked their advice upon its expediency, feasibility, and all that, and added that I especially would like to know whether there was any power which could be exercised by the Senate which they could not themselves exercise under the authority already conferred upon them by law. In response to that letter, without directly answering the last question, they say they think that the ends of justice can be aided and the course of this investigation can be expedited by the passage of the resolution.

I simply wished to make that statement before the Senate got away from the consideration of the immediate point. When they made that statement to the committee the committee felt disposed to follow their advice, especially as there was evidence set out in the memorandum and in some other papers tending at any rate to show that this railroad is at present engaged in the business of destroying and concealing its records, and perhaps the very records that are wanted in this case. This is a matter to secure certain documents and papers rather than to punish for certain crimes.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, if I heard correctly the memorandum submitted by the member of the Interstate Commerce Commission, it contained a statement, or in the telegram of the vice president of the road there was a statement, that the ground upon which the officials of the road have declined to turn over certain papers or books in their custody to the agent of the commission was that they claim that those books or papers contain privileged communications; that they were at least communications from the railroad officials to their attorneys; and they claimed that they were privileged, confidential communications to the attorneys; that such communications that a client makes to his attorney are privileged and can not be compelled to be testified to in certain cases.

A proceeding has been brought by the Attorney General of the United States in a circuit court of the United States to determine whether the documents can be lawfully compelled to be produced or not. The commission or somebody else not being willing to wait for the lawful process of the courts to take place, proposes to raise a special committee of the United States Senate to subpœna witnesses; and as the Senator from Tennessee says, if they decline to answer the very questions that are now undetermined in court by due process of law they are to be committed for contempt of the Senate.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. If the Senator will pardon me——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I do.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. We think that the attitude of the Louisville & Nashville Railroad upon this matter in attempting to force a resort to the court is plainly a subterfuge. The principle involved, I think, has been decided by the Supreme Court of the United States, and it is our belief, from the information before us, that the refusal to give access to certain files, forcing resort to the court, is not in good faith but for delay; that records have been and are being destroyed for the purpose of preventing the truth from being known. The issue that we present this afternoon by this resolution is whether we are going to get at the truth and obtain the facts that we want to lay before the Senate or whether we are to be hampered in that effort.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, I am discussing this question without any opinion upon the guilt or innocence of the railroad company, without any opinion as to whether the Interstate Commerce Commission has acted lawfully or unlawfully, and without any opinion as to whether they have exhausted the authority conferred upon them by the interstate commerce act. I do not propose to prejudge this case. These gentlemen may be villains; and, if so, I hope they will be convicted of their crimes and punished, but I decline to presume in advance that they are villains or that they are now convicted, or that they are not entitled to their rights under the Constitution and the laws of this country.

When Congress has conferred on the Interstate Commerce Commission the authority to meet this very condition, to provide for the compulsory production of all the testimony which the commission may think to be relevant to a case, and if it is refused to apply the strong arm of the United States court to compel them to produce it, under a penalty of committing them for contempt of court or any other penalty that the courts can lawfully prescribe to anybody who ignores the lawful process of the court, it is a remarkable proceeding; with that law at the disposal of the commission, and the commission having filed its bill, and a suit is now pending and there is an application for a peremptory mandamus to compel the production of this testimony; that because the courts may not operate so quickly as the commission or somebody else would like to have them, and may not give consideration to this question of law which is brought before the court, the Senate is to rush in and appoint a coordinate investigating committee of its own to decide a question which is now pending before the lawful courts of the country.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I yield to the Senator for a question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Without disputing the correctness of the reasoning which is being pursued by the Senator from Connecticut, and without admitting it either, it seems to me that he has not got the facts quite right. He seems to be assuming that the Interstate Commerce Commission are trying to get certain communications between the railway and its attorney. Now, the fact is the Interstate Commerce Commission——

Mr. BRANDEGEE. If the Senator will permit me there, I do not assume any such thing. I am stating the fact, as I understand it, that was stated by the official of the road, to wit, that the books and documents which the commission wanted to get, which I understand were all the books and papers in his office, might contain some privileged communications to his attorneys, and before he turned them over to them he wanted to see whether they did or not, and I think he has a right to do it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The situation actually is this: The company by its own agency has mixed up its privileged communications with its unprivileged communications, and it refuses to let the Interstate Commerce Commission examine its unprivileged communications upon the ground that they are mixed up. They refuse to turn over the unprivileged communications upon the ground that they are in files with the alleged privileged communications, and they insist, in that condition of a mixing up of the two characters of communications, that they should be the judge and not the agent of the Interstate Commerce Commission as to what is privileged and what is not.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, if they should swoop down upon me and demand all the books and papers that I ever had in my possession, I should demand the right to exercise my own judgment. I should think that I was as capable of deciding that question as some special examiner of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. WILLIAMS. They have not demanded all the papers the company ever had. They have demanded a certain character of papers, and the company will not let them have those because they say they are all mixed up in the files.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I speak from what I know about it. Of course the Senator has alluded to some other document here that I have not had access to. So I can not speak with the full knowledge the Senator may have.

Mr. WILLIAMS. No.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I was referring to what was read at the desk.

Mr. WILLIAMS. The Senator is drawing one inference from what was read at the desk and I another. I am merely stating my view of it.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I can not, of course, say what inference the Senator has drawn. I have drawn the inference that there was a dispute between the agents of the commission and the officers of the railroad as to whether the commission had authority to compel the production of certain papers or not.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I think, if the Senator will pardon me, he is in error in regard to that particular fact. There has been such a dispute with regard to certain other phases of this investigation; but the issue presented now is whether the railroad shall be allowed to examine certain records and files, which it is conceded the commission is entitled to have, before they turn over to them those files, so as to ascertain whether there are any privileged communications in the unprivileged part.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Very well, Mr. President, if that be the matter—assuming the Senator is correct about it—there is a dispute as to the legal rights of the railroad company between the railroad company's officials and the agents of the Interstate Commerce Commission. The Interstate Commerce Commission naturally stands by its views, and has gone to the United States court to determine its right.

Now, Senators appear here in the Senate and say, "Oh, no; do not let the court interpret the legal rights of these people. Let us appoint a special investigating committee and summon the men, and if they will not give us the information we want to get, irrespective of the question whether we have a legal right to it or not, we will commit them for contempt and we will try out afterwards whether they ought to have produced the evidence or not."

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Connecticut yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. BRANDEGEE. I will for a question, Mr. President. Of course I do not want Senators to make speeches in mine.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I merely want to ask the Senator if the adoption of the resolution would take away from the railroad company any of their legal rights. Could they not make the same resistance to contempt proceedings that they make to the other? I will say it is my opinion that they could. But I do not believe that the Louisville & Nashville Railroad would show the same contempt for the Senate that it has, apparently, for the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. Mr. President, if the Senator goes on much further he will get in so deep that even he can not advocate the passage of the resolution. He admits that until a court shall have decided that they are violating the law in refusing the production of the papers the Senate could not commit them for contempt, but because they——

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. If the Senator will pardon me, I said nothing of that kind.

Mr. BRANDEGEE. The Senator, if I understood him correctly, said that if the Senate attempted to commit them for contempt the same resistance could be put up by the railroad company against the enforcement of the contempt proceedings then that they could make at any other time. If that is so, it shows the futility of the whole proceeding, because when you get them here under the resolution and ask them to produce the documents and they refuse, and then we undertake to commit them to jail for contempt, they go to court and find out whether the Senate of the United States has a right to commit a man for contempt. They bring a proceeding in court, and if the court says that the man was not legally obliged to produce those papers the enforcement of the Senate decree can not be executed. So what is gained?

Mr. President, it seems to me that this is an attempt, it may not be a conscious attempt, by those who are advocating the resolution to scare those people into the production of the papers voluntarily, under the threat of an investigation by the Senate, and into a surrender and abandonment of the attempt to ascertain what their legal rights are under the laws of the land and in the duly constituted judicial tribunals. They may be as guilty as hell and they may deserve hanging and imprisonment for life; as one Senator remarked to me, they may deserve to be hung as high as Haman, but the courts of the country are constituted for the purpose of determining those questions. I do not feel that resolutions should be sprung upon the floor like this. It was purely by accident that I happened to come in at the time it was up. I know nothing about it except what has been presented on the floor. It is the first time I ever heard of it. It shows to me at least the desirability if not the vital importance of referring resolutions to investigate this, that, and the other, which are introduced here daily upon ex parte statements, to the duly constituted committees of this body for some deliberation and examination. I for one regret that these things are brought up and acted upon without reports of committees.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President, to me this seems to be a very extraordinary proceeding. Congress has provided by law for a commission to make the investigation. It has been proceeding along lawful lines in the accomplishment of that duty. Meeting with an obstruction, the commission comes here now and asks the Senate of the United States to appoint a committee to help it perform its duty.

I recognize the fact that it is necessary that these great corporations should be regulated. We have provided the means by which that may be done. I sometimes think we are going to extraordinary lengths in the investigations that are being made of these corporations. I can understand very well why a man in charge of the business of one of the corporations should become resentful of proceedings taken to examine the private correspondence and proceedings of the corporation. For that reason I can make some allowance for the course that was taken by the president or vice president, whatever his office may have been, of this corporation. He may have stood in the way of the legitimate performance of duty on the part of the representatives of the Interstate Commerce Commission. They claim that he has, and they have resorted, I think, to the proper tribunal to determine that question, namely, one of the regularly constituted courts of the country.

Now, why should the Senate of the United States step in under those circumstances and attempt to determine this question or help the Interstate Commerce Commission to determine it? Suppose this committee upon investigation should actually find that the officer of the corporation was in the wrong about it, that he had refused to allow the examination of the papers the commission had the right to examine, what would the committee do then? It would have no power to render any judgment with respect to it. The Senate of the United States would have no such power, Mr. President.

Suppose they should find that this officer of the corporation had improperly refused to permit the examination of these papers, the Senate committee could not punish him for contempt for that act. It would not be an act against the Senate of the United States. The Senate could not punish him for contempt for any such act as that.

If the committee should undertake to investigate this question, and he should refuse to appear or refuse to disclose proper facts before the committee, then the committee might report him to the Senate and ask that he be punished for contempt, but the committee could not go back and determine whether he was right or wrong in refusing the Interstate Commerce Commission the permission to examine the books and papers. That is a matter which is now regularly and in proper course submitted by the Interstate Commerce Commission to one of the courts of the United States. Why, under those circumstances, should the Interstate Commerce Commission come here and ask the Senate to appoint a committee to interfere with this matter in any way that is now submitted to the ample tribunals of the country?

The claim is made that it would expedite the proceeding to compel the examination of the papers. But, Mr. President, we have no right to deny to a citizen of this country the right to resort to the courts. We have no right to take away from the courts the duty which rests upon them to give this matter such an investigation as it properly calls for. We could not, in any event, if we should try, take away from the court the jurisdiction that belongs to it to determine whether this man was right or wrong in his effort to prevent the examination of the papers.

Mr. President, I think it is an entirely improper proceeding on the part of the Senate. I think it ought not be permitted. It is an interference, in my judgment, with the orderly conduct of the affairs of the courts in dealing with such a question. I should be exceedingly sorry to see the Senate of the United States set a precedent of this kind.

This may possibly be an aggravated case; I have no doubt the Senator from Tennessee regards it as such. But that ought not to alter the principle that should govern the Senate in dealing with questions of this character. There is a remedy provided by law. The Interstate Commerce Commission is seeking that remedy, and I think the Senate of the United States should leave the courts to determine this question without interference.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I may be quite wrong about this matter, because I have not had an opportunity heretofore of looking into it, but I have the resolution under consideration and it is now before me. To me it has a very peculiar look. If we pass the resolution and a committee is appointed, and an attempt is made by the committee to subpœna witnesses, and an order is made to produce these documents, and witnesses refuse to respond and refuse to produce the documents, I am inclined to think in the end the Senate will find itself in a somewhat humiliating position, because I do not see upon what theory the Senate could enforce an order made under this resolution, an order of the committee to produce papers or to compel the attendance of witnesses. This matter is pending before the Interstate Commerce Commission. Therefore it must be assumed that it is a matter within the jurisdiction of that commission, else it would have no business to deal with it at all.

The act which creates that commission and the amendments which have been passed from time to time provide, among other things, that—

For the purposes of this act the commission shall have power to require, by subpœna, the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of all books, papers, tariffs, contracts, agreements, and documents relating to any matter under investigation.

Therefore, if this is a proper matter to be investigated by the Interstate Commerce Commission, it has the power which is conferred by the section of the statute which I have read, namely, to compel witnesses to produce all "books, papers, tariffs, contracts, agreements, and documents relating to any matter under investigation."

It was recognized that the ultimate power to compel the production of documents, if the witness refused to produce them, and to punish the witness for contempt of court, was a judicial power, and therefore it was not committed to this administrative body. But the statute continues:

Such attendance of witnesses, and the production of such documentary evidence, may be required from any place in the United States, at any designated place of hearing. And in case of disobedience to a subpœna the commission, or any party to a proceeding before the commission, may invoke the aid of any court of the United States in requiring the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books, papers, and documents under the provisions of this section.

And any of the circuit courts of the United States within the jurisdiction of which such inquiry is carried on may, in case of contumacy or refusal to obey a subpœna issued to any common carrier subject to the provisions of this act, or other person, issue an order requiring such common carrier or other person to appear before said commission—and produce books and papers if so ordered—and give evidence touching the matter in question; and any failure to obey such order of the court may be punished by such court as a contempt thereof.

Now, it will be seen that ample power is given by that statute to the commission, first of all, to require the production of the books and papers which are mentioned, always assuming that it is a matter within the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission, and, as I have already said, we must assume that; otherwise the commission would have no authority to proceed at all.

The commission having proceeded to a point where it has required the production of certain documents and papers, and the witness ordered to produce them having declined to do so, the commission not only resorts to the court, as it has authority under this statute to do, but it comes to the Senate of the United States to assist it in enforcing an order of that kind. The commission, of course, must be inquiring into this matter with a view to determining whether or not a crime has been committed and whether or not this statute has been violated. If it has been violated, then it is for the executive department to prosecute. We have made the statute; we have declared what constitutes the crime. There our duty and responsibility and our business cease.

We are continually passing resolutions here which invade the responsibilities and duties of the executive department, and they are passed because they happen to involve some great corporation, some railroad company, the Tobacco Trust, the Standard Oil Trust, the Steel Trust, or some of those great organizations which are not popular. Why, Mr. President, if a resolution were to be presented in this Senate which proposed to investigate the affairs of a private citizen who was thought to be guilty of an offense—of having violated a statute—we would not dream for one instant of passing it; yet I undertake to say that the power of the Senate to deal with violations of law is no greater in the case of unpopular corporations than it is in the case of a citizen.

This is not a new question. Since I have been sitting here I sent to the Library for the case of Kilbourn against Thompson, reported in One hundred and three United States Reports, and I want to read to the Senate a few paragraphs from that decision. I will first read from the syllabus. It is as follows:

The resolution of the House, under which K. was summoned and examined as a witness, directed its committee to examine into the history and character of what was called "the real estate pool" of the District of Columbia, and the preamble recited, as the grounds of the investigation, that Jay Cooke & Co., who were debtors of the United States and whose affairs were then in litigation before a bankruptcy court, had an interest in the pool or were creditors of it. The subject matter of the investigation was judicial and not legislative. It was then pending before the proper courts—and there existed no power in Congress, or in either House thereof, on the allegation that an insolvent debtor of the United States was interested in a private business partnership, to investigate the affairs of that partnership, and consequently no authority to compel a witness to testify on the subject.

Just as this case is pending before the proper court—

It follows that the order of the House declaring K. guilty of a contempt of its authority and ordering his imprisonment by the Sergeant at Arms is void, and affords the latter no protection in an action by K. against him for false imprisonment.

Now I go for a moment to the body of the case, on page 189:

We are of opinion that the right of the House of Representatives to punish the citizen for a contempt of its authority or a breach of its privileges can derive no support from the precedents and practices of the two Houses of the English Parliament nor from the adjudged cases in which the English courts have upheld these practices. Nor, taking what has fallen from the English judges, and especially the later cases on which we have just commented, is much aid given to the doctrine that this power exists as one necessary to enable either House of Congress to exercise successfully their function of legislation.

This latter proposition is one which we do not propose to decide in the present case, because we are able to decide it without passing upon the existence or nonexistence of such a power in aid of the legislative function.

So it was not even clear that, in aid of its legislative powers, either House of Congress possessed any such power.

As we have already said, the Constitution expressly empowers each House to punish its own Members for disorderly behavior. We see no reason to doubt that this punishment may in a proper case be imprisonment, and that it may be for refusal to obey some rule on that subject made by the House for the preservation of order.

Then I omit a portion and continue at the lower part of page 190:

It is believed to be one of the chief merits of the American system of written constitutional law that all the powers intrusted to Government, whether State or National, are divided into the three grand departments—the executive, the legislative, and the judicial. That the functions appropriate to each of these branches of government shall be vested in a separate body of public servants, and that the perfection of the system requires that the lines which separate and divide these departments shall be broadly and clearly defined. It is also essential to the successful working of this system that the persons intrusted with power in any one of these branches shall not be permitted to encroach upon the powers confided to the others, but that each shall by the law of its creation be limited to the exercise of the powers appropriate to its own department, and no other. To these general propositions there are in the Constitution of the United States some important exceptions. One of these is that the President is so far made a part of the legislative power that his assent is required to the enactment of all statutes and resolutions of Congress.

Mr. President, in my view one of the most important things in this Government of ours is the distribution of the sovereign powers among these three great departments, and it is no less important that those sovereign powers having been distributed in this way should be kept entirely separate; that neither department should be permitted to invade the other. I would resent any attempt upon the part of the Executive to invade the lawmaking powers of this body or of the other House of Congress, and I would object just as strongly, and I do object just as strongly, to Congress, the legislative department of the Government, attempting in any way to invade the powers either of the executive or of the judicial department. If I understand this resolution, it does both. It invades the executive authority in that it attempts to investigate whether or not a crime has been committed, which is purely an executive function; and it invades the judicial authority when it undertakes in that investigation to call witnesses, to demand the production of documents, and to enforce its orders by proceedings for contempt, if they are not complied with. The court continues:

This, however, is so only to a limited extent, for a bill may become a law notwithstanding the refusal of the President to approve it, by a vote of two-thirds of each House of Congress.

So, also, the Senate is made a partaker in the functions of appointing officers and making treaties, which are supposed to be properly executive, by requiring its consent to the appointment of such officers and the ratification of treaties. The Senate also exercises the judicial power of trying impeachments, and the House of preferring articles of impeachment.

It will be observed that in every instance where the Senate or the other House, or both combined, exercise what are in their nature either executive or judicial functions, it is only done under some express provision of the Constitution. Congress has no general power except the legislative power. When outside of these express provisions of the Constitution we ascertain that a thing is of a judicial nature, we must at once determine that we have nothing to do with it; when we determine that it is an executive matter, we must at once determine that we have nothing to do with it. Executive power, by the precise language of the Constitution, is vested in the executive, and all the judicial power is vested in the courts.

The court continues:

In the main, however, that instrument, the model on which are constructed the fundamental laws of the States, has blocked out with singular precision and in bold lines in its three primary articles the allotment of power to the executive, the legislative, and the judicial departments of the Government. It also remains true, as a general rule, that the powers confided by the Constitution to one of these departments can not be exercised by another.

It may be said that these are truisms which need no repetition here to give them force.

I used to think so. A great many of the things that we are saying to-day were very obvious a few years ago, but they have ceased to be quite so clear to-day, and it seems to be necessary, now and then, to remind not only some of the people of the country but the Senate itself of some of these obvious truisms.

But while the experience of almost a century has in general shown a wise and commendable forbearance in each of these branches from encroachments upon the others, it is not to be denied that such attempts have been made, and, it is believed, not always without success. The increase in the number of States, in their population and wealth, and in the amount of power, if not in its nature to be exercised by the Federal Government, presents powerful and growing temptations to those to whom that exercise is intrusted to overstep the just boundaries of their own department and enter upon the domain of one of the others or to assume powers not intrusted to either of them.

Again, further on, after discussing the character of the resolution of inquiry, the court says:

The preamble then refers to "the real estate pool," in which it is said Jay Cooke & Co. had a large interest, as something well known and understood, and which had been the subject of a partial investigation by the previous Congress, and alleges that the trustee in bankruptcy of Jay Cooke & Co. had made a settlement of the interest of Jay Cooke & Co. with the associates of the firm of Jay Cooke & Co., to the disadvantage and loss of their numerous creditors, including the Government of the United States, by reason of which the courts are powerless to afford adequate redress to said creditors.

That is substantially the plea made here, that, while the courts may not be powerless, great delay is resulting from appealing to the usual and orderly processes of the judicial department. So we are asked to intervene in order to hasten the process.

Several very pertinent inquiries suggest themselves as arising out of this short preamble.

How could the House of Representatives know, until it had been fairly tried, that the courts were powerless to redress the creditors of Jay Cooke & Co.?

How do we know that great delay is to result in this proceeding until it has been tried out? We have a provision in one of the later statutes which expressly provides for expediting cases under the interstate-commerce act, and I am not certain, but I think, that statute could be resorted to in this very case.

Again the court says:

Again, what inadequacy of power existed in the court, or, as the preamble assumes, in all courts, to give redress which could lawfully be supplied by an investigation by a committee of one House of Congress, or by any act or resolution of Congress on the subject? The case being one of a judicial nature for which the power of the courts usually affords the only remedy, it may well be supposed that those powers were more appropriate and more efficient in aid of such relief than the powers which belong to a body whose function is exclusively legislative. If the settlement to which the preamble refers as the principal reason why the courts are rendered powerless was obtained by fraud, or was without authority, or for any conceivable reason could be set aside or avoided, it should be done by some appropriate proceeding in the court which had the whole matter before it and which had all the power in that case proper to be intrusted to any body, and not by Congress or by any power to be conferred on a committee of one of the two Houses.

The resolution adopted as a sequence of this preamble contains no hint of any intention of final action by Congress on the subject. In all the argument of the case no suggestion has been made of what the House of Representatives or the Congress could have done in the way of remedying the wrong or securing the creditors of Jay Cooke & Co., or even the United States.

I may pause there to say that in this case whatever may have been done of a criminal nature, of course, must be determined by the statute as it exists. If something has occurred that we, after investigation, do not approve, we can do nothing about it; we can not pass a statute affecting that, because our statutes can only speak, so far as criminal matters are concerned, in the language of the future. If we should find that this railroad company had been guilty of all sorts of moral delinquencies and yet had not violated any subsisting statute, all the inquiries that we could make between now and next Christmas would not enable us to enact legislation to punish a single one of them.

Was it to be simply a fruitless investigation into the personal affairs of individuals? If so, the House of Representatives had no power or authority in the matter more than any other equal number of gentlemen interested for the government of their country. By "fruitless" we mean that it could result in no valid legislation on the subject to which the inquiry referred.

Mr. KENYON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Iowa?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I yield.

Mr. KENYON. I desire to suggest to the Senator that the Senate has made an investigation where they had no power to do anything to correct a moral abuse which they might find.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Oh, yes.

Mr. KENYON. Take the West Virginia investigation. There was apparently nothing the Senate could do at the completion of the investigation.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is quite true, Mr. President. We have undertaken investigations for the express purpose of ascertaining whether or not conditions existed in regard to which we ought to pass legislation; but we never have met with the question which is the vital question under this resolution. If we undertake to call before us a witness and compel him to produce his private papers, the question as to whether or not we can punish for contempt never has been authoritatively determined, as I understand.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Tennessee?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Certainly.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. There is no question involved in this resolution in regard to the production of private papers.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will ask the Senator to repeat his suggestion.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I understood the Senator to say that the question was whether or not the Senate had the power to require the production of private papers.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I do not think that is an accurate statement——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Why not?

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. Of the issues involved, because these are matters of record, files and documents that come within the meaning of the statute.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. They are the papers of the railroad company.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. They are their books.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. Yes.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Are they public documents?

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. No; they are not public documents in the sense that they are statutes or anything of that kind.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Then, are they not private documents?

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I do not so consider them.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. What are they?

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I do not consider any paper or record that is open to inspection or required to be filed with a commission or public body a private paper.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If they are not private or public, how would the Senator from Tennessee classify them?

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I would classify them, in the sense the Senator is using the term, as public papers.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not know how the Senator can see into my mind and understand in what sense I am using the term. I am using it in the ordinary sense. They are not governmental papers—I mean by "governmental papers" the papers of an official body—and in that sense the papers of a railroad company are just as much private as are the papers of an individual.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. But it is admitted that they are subject to inspection and to be filed with a public body. Now, the only question, as I understand the facts, is whether these papers also include certain other papers, and the railroad reserves the right to say whether they shall inspect these records first or whether the commission shall inspect them to determine whether or not they contain private papers.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It involves the question as to whether we can compel the production of papers of this corporation. If we require them to produce the papers or if the proposed committee orders them to produce the papers and refusal is still made, then, to say the least, there is exceedingly grave doubt as to the power of the Senate to proceed any further.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do.

Mr. WORKS. I want to ask the Senator from Utah what he thinks this committee could do with the papers if they were produced?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Nothing, except to act as a go-between, and, after getting them from the railroad company, hand them over to the Interstate Commerce Commission, I suppose.

Mr. WORKS. Well, Mr. President, what right has a committee of the Senate, having procured papers by this process for its own uses, to then turn them over to some other body?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think none.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. I think the Senate could do the same thing with these papers that the lobby committee did with the papers that came before them. They made them the basis of a report to the Senate on which legislation was enacted by this body. Of course, there is no suggestion in this discussion that any legislation should be retroactive.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the committee should get into its custody any papers, of course it will then do with the papers as it pleases; but I am speaking of a case where the committee can not get the papers, where the person in charge of them refuses to deliver them to the committee, just as he has refused to deliver them to the agents of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from California?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do.

Mr. WORKS. I wonder if the Senator from Utah means just what he says, that a committee of this body, when it gets possession of papers, can do what it pleases with them? That is a pretty broad statement.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I do not know whether I am inclined to qualify that or not. Of course, in a sense it can not do as it pleases, but it can do with papers as the Senate pleases after it has got them, I presume. It has the physical power to do it.

Mr. WORKS. I am not so sure about that. The power of the courts might intervene in a case of that kind and certainly prevent an improper use of the papers.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That is true.

Mr. OLIVER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Pennsylvania?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. OLIVER. I should like to ask the Senator from Utah whether, if this committee is appointed and makes a demand for these papers, it would not be a complete answer to that demand for the custodian of the papers to say that a court of competent jurisdiction has already taken jurisdiction in the case; that the papers are subject to the control of that court; and that he could not produce them?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I think that ought to be sufficient.

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield further to the Senator from California?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. WORKS. I should like to suggest to the Senator from Utah that this resolution is proposed to be adopted at the request of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. WORKS. And the obvious purpose of it is to assist that commission to get possession of these papers—not that the Senate shall get possession of them for its use, but that this committee shall aid the Interstate Commerce Commission to get possession of them.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. Mr. President, if the Senator from Utah will yield to me for a moment, an investigation as to the facts alleged was originally instituted by the Senate. The Senate selected as its agency the Interstate Commerce Commission, so that, if the Senate should raise a special committee to assist in that investigation, it would only be for the purpose of assisting its own agency, an agency of its own selection.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, the Senate can not employ the Interstate Commerce Commission as its agent. The Senate has the physical power to pass a resolution directing the attention of the Interstate Commerce Commission to a state of affairs which may or may not constitute a violation of the law and to suggest to that commission that it ought to investigate it; but when the commission acts, it acts upon its own responsibility; it acts as a principal; it does not act as the agent of the Senate. We have not any more power to constitute the Interstate Commerce Commission an agent of ours to discharge one of our functions than we have to go out and select the first person that we might meet upon the street.

Mr. ROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from New York?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Yes.

Mr. ROOT. Is not the test to be found in the question, What jurisdiction is the Interstate Commerce Commission exercising when it gets these papers before it?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Certainly.

Mr. ROOT. Is it exercising the jurisdiction of the Senate? Certainly not. If it has any jurisdiction at all, it is the jurisdiction conferred upon the Interstate Commerce Commission by law, which has been invoked by resolution of the Senate; and, therefore, if under this resolution we appoint a committee for the avowed purpose of assisting the Interstate Commerce Commission, that committee would be exercising not the jurisdiction of the Senate, but merely acting as an assistant to the exercise of the jurisdiction of the Interstate Commerce Commission.

It seems perfectly clear to me that such a resolution is wholly beyond our powers, wholly void, and can have no legal effect whatever. It can have no effect, except to bring the Senate, its power, and its authority into contempt and subject the Senate to a mortifying failure in an attempt to exercise power it does not possess.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, I entirely agree with the Senator from New York, and I have been attempting to say some of the things he has said very much better than I have said them. I call his attention to the language of the resolution itself:

Resolved, That a special committee, consisting of five Senators, be, and the same is hereby, created for the purpose of assisting the Interstate Commerce Commission in said investigation—

Not to assist the Senate——

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. Mr. President——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Just a moment—not to ascertain the facts for the use of the Senate in passing legislation, but in this matter to assist the Interstate Commerce Commission, which is acting, and can only act, under the law which creates it and which confers upon it the jurisdiction which it possesses. Now I yield to the Senator from Tennessee.

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. Mr. President, I never suggested that the Interstate Commerce Commission, after it began this investigation, was acting other than as on its own motion and with the powers conferred upon it by statute; but what I said in that connection was said in answer to a question of the Senator from California [Mr. WORKS], namely, that the Senate originally desired certain information, and it requested the Interstate Commerce Commission to obtain that information. Now, in the process of obtaining it, acting within its own powers, that body has been unable to obtain the desired information on account of the destruction of certain documents and the threatened destruction of other records. It would seem, therefore, competent for the Senate to order an investigation of its own, and to obtain these facts, if it be desirable to obtain them, through a committee of its own instead of through the Interstate Commerce Commission.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Mr. President, let us take an illustration. Suppose that the Senate should so far forget itself—and I should not be surprised to have that happen almost any day—as to recite in a resolution that there was information to the effect that one John Doe had robbed the mails of the United States; that the Attorney General and his aids were not paying any attention to that alleged violation of the statute, and thereupon directing or requesting the Attorney General to investigate the matter and bring it before a grand jury, to the end that John Doe might be indicted and properly prosecuted, and, if guilty, convicted and punished. Suppose, after the receipt of that resolution passed by the Senate, the district attorney should enter upon that investigation, should call witnesses before the grand jury, that he should order some witness to produce documents, that the witness should decline to produce them, and that the district attorney should go to court—of course, the grand jury would have no more power to punish for contempt than the Interstate Commerce Commission has—the district attorney should go to court, get an order to compel the production of the papers or punish the recalcitrant witness for contempt, and the proceedings were moving a little bit slowly, and the Senator from Tennessee should become impatient, as he very often does about these matters, and insist that we ought to proceed with greater haste, and ask to have a committee of five appointed by the Senate to aid the district attorney and the grand jury to get this information about which this proceeding was already going on in the court——

Mr. WORKS. Mr. President——

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Does the Senator pretend that the Senate would have any business with such a resolution as that? Yet it is only different from the one under consideration in degree. There is absolutely no difference in principle.

I yield to the Senator from California.

Mr. WORKS. I suppose if this committee should be appointed to assist the Interstate Commerce Commission it would not be acting independently and as representing the Senate of the United States, but would be under the direction and control of the Interstate Commerce Commission as its assistant?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Oh, undoubtedly. The resolution says so. The resolution says it is "created for the purpose of assisting the Interstate Commerce Commission in said investigation."

Mr. BRANDEGEE. And the Senator from Mississippi, in charge of the resolution, stated that it was his idea that it was to act under the instructions of the Interstate Commerce Commission from time to time, and investigate contemporaneously with it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If it has become the business of the Senate of the United States to be a sort of a society for furnishing first aid to the injured in cases of this kind, I have totally misunderstood its functions.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I ask the Senator from Tennessee if it would be agreeable to him to have this matter laid aside for the present?

Mr. LEA of Tennessee. It will be entirely agreeable to me to have the resolution go over. I desire to add that when it is again taken up I believe I shall be able to show that the resolution is not so unusual as the Senator from Utah represents it to be, but that it is along the lines of precedent and is usual; and not only that, but that it is necessary to meet the conditions which exist.

BUSINESS CONDITIONS IN THE UNITED STATES.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I send to the desk and ask unanimous consent to have read an editorial from the New York Herald of to-day, entitled "The business 'boom.'"

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the editorial will be read.

The Secretary read as follows:

[From the New York Herald of Friday, Feb. 13, 1914.]

THE BUSINESS "BOOM."

In this country, in spite of croakers, the upward movement of American securities continues steadily. This steadiness is a most encouraging feature. The improvement in Wall Street is no mere flash in the pan. On the contrary, it is continuous, irresistible, and general. It is based on the increasing prosperity of our business conditions all around, to which the Herald has repeatedly called attention.

A few disappointed speculators and disgruntled politicians have shown a disposition to cavil at the Herald's optimistic reports, and, as might be expected, the bears remain as active as ever and, like wolves in a hard winter, are more than usually enterprising in their campaigns.

But the public refuses to be intimidated by either bear raiders or political croakers, and improvement in every department of American business activity continues unabated.

Workshops all over the country are returning to full-time conditions. The latest monthly report of the United States Steel Corporation shows that the unfilled orders on the books at the end of January amounted to 4,614,000 tons, an increase of 332,000 tons as compared with the unfilled orders on the books at the beginning of the year. Indications that such satisfactory conditions are improving still further is contained in the fact that while the daily average of orders booked in January amounted to 40,000 tons the daily average since the beginning of February has increased to 50,000 tons.

Big manufacturing concerns are assured of working to the full extent of their capacity for two and in some cases four months. The railways, the country's business barometer, also show that a great development of traffic is at hand by the extensive measures they are taking to increase their supply of rolling stock.

PRICES RISING ALL ALONG THE LINE.

Another detail of great significance is the enormous trade balance in favor of this country that is disclosed in the official report just issued for the six months ending December 31. It shows an increase, as compared with the same period of 1912, of $38,401,934, or a little more than 10 per cent. It is noteworthy also that this increase is not due to greater exports of foodstuffs, but to greater exports of manufactured articles. This indicates not only great industrial activity at home, but also the steady development of American markets abroad.

Still another indication of the business prosperity now existing in this country is the general advance of American securities. Since the beginning of the year this movement has been gaining strength, and almost without exception securities to-day stand from 5 to 7 points higher than at the end of December. Then Atchison was quoted at 93¼; to-day it stands at 98⅜. Central New Jersey closed the year at 290; now it is 305. Delaware & Lackawanna has risen in six weeks from 382 to 394, Great Northern from 126½ to 131¾, Illinois Central from 106½ to 111, Northern Pacific from 109 to 115⅜, Pennsylvania from 109⅛ to 112⅜, Union Pacific from 154⅜ to 162⅛, United States Steel from 58⅞ to 65¼, Amalgamated Copper from 73¼ to 76½, and American Tobacco from 243 to 248.

Improvement, in fact, reveals itself in every branch of industry and commerce, and the boom is only just beginning.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 20 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened, and (at 5 o'clock p. m.) the Senate adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, February 14, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

FRIDAY, February 13, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Father of life and love, home and happiness, government, justice, and mercy, the Church, peace, and good will. Incline our hearts to Thee that we may lean with more confidence upon Thee moment by moment.

We need Thee every hour.
Teach us Thy will,
And Thy rich promises
In us fulfill.

When the body has spent itself and the earth is slipping beneath our feet, we may turn to Thee for succor and will not be disappointed, for Thou art ever present and Thy love will be responsive to our call. But we need Thee, O our Father, when health is at its height, when we are pressing forward in the everyday conquests of life, when temptations assail us and promise victory. These are illusive and lead to defeat. Thou alone can support, sustain, and guide us over the rugged ways of the now and fit us for the great beyond. In the name of Him who taught us the way and the truth and the life we pray. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

Mr. WINGO, by unanimous consent, was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of Henry M. Forgay (H. R. 3312, Sixty-third Congress), no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEE MONUMENT.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, on yesterday the ground was broken to begin the work of the erection of a monument in honor of the Nation's martyred President, Abraham Lincoln. In reading an account of the exercises in the morning paper I was struck with some remarks made by one of the members of the commission which has that work in charge. This gentleman, a former Senator, a southern man, and a Confederate soldier, alluded to Mr. Lincoln as the greatest of all American Presidents, and I could not help thinking how fine it is to hear such words from a southern man and a Confederate soldier. [Applause.]

Another monument, Mr. Speaker, is being erected at the base of Capitol Hill in honor of the memory of that great man, the soldier, Ulysses S. Grant. It is well that we should pay tribute to the memory of these men in this way, for a land without monuments is a land without memories.

Mr. Speaker, sometimes I think how vain are many of the things we do here—how soon they are forgotten. We see the flag flying at half-mast and then we ask ourselves who will be next. Shall it be I or shall it be you? Who can tell? Surely no one; but this we do know: The only things that are worth while, the only things which will endure, are not selfish, narrow, or partisan things, but the big, broad, noble thoughts which find expression in our acts. [Applause.]

Mr. Lincoln's Gettysburg speech was an inspiration. I verily believe when those words were born in his great soul Abraham Lincoln was very close to his God. So it was with Ulysses S. Grant when, surveying this Nation wet with blood and tears, he uttered those immortal words, "Let us have peace." So it is, Mr. Speaker, with every man when he does any really great thing. It must be in a moment when his soul is yearning to be a little nearer to God. [Applause.] We fight here for party advantage. You Republicans put us in a hole, so to speak, one day. We try to find an opportunity to pay you back on to-morrow in the same kind of coin. [Laughter.] These partisan battles are soon forgotten. The things a man does which are remembered are the big, broad, patriotic things, done in the moment when party strife is forgotten. [Applause.]

But, Mr. Speaker, I did not rise to moralize. I asked permission of the House for a few moments to make a practical suggestion. Yes, the ground was broken yesterday to lay the base of the great Lincoln memorial. The Grant Monument at the base of Capitol Hill will, I trust, soon be completed. Now, as Americans, thankful to Almighty God for the greatness of this Nation, feeling in our hearts charity for all and malice toward none, can we not well afford to pass a bill appropriating from the Treasury of all the people a sum sufficient to erect a similar monument to the memory of another man equally as great as Lincoln or Grant? When you recall those four years of blood and tears, what are the names of the men who always appear? Lincoln, Grant, and Lee. [Applause.] Yes, these three names are flashed upon the canvas whenever you recall the sad drama which had its beginning at Sumter and its ending at Appomattox. Whatever may be your opinion of the wisdom of the part any one of these men performed, upon this point we all agree—we reverently thank God that this is a united Nation; that each one of these men did his duty as the good God gave him light to see; that they were all great because they were good; that in this respect each is deserving of the greatest monument human skill can build. [Applause.]

In the last Congress, Mr. Speaker, I introduced a bill appropriating money to erect a monument to Gen. Lee just across Pennsylvania Avenue from the monument now being erected to the memory of Gen. Grant. I have not introduced that bill in this Congress because I cherished the hope it would be introduced and pressed by some gentleman on the other side of the aisle.

Oh, Mr. Speaker, what a splendid hour it would be if we would on the next suspension day pass such a bill without a dissenting voice. [Applause.]

We of the South are glad to see the Grant monument rise. We shall be glad to see the work on the Lincoln monument rapidly progress. We love the flag. Our manhood is always ready to fight for the flag. If I remember correctly, we furnished 35 per cent of the Army in the War for Independence, 52 per cent in the War of 1812, 65 per cent in the War with Mexico, while in the War with Spain we offered all the Nation would accept. Many of our young men offered their services, but were not accepted, because the quota allotted to the respective States was full.

Let us pause here for a moment. Go with me to the Winslow's shattered deck. Go with me to Santiago's burning heights. What beautiful boy lies here; what manly officer is this? Speak, silent lips, and tell us which one of the sister States did yield ye up, a sacrifice for thy country's honor? No answer comes from the dead, but we, the living, are proud to tell the world that one of the States of the South—the State which in part I have the honor to represent; the same State which was first at Bethel and last at Appomattox; also in defense of the flag of a nation forever united was first at Cardenas and last at Santiago. [Applause.]

If an echo could come from the grave of Abraham Lincoln, what think you the martyred President would say? Do you doubt for one moment it would be in approval of the suggestion to honor Lee, just as we are proposing to honor Grant?

If some message could come to us from the tomb of Gen. Grant, do you doubt for one moment what that message would be? If the Grand Army of the Republic were called upon to vote "aye" or "no" upon such a bill, I do honestly believe it would overwhelmingly pass. I may be mistaken in expressing this opinion, but I do not believe I am.

Let these three monuments be erected here in Washington. Let them stand forever to tell the world in eloquent silence that there is truly no North, no South, no East, no West; that each and every State is equal in degree in loyalty to the flag; that deep in our hearts we all believe that whatever is ordained of God is for the best; that it is His providence that this Government of the people and for the people and by the people shall not perish from the earth. [Loud applause.]

GOOD ROADS.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill H. R. 12914, Private Calendar No. 33, and ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman suspend for just a moment?

Mr. ADAIR. I will.

Mr. WOODRUFF. I would like to ask unanimous consent to address the House for one minute.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan [Mr. WOODRUFF] asks unanimous consent to address the House for one minute. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. WOODRUFF. Last Friday evening, in addressing the House on the subject of good roads, I felt impelled to criticize the organization known as the National Highways Association. I have since that time received a letter from their president, in which he and his organization take exception to what I had said. I would like to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by inserting his letter and my response thereto.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?.

There was no objection.

Following are the letters referred to:

ELMWOOD, CAMBRIDGE, MASS.,
February 9, 1914.

Hon. ROY O. WOODRUFF,
Care of House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. WOODRUFF: I have had called to my attention your remarks in Congress at the evening session Friday, February 6, 1914. The part that especially interests us is your reference to the National Highways Association, and particularly your apparent misapprehension as to our position, the character of the association, and the purpose for which we are working. We feel it is only a misapprehension, and that as such, you will be very glad to change your view and to make such correction as the facts warrant.

First. You have made the public statement that our suggested system of 50,000 miles of national highways touched "not more than 15 per cent of the counties in each State." As a matter of fact they pass through 43 per cent of the counties; 41 per cent more counties abut these counties, but can reasonably be considered as being served by a system of national highways. As a matter of fact the entire country is served, just as a State is served by its system of State roads, irrespective of whether they go through a particular county or not.

Second. We are not interested in the expenditure of money for the leisure or pleasure-seeking classes of the Nation, but we pass by this argument for the moment.

Third. The road map of Michigan to which you refer was furnished our association as the latest record of the results of "State aid." We have understood since that date that Michigan has changed this plan and is now building, or about to build, State highways. This is what our association has advocated, and we understand Michigan is following the other and more advanced States in this respect. Since receiving this information we have so stated in all our publications.

Fourth. You make the statement that "The form of literature sent out by the National Highways Association should be condemned as the worst form of lobbying." We deem it both a right and a duty in a democratic form of government to exercise the privilege of free speech. We believe that every man has a right to his own individual opinions. We believe that he has a right to express them if he does so in a liberal, courteous, and kindly manner, and we believe that this does not lay him open to invidious charges. We furthermore believe that the Representatives whom he sends to Congress, or to other legislative halls, above all others, are in duty bound to listen and pay attention to the views expressed by any member of society on any subject, and to do so courteously and considerately. We do not believe that the business man, associations, individuals, or otherwise should be debarred from expressing their views to any Member of Congress, nor when so expressed should they be classed as you have classed our association. I think furthermore that you share this view.

Fifth. You also state in your remarks that this association asks "that this Government enter jointly into the expenditure of $25,000,000 for the purpose of building great concrete highways." I think you will also be glad to correct this misstatement. You can not find anything in the publications of our association that advocates any particular kind of a highway, whether it be concrete, macadam, oil, dirt, sand, clay, shell, or otherwise. We simply stand for a system of national highways as we stand likewise for a system of State highways, county highways, and town highways.

We are not quarreling with any difference of opinion that may exist in your mind, or any one else's, as to the method to be followed to attain "good roads everywhere," for which, I take it, we all stand; but we do demand, and we believe rightly, a correction of statements which are not according to the fact, and we trust that you will accord us this correction with as great publicity as that given to the charges.

We shall be very glad to have you, or anybody, examine carefully into our work and our plans. We believe in the utmost publicity in connection therewith and are quite content to abide by the decision of the Nation as to whether we are right or wrong.

Yours, very truly,

CHARLES H. DAVIS, President.

FEBRUARY 11, 1914.

MR. CHARLES HENRY DAVIS,
Elmwood, Cambridge, Mass.

MY DEAR MR. DAVIS: Yours of the 9th, in which you take exception to certain things I had to say in my discussion of the good-roads bill in the House, has been received.

You state the part that especially interests you is my reference to the National Highways Association, and particularly my apparent misapprehension as to your position, the character of the association, and the purposes for which you are working. I wish to assure you that it is my intention at all times to approach any subject in a spirit of fairness.

You state, first, that I have made the public statement that your suggested system of 50,000 miles of national highways touched not more than 15 per cent of the counties in each State. From my inspection of the map sent to me, which apparently has been mislaid, as I can not now find it, I concluded that that was a very liberal estimate. However, you state that these proposed roads pass through 43 per cent of the counties, and that 41 per cent more counties could reasonably be considered as being served by a system of national highways, and that, as a matter of fact, the entire country is served.

On this I differ with you very materially, and I assure you that it is an honest difference, inasmuch as I maintain that a road passing through one county can not in any way add to the convenience of farmers living in an adjoining county in marketing their crops. You must appreciate the fact that rural highways of the Nation can not by any manner of means be considered competitors of the railroads, and that the farmer invariably draws his produce to the nearest railroad station. The average haul in this country is nine and a fraction miles, so you can not argue reasonably that the farmers living in a section through which one of your national highways extends would travel to this highway from each side for more than 5 miles, which in most cases would be at right angles from the direction in which the railroad station lies, in as much as it would increase their haul to too great an extent.

I am prepared to accept your statement that the roads, as proposed by your association, would pass through 43 per cent of the counties. However, for the reason I have just stated, I deny that 41 per cent more counties about these counties can reasonably be considered as being served by your proposed system, inasmuch as the people outside of the immediate sections of the counties through which your roads would run could use these roads only in case they wished to travel from city to city or from State to State by automobile or otherwise. To my mind it would in no way assist the farmers of these several communities in marketing their crops.

Secondly. You state you are not interested in the expenditure of money for the leisure or pleasure-seeking classes of the Nation. I am willing to accept your statement for this.

Thirdly. Your explanation in regard to the road map of the State of Michigan—the State you have so generously belittled in all your circulars—is quite in accord with my remarks on the same. In this paragraph you state that Michigan has since that date changed this plan of State aid, and is now building, or is about to build, State highways. In this you are in error, as I understand it, for the reason that Michigan has not changed her system of improving highways, but has only added thereto.

Personally I feel that much greater benefit could be derived by the people of the State at large had the moneys about to be expended for State highways been extended in the manner prescribed under the provisions of the original law.

In your publications you neglect to state that the system under which Michigan has been working is gradually working out a complete system of macadam and gravel trunk lines everywhere throughout the State. As this aid is extended and the system developed, the counties are building their roads from the county seats and their market towns to the county lines, connecting up with other improved roads in the adjoining counties.

To my mind, every community knows which particular roads should be improved first to serve the greatest number of people. And a satisfactory system could not be worked out for all the communities and States by a board of strategy located in any one particular State.

Fourthly. You quote from me that the form of literature sent out by the National Highways Association should be condemned as the worst form of lobbying. You add: "We deem it both a right and a duty in a democratic form of government to exercise the privilege of free speech." I agree with you perfectly. "We believe that every man has the right to his own individual opinions." In this we agree. "We believe that he has the right to express them if he does so in a liberal, courteous, and kindly manner, and we believe that this does not lay him open to invidious charges." I absolutely agree with this, and had you couched your language in a "liberal, courteous, and kindly manner," instead of in the following terms: "If the people of the United States have saddled upon them 'Federal aid'—whatever it is made to mean—they will later awaken to the fatal error and their ignorance in permitting such extravagance, incompetence, and graft as the result thereof. And 'by the Eternal,' we will provide so-called statesmen responsible therefor 'with a long and much-needed vacation,'" I would not have mentioned the association except in a commendatory way in my speech in the House. If you can conscientiously call the above quotation "liberal, courteous, and kindly," I have nothing further to say.

However, I think you will be as fair as I am trying to be and ac nowledge that this is and should be unmistakably termed insidious lobbying.

I want you to know that I appreciate more than I can say all your association has done in arousing public sentiment in favor of good roads. If I have misunderstood your position in regard to the kind of roads you advocate or have misunderstood your purposes, I am very glad, indeed, to be corrected. I think, from your letter, that our differences lie mainly in the manner in which the roads of the country are to be improved.

I stand, as you know, for Federal aid. I know it to be a fact that this system working under the Michigan law has been of immense value to the State at large. Whatever assistance is given by the National Government in the building of roads I believe should be given to all equally. I do not believe that the people of any one community should be taxed to pay for the roads in any other, unless they in turn can receive like treatment.

My ideas on this subject I have incorporated in the bill which I have introduced in the House and a copy of which I inclose.

I assure you that I shall undertake to give as much publicity to your letter and to this one as was accorded my speech in the House. I shall ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to include in the same this correspondence. I shall also give a copy of the same to the press.

With kind personal regards, I am,
Very sincerely, yours,

ROY O. WOODRUFF.

THE RULES.

Mr. BOWDLE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Indiana withhold his request for just a few minutes?

Mr. ADAIR. I will withhold, Mr. Speaker, for two minutes.

Mr. BOWDLE. I would like to ask unanimous consent, Mr. Speaker, to make a statement to the House, not to exceed two and one-half minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. BOWDLE] asks unanimous consent to address the House for two and one-half minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. BOWDLE. Mr. Speaker, Mark Twain it was, I believe, who, on looking at our House manual, said that a knowledge of it was probably the greatest consummation the human mind was capable of consuming.

When one looks at it, as well printed as it is, with its minute annotations, it does seem to be a consummation he is not likely to consume.

After coming to this House I undertook the work of reducing our House rules to question-and-answer or catechism form. Of course, this was undertaken for my own edification only. But on finishing it I laid it before one of our able parliamentarians, Mr. Bennett Clark. His criticisms were promptly carried into the text. Later I had a conference with Mr. CRISP with regard to our Committees of the Whole House, and his suggestions were adopted. Still later I had the boldness to submit my work to the able Republican leader [Mr. MANN], and he, with characteristically kind consideration for younger Members, went over my work and made some 15 criticisms, which were carried into the text. But what I have said is not intended to bind any of these gentlemen to the full integrity of the text.

Since then a few copies have been given to Members, and I now have on hand many requests for additional copies.

And now, Mr. Speaker, what I want to say is simply that I dedicate my work to my colleagues of this Congress. Anyone wanting a copy may have it.

I can not ask the House to print it. In all the comic papers Uncle Sam is depicted as a benevolent old gentleman with very long legs—pulled out long on the rack of this world paying for printing the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and thousands of documents of doubtful value. I can not and will not ask him to print anything for me.

Let me say, Mr. Speaker, that the work is modestly offered to the House. Its production, needless to say, required no genius—industry simply.

On coming to this House I found myself rather disliking the precise parliamentary attitude of the distinguished Republican leader [Mr. MANN]; but later, on examining my thought, I found it based on the fact that he knew so much more than I about parliamentary law; but the more I studied the rules the more I admired his attainments, and I can better understand the genius of his leadership.

And now, gentlemen, if you will acquit me of immodesty, you can have my work.

PENSIONS.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, I now renew my request.

The SPEAKER. What is the gentleman's request?

Mr. ADAIR. To call up the bill H. R. 12914, No. 33 on the Private Calendar, and consider it as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent that the bill H. R. 12914 be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill, as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12914) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Civil War and certain widows and dependent children of soldiers and sailors of said war.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ADAIR] asks unanimous consent that the first reading of the bill be dispensed with. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the bill for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to place on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws——

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, a parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. ADAIR. Am I not entitled to one hour on recognition?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is entitled to five minutes.

Mr. ADAIR. I addressed the Chair when I thought the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The SPEAKER. There is no general debate. The gentleman deprived himself of an hour when he asked that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole. The Chair will recognize the gentleman to suggest any amendment when the Clerk reads the first section.

Mr. ADAIR. Very well, when we reach the section.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Benjamin F. Fronfield, late of Company D, One hundred and ninety-third Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, in view of an understanding that I had with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas may proceed for 45 minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. ADAIR] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] be permitted to proceed for 45 minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the gentleman from Texas is recognized for 45 minutes.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, looking at the question of pensions simply from the standpoint of the two hundred and odd bills now under consideration, known as war pensions, I doubt if I should test the endurance of the House by a speech of any length. But in view of the general propaganda throughout the country for civil pensions, and the fact that a former President of the United States recommended, in a message to this House, the adoption of a civil-pension policy, and the further fact that such a policy, if current newspaper reports are to be believed, is at this time being considered by the present Chief Executive of the Nation, in order that gentlemen may get a better grasp and conception of what will happen when we embark upon the policy of civil pensions, I may be pardoned if I call attention to a few things which have happened in the case of war pensions.

And in that connection I wish to insert in my remarks a table from the most recent annual report of the Commissioner of Pensions. Reading just a moment from that table, I may be permitted to say that in 1866—omitting the right-hand figures for the sake of brevity—there were 126,000 names on the pension rolls, at an expense of $15,000,000. Proceeding now by decades, in 1876 there were 232,000 names, at an expense of $28,000,000; in 1886 there were 365,000 names, at an expense of $67,000,000; in 1896 there were 970,000 names on the rolls, at an expense of $142,000,000; in 1906 there were 985,000 names, at an expense of $142,000,000; and according to the last report of the Commissioner of Pensions we have 820,000 names, at an annual expense of $176,000,000.

For whatever historical value it may have, I wish to say that the 820,000 names on the pension roll at the present time consist, in round numbers, of 503,000 persons who rendered service in some of the wars and that 316,000 are the names of widows and dependents.

For whatever historical value it may possess, I may also say that since 1861 the Congress has passed, in round numbers, 42,000 special pension bills. Up to the passage of the Sherwood pension bill the Congress had passed something like 40,000 special bills, or at the rate of about 2 a day. We were led to believe—at least I was, although that did not affect my position upon the question—that with the passage of the Sherwood bill, giving more liberal pensions to the soldiers and their dependents, there would be a vast falling off, if not a complete abandonment, of the practice of passing special pension bills. Yet from the average rate of 2 a day, which Congress passed from 1861 to the date of the enactment of the Sherwood bill, we began to pass an average of 12 a day after that bill went into effect; that is to say, from June 30, 1912, to the end of the Sixty-second Congress we passed some 2,800 private pension bills, which would be practically 12 a day.

Of course, there is not any justification under heaven for a private pension bill under our laws. Aside from the question of its unfairness to other persons entitled to draw pensions, if a system of private pension bills for the purpose of relieving particular cases that especially appeal to Congress was a wise system, we have a statute which would cover cases of that sort in an equitable and a fair manner. Let me read you this statute:

That the heads of departments who may severally be charged with the administration of the pension laws of the United States of America be, and they hereby are, respectively directed and required, as soon as may be after the opening of each session of Congress, to present to the Senate and House of Representatives a several list of such persons, whether Revolutionary, invalid, or otherwise, as shall have made application for a pension or an increase of pension, and as in their opinion respectively ought to be placed on the pension roll or otherwise provided for, and for doing which they have no sufficient power or authority, with the names and residences of such persons, the capacity in which they served, the degree of relief proposed, and a brief statement of the ground thereof, to the end that Congress may consider the same.

So that in the selection of a list of persons out of a total of 820,000 to receive the favor to flow from a private pension bill we do not proceed in that systematic and regular way provided for in the law, but they are selected by the Pension Committee upon a plan which they have worked out for themselves. And under the working out of this plan by the Pension Committee some very unhappy and incongruous things constantly occur. In the modest little private pension bill which I have before me there are embraced some two hundred and odd names. I do not know how many bills we are passing. I doubt if there is a gentleman even on the Pension Committee who could tell us the exact number of private pension bills we are now about to enact into law; but I do find, on page 26 of this report of the committee, the name of James A. Galloway, aged 73 years, the helpless and dependent child of John S. Galloway.

I have no doubt in my own mind that this gentleman is in needy circumstances. He is 73 years old. He was 22 years old when the war between the States began. He is now to be pensioned as a helpless child of a soldier of the Civil War. I call your attention to it, not for the purpose of seeking to defeat it, because I know that is perfectly hopeless. But if a man 73 years old now, who was 22 years old when the war began, is to be placed upon the pension rolls as a helpless and dependent child of another man who served in the war and received a pension during his lifetime, and after his death a pension was given to his widow, then is not the pension system a perpetuity in this Republic of ours?

As I pointed out to the House on a recent occasion, we are carrying on the pension rolls now 199 widows of the War of 1812. But if this pension system, so constantly expanded and extended as applied to the Civil War, continues to be enlarged by Congress, you will have a pension roll of practically a million names, carrying almost $200,000,000 for a century to come.

Last year we added, in round numbers, 20,000 names to the pension roll that had not been previously upon the roll. They were not soldiers. They were not engaged in that great war. They were either the widows or the dependent children of soldiers, who came within the provisions of the law or appealed to the tender mercies of the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

The general law provides that the provisions of the pension laws shall not apply to widows who married soldiers subsequent to June 27, 1890. You are repealing that law every two weeks for the benefit of widows who appealed to the charitable spirit of the Pension Committee.

At page 75 in this report you will find that Mary K. Bell, aged 51, is to receive a pension. This good woman, no doubt in needy circumstances and quite as deserving of a gratuity as millions of others, married the soldier in 1891. At that time she was 28 years old. She had no connection with the War between the States. She married the soldier when she was 28 years of age, and the law says you shall not give her a pension. But you select her and single her out in this bill and give her a pension in violation of the pension laws of the United States. If you will turn over to page 91 of this report—and I am only selecting a few of the most glaring cases, because I must hurry on—you will find that you are giving a pension to Katherine Reardon, aged 48, the widow of a soldier. She was born in 1866, and she married the soldier in 1892, when she was 26 years of age.

To that extent you are amending the law of the United States upon the pension question, the most liberal pension laws ever enacted by a civilized government. Of course, no man need go far or reason long to know what the result of this will be. You select a widow to-day who does not come within the law, and another to-morrow in that place, and next day you select a dependent child 73 years old in this city, and to-morrow you select one who does not come within the 16-year provision of the general law in another city, and presently the cry will be raised that you are not treating the old soldiers and their dependents fairly because you give a pension here to a widow who married a soldier subsequent to 1890; that you are not treating dependents fairly because you give the dependent a pension here who does not bring himself within the law; and the final result must be an agitation for an enlargement of the provisions of the general law.

Mr. Speaker, I have said this much with respect to war pensions because it fairly introduces to you this propaganda for civil pensions. It is a serious propaganda and has the earnest support of many powerful persons. It is not merely being advocated and urged in distant places and in obscure ways in the country. So recently as 1912 the then President of the United States, in a message to this body, used this language with respect to civil pensions:

It has been referred to in several messages which I have sent to the Congress and in many reports of the heads of departments. It is conceded by everyone acquainted with the situation that some action must be taken. Under present conditions the loss to the Government will continue to increase. Some method other than the summary discharge of employees when they become inefficient on account of age must be adopted. The present practice of retaining such employees on the rolls and, as they grow older, expecting from them a smaller quantity and lower grade of work can not continue indefinitely without seriously impairing the efficiency of the entire service and imposing upon the Government a cost that will be in excess of the expense to be incurred by the adoption of a reasonable plan for remedying existing conditions.

That language from the message of the President is made even stronger in a report from the committee appointed by the then President upon efficiency and economy in the public service. This committee went out among the departments of Washington and made a very careful investigation of the question of the superannuation of employees of the Government. That committee used this language:

The Commission on Economy and Efficiency has made a thorough investigation of the personnel of the civil service in the District of Columbia and is convinced that the service can never be brought up to the highest possible standard of efficiency until a satisfactory plan for the retirement of the aged employees is adopted by the Government. Any comprehensive scheme for the improvement of the civil service must include a proper plan of retirement for civil servants. While it is true that the laws regulating the civil service do not insure a permanent tenure of office, but on the contrary specifically provide for the removal of the inefficient, the fact is well known that this provision of law is disregarded whenever inefficiency is the result of old age; nor does this commission believe that Congress will insist upon administrative officers removing inefficient old people from the service so long as no retiring allowance has been provided for them. The work of the Government offices must therefore continue to be retarded by the inefficiency of aged clerks until such time as a retirement law is put into operation. The commission feels, therefore, that it can not lay too great emphasis on the fact that, without a provision for retiring aged employees, it is idle to expect either thorough efficiency in the public service or the closest economy in the expenditure of salary appropriations.

In order that those who feel an interest in this great and growing question may not underestimate its importance, I want to read this further significant statement from this commission, showing the great loss to the Government at this time on account of the inefficiency resulting from the superannuation of civil employees of the Government:

It is believed that the statistics justify the adoption of age 70 as the proper age of retirement for employees in the departmental service in Washington. This belief is based on three grounds: (1) The foregoing table shows that at age 70 the loss from superannuation is considerable (14.26 per cent); (2) an inquiry covering the employees in one of the large offices of the Government in which the work is of such a character as to be capable of accurate measurement, both as to quantity and quality, and where it is known that the officer at the head of the bureau undertook to answer the commission's inquiry by basing the returns on an accurate record of work performed, shows that employees 70 years of age and over earn but 56.31 per cent of the salaries paid them. In this office there are 33 employees 70 years of age and over, the total salaries paid them amount to $40,600, and of this amount they are reported as not earning $17,740.

I wanted to call your attention to this question upon this occasion because I recently introduced a measure providing for a fixed tenure of 10 years for civil-service employees of the Government. I did not introduce that measure as a last word even from myself upon that great question, but I introduced it tentatively, as a basis for investigation and discussion.

Mr. Speaker, we face in this country one of two situations: We must either fix a tenure for civil employees of the Government or we must provide a pension when they reach an age where they can no longer render the service for which they are employed. For myself, I believe that a 10-year tenure for the civil employees would solve the question. I believe that if those who engage in the civil-service employment of the Government knew that the tenure of office was for 10 years the result would be as it now is with officers elected or appointed for a fixed term throughout many branches of public and private employment.

A county clerk elected for two years, and knowing that custom forbade him to hold the office for a longer term than four years, practices frugality and economy, so that he may have something when he retires at the end of four years. If you were to enact a law prescribing a tenure for civil-service employees, those who entered the service of the Government, knowing the tenure was fixed by law, would adjust themselves to that employment as persons in private employment adjust themselves, and would practice a degree of economy and frugality which would insure them against poverty upon their retirement.

Mr. HARDY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. With pleasure.

Mr. HARDY. If we are to have an old-age pension, is there any reason why it should apply only to officeholders? If we are to have this kind of a civil pension, why should it not apply to all men?

Mr. DIES. My colleague states the case fairly. If we are to pension old persons who have worked for the Government, why not pension old taxpayers who support the Government? When you say to a man who is engaged in the civil service of the Government that you will pension him upon his retirement at the age of 70 years, you make a child out of him. You take away from him the incentive to industry, the incentive to economy, the incentive to frugality, prudence, initiative, and individualism, which has made the people of America great.

There are two ways that you can do it. You can tax the balance of the people to pay pensions or you can have a compulsory contributory plan whereby the Government at the end of each month will, by compulsion, take from each employee a given sum of money, invest it for him, hold it for him, compound the interest for him, and then when he reaches a certain age dole it out to him in annual payments.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. Certainly.

Mr. BRYAN. If you place the Government in the position of making an investment for employees, as the gentleman suggests, would you not have paternalism tripple compounded?

Mr. DIES. Oh, yes; the system of pensioning civil employees has run the same course in every Government that ever initiated it. The straight pension plan is soon regarded by the employees of the Government as an addition to their salaries, and then they refuse to be dismissed from the service, because they say the Government is holding back part of their salaries and that in good conscience it can not discharge them.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. With pleasure.

Mr. CLINE. I would like to inquire of the gentleman from Texas how he arrives at the conclusion that without a limited civil-pension service, limited to, say, 10 years' service, we must provide a pension fund for the employees. Does the gentleman consider, in arriving at that conclusion, that we are not paying sufficient salaries to the employees?

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I need only refer to the message of the President, to the report of the Efficiency Commission, and to a state of facts which every informed person knows exists in the city of Washington and throughout the country, namely, that many old men and women are in the departments who have grown old in the service and who have neglected to provide for old age, and the heads of these departments will not kick them out in the streets to starve, and Congress would not allow them to do it if they wanted to. So that you are carrying on the pay rolls of the Government to-day inefficiency as a result of superannuation, amounting to many hundreds of thousands of dollars per year. Of course, the amount can only be estimated. One estimate is that it amounts to $220,000 a year among the 25,000 civil-service employees in the city of Washington.

The civil-service league estimates that throughout the country to-day more than $1,200,000 is being paid indirectly as a gratuity by the Government on account of inefficiency growing out of superannuation.

But I must come back now to the suggestion of my colleague with regard to the amplification of the doctrine that the Government should take charge of the affairs of the individual and protect him from his own extravagance and want of care and frugality. As I said, there are only two plans proposed, one the straight pension plan and the other the compulsory contribution plan.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. I will, but I am admonished that my time is rapidly passing.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Would the last plan which the gentleman mentioned mean about the same thing as annuity insurance?

Mr. DIES. Oh, yes; it is worked out upon the actuary tables, just as annuity insurance is worked out. The only difference is if a man stands on his own manhood, and takes a part of his earnings and goes out and buys annuity insurance, he preserves his self-respect, he does not bind his arm to his side to perish and wither away, but he goes forward with individualism and private initiative, and does his work with efficiency, practices economy with fidelity and continuity, and grows to a graceful old age, not as the ward of the Government, but as an independent citizen, dignified in his manhood, and, proud of his victory over poverty and want.

Mr. YOUNG of North Dakota. Would the gentleman make that kind of Government insurance available to all of the citizens of the country, whether employed in the Government service or not?

Mr. DIES. No; I would not make it available to anybody. I would let every man in this Government have laws which would give him an equal chance in the race of life, and then I would make the Government take its hands off him and let him have a fair chance in life, and I would not have this Government make children out of any set of employees or any set of old, aged persons or any set of persons within the Government. Of course, we all make an exception of soldiers who render service in times of war.

Here is the trouble about the civil pension: Here is a man working for the Government; he is practicing frugality and economy; he is an efficient employee; he gets his salary at the end of the month, and he invests some part of it in a way that will bring him 8 per cent or 10 per cent or 6 per cent, or maybe 15 or 20 per cent, in wise investments; he is forging ahead, as an American citizen determined to succeed in this great Government of opportunity. Just behind him is lagging back another who, on account of his indifference, his extravagance, his carelessness to provide for an old age, is saving nothing out of his salary received from the Government. The effect of civil pensions is to say to the man who is forging ahead, "Hold on, and wait until this fellow can catch up with you," and the proposition of the man behind is that the Government will take him by the ear and pull him forward in order that he may come up with the man who is forging ahead. The result is that you hold back the man who is striving, upon his own resources, to be a success in the world, and to that extent you deaden his initiative and his energy and his opportunity and you try to pull forward a man who does not seek and strive to attain success, and of course you but further deaden his ambition.

Mr. CLINE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DIES. Certainly.

Mr. CLINE. I want to ask the gentleman from Texas this question: Assuming that we must have and that it is proper to undertake to provide a civil pension roll, does the gentleman put it upon the basis of valuable services rendered, or does he put it upon the necessities of a man in old age and poverty?

Mr. DIES. Oh, no; I never put any pension upon the question of valuable services rendered. When a person is employed by the Government—and I am addressing a body of men who fix salaries, and if salaries were not high enough, I take it that those gentlemen who advocate civil pensions would come forward with a proposition to increase the salaries—I take it that this Government does now or, at least, will very promptly pay all of its employees that which amounts to a fair value for the services rendered. I have heard it suggested that certain railway companies throughout the country have adopted the system of civil pensions, and that therefore the Government of the United States should follow in their wake. If I had the time I would read to you an article from Mr. Vanderlip, the president of the National City Bank of New York, upon the question of workingmen's pensions. I wish I had the time to point out to you the reason given for it by those who advocate it throughout the country. These are the reasons: They declare that it enables them to have more effective discipline among their employees; they declare that it is worth all they pay as strike insurance to prevent their employees from going on strikes; and, note you, the railways and other corporations of the country who adopt the civil list for their superannuated employees always adopt the straight pension plan, and why? Because if an employee is dismissed, because if at any time they seek to dispense with the services of an employee, he can not say, "You owe me on account of pension."

So that a man working for a railroad company, and who had been working until he was 50 years of age, has suspended before his vision a pension, and that restrains him from going upon a strike or quitting his job. The railroad company, as all other industrial concerns, is operated upon a vastly different principle than that upon which the Government of the United States is operated. A railroad company is operated for profit. Therefore, if it is a profitable system to the railroad companies to inaugurate a sort of insurance for the benefit of their employees in order to hold them fast to their jobs and prevent them from going upon strikes, it grows out of the desire of the railroad company to make further profits for their shareholders.

The Government of the United States is not operated for profit. Therefore, the rules which govern employees of industrial or other corporations do not apply to the Government of the United States. Take the Illinois Central, at the head of which is my friend C. H. Markham. He receives a salary of $50,000 a year. But Mr. Markham must produce results or he will lose his position. Under him is another gentleman and another and many others, and they all face the same condition, and that is that they must show a profit; they must show efficiency; they must show results to their stockholders or they lose their positions. The result is that they procure great efficiency in the employees of railroad corporations. But how is it with the Government of the United States? The President of the United States occupies its highest office. There are 435 Members of Congress and almost 100 Senators, and all of us are bosses of the heads of the departments operating this great corporation known as the United States.

Great extravagance has resulted, let us assume; there is a deficit in the Treasury, let us assume; a railroad is built in Alaska and does not pay, let us assume; the telephones are bought and paid for with bonds, and the wires are crossed and the operators are indolent and insulting and the people are dissatisfied, let us assume; and I go back to my district and you go back to your districts and the President goes to the country and the Senators go to their States. A constituent of mine says to me, "DIES, you are spending too much money in Congress," and he shakes his finger at me for the inefficiency in government and for the extravagance of administration. I can and will shake it back at him and declare: "Shake not thy gory locks at me; thou cans't not say I did it." And the President, when the people charge him with permitting extravagance and paternalistic legislation in the Congress, can assure the electorate of the country that they need not shake their gory locks at him, for he did not do it. And so each Senator and Congressman can assure his constituents that he is not the particular person who is responsible for the great extravagance of the Government. And that proceeds from the old, homely adage that "what is everybody's business is nobody's business." You place employees under the heads of departments without consulting the heads. The employee, in the first place, does not feel that loyalty and dependence upon the graces of his superior that is felt in private employment. The head of the department, or his chief, does not feel that responsibility for results that Mr. Markham, at the head of the Illinois Central Railroad, feels. He did not get his job like Mr. Markham got his. He got his job upon the indorsement of his Congressman, upon the indorsement of his Senator—by political influence. Mr. Markham got his job by working his way up from a section hand to the presidency of the Illinois Central Railroad Co., because he rendered efficient service and because he saw to it that those under him rendered efficient service in the various positions he occupied.

Jumping briefly from this, Mr. Speaker, there is another reason why I hope we will not enter upon this system. I note that the first proposition is to take in the 25,000 civil-service employees in the city of Washington. How can you justify taking them into the pension system without taking in the entire 290,000 employees of the Post Office Department? If you take in the 25,000 who are near you here in the Capital, you will never hear the agitation cease until you take in the entire 400,000 that serve the Government in civil-service employment throughout the United States. And when you take in the civil-service employees of the Government, you will do what we are going to do here presently, and you will do it speedily and hastily, namely, that if an employee is not entitled to a pension under the general law you will give it to him in a special bill. First, you will give it to the employee when he is 70 years old, under the general law, and then somebody will introduce a special bill to give it to him if he is 69 years old. If he dies at the age of 68, some man will rise and say the family of this man is in dependent circumstances, and his widow ought to receive the pension which he would have received if he had lived two years longer. And presently, with the growth of the system, you will be giving it to the children, the helpless, the dependent children, who appeal to your compassion—the children of the employees of the Government. And then when you get all of the civil-service employees safely provided for, without a thought or care for the morrow, there will rise up the old mothers, the old widows, the old men, the old farmers, the old laborers upon the streets, and claim that they, too, have given great service to the Government of the United States.

Mr. Speaker, my heart goes out in sympathy to every aged man who has reached that period of his life without making some provision for his old age. But I am unwilling to embark upon this socialistic proposition, because it follows along a way the end of which is death to individual liberty and to our institutions under which we have grown so great. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. HOWARD). The time of the gentleman has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Zachariah T. Alexander, late of Company I, Fifty-sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask somebody in charge of this bill if there is any rule for fixing the amount to be awarded to a claimant?

I find here in this bill that one pensioner who served one year and seven months and some days, who is reported to be totally disabled, is given a pension of $40 per month. I turn right over on the next page and I find that a man who is totally disabled and who served for a longer period of time in the Army is pensioned at the rate of $30 a month. Now, what kind of method is there, or is there any method about it? Do you just give a man what he asks for or what the bill asks for? What method is there in fixing these pensions?

Mr. ADAIR. I will say to the gentleman from South Carolina that the committee takes into consideration all the facts and all the evidence submitted in each case. Sometimes there is a soldier, for instance, who served only for a few months, and who is helpless and totally disabled. We do not give that soldier as high a rate as we would give him if he had served a much greater length of time. Then, again, there are some soldiers who require attention, care, and nursing by another person, and if their services were long we would give them a higher rate in order that in each case they might hire some one properly to care for them. So that we take into consideration their condition, their length of service, their ability to take care of themselves, and all such matters as that in reaching or agreeing upon the amounts that we will allow.

Mr. RUSSELL. And the financial condition of the applicants.

Mr. ADAIR. Yes; and the financial condition, and all that.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Now, I call the gentleman's attention to the fact that George W. Rogers served 1 year, 10 months, and 29 days. The claimant is stated to have no income but his pension. His limbs are partially paralyzed, and he is totally disabled. That is on page 5, and it is recommended that he be given a pension at the rate of $40 a month. Now I turn over to the bottom of page 6, and I find there a soldier who served 3 years, 8 months, and 17 days, who is also totally disabled. The testimony is that he is unable to walk across the room, and the prospects are that he never will be any better, and you therefore recommend that he be given a pension at the rate of $30 a month.

Now, where are the facts that will justify any such discrimination as that? One man serves three years and more and you give him $30 a month. He is totally disabled. Another man, who served a little more than a year and is totally disabled, is given $40 per month.

Mr. ADAIR. It may be possible that the soldier mentioned at the bottom of page 6, Mr. Albert Smith, does not need the care and attention of another person, or he may be financially able to employ such care and attention himself, while the other soldier may not be able to do so. I could not answer the gentleman's question fully unless I took all the papers in the cases and read the evidence submitted in connection with each claim.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] has expired.

Mr. ADAIR. I will say this, Mr. Speaker, that if the gentleman will take the papers in both of these cases and read them carefully, I think he will agree with the committee that justice has been done.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. With objection, the pro forma amendment will be considered withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Harriet E. Perkins, widow of Edwin C. Perkins, late of Company E, Twenty-second Regiment Massachusetts Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. ANTHONY] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. ANTHONY. Will the gentleman inform me whether it is the policy now to consider bills of soldiers who served less than 90 days?

Mr. ADAIR. I will say to the gentleman that since I have been on the committee there have been a few bills passed by the committee and passed by this House where the service was a little less than 90 days. The committee adheres as nearly as possible to the rule that 90 days' service must have been rendered.

Mr. ANTHONY. If the idea is to pension soldiers who served less than 90 days, on what theory do you give pensions to the widows of such soldiers?

Mr. ADAIR. I will say to the gentleman that these cases are dependent entirely on the evidence submitted. If the gentleman has a case of a soldier or of a soldier's widow where the service was a few days less than 90 days, the committee will consider all the facts and be ready to do justice in such a case.

Mr. ANTHONY. I will say to the gentleman that I have submitted such cases heretofore for soldiers and soldiers' widows, and they have been uniformly turned down, and I am surprised to see in the report to-day recommendations of such cases where the service has been less than 90 days. The committee ought to have one policy or the other and ought to stick to it.

Mr. ADAIR. In a few cases the soldiers were shot out of the service, and we think consideration should be given in such cases.

Mr. ANTHONY. There are cases in which the soldier was shot out of the service, and cases of widows whose husbands were shot out of the service.

Mr. ADAIR. Can the gentleman give an instance?

Mr. ANTHONY. I have had such cases. Can the gentleman state a case in this bill of a soldier whose widow is pensioned where the soldier was shot out of the service and served less than 90 days? What service did these soldiers render?

Mr. ADAIR. I can not answer that question, because it is impossible, with 250 claims in the bill, for me to carry the facts in mind as to each case.

Mr. ANTHONY. I think, Mr. Speaker, it is very important that such facts should be set out for the guidance of Members of this House. If not, there will be discrimination.

Mr. ADAIR. I will say to the gentleman from Kansas, Mr. Speaker, that it is very difficult for this committee to have a hard and fast rule, because there are so many different circumstances that will enter into each individual case. If the gentleman will come before our committee on any Monday at 10.30 o'clock a. m., we will be glad to hear him, and if he has a meritorious case in the line he speaks of we shall be glad to give it careful consideration.

Mr. ANTHONY. I want to assure the gentleman that it is not only my individual cases; but I think the committee, for the protection of the Members of this House, ought to have hard and fast rules and live up to them, so that we may all be guided by them.

Mr. ADAIR. It would be a very difficult matter for the committee to do that in all cases.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Joseph J. Wolfe, late of Company A, First Regiment Tennessee Volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $40 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the word "Joseph," in line 19, page 4, and to insert in lieu thereof the name "John."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 4, line 19, strike out the word "Joseph" and insert in lieu thereof the word "John."

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Permelia Lewis, widow of William T. Lewis, late of Company A, Seventy-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $24 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, I move to insert, after the word "Permelia," in line 19, on page 5, the initial "J."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, line 19, after the word "Permelia," insert the initial "J."

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, I also offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

On page 5, at the end of line 22, strike out the period and insert a colon and the following proviso:

"Provided, That in the event of the death of Joseph S. Lewis, helpless and dependent son of said William T. Lewis, the additional pension herein granted shall cease and determine: And provided further, That in the event of the death of Permelia J. Lewis, the name of said Joseph S. Lewis shall be placed on the pension roll, subject to the provisions and limitations of the pension laws, at the rate of $12 a month from and after the date of the death of the said Permelia J. Lewis.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Mary A. Farmer, widow of Graham Farmer, late of Company E, Fourteenth Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask a question just for the purpose of obtaining the facts. I understand that the law provides that no widow of a soldier who married such soldier subsequent to June 27, 1890, shall receive a pension.

Mr. LANGLEY. That depends.

Mr. CANTOR. We can pass any act we please.

Mr. ADAIR. I will say to the gentleman that if death was the result of military service, his widow, even though she lived with him only one day, can be pensioned at $12 a month, the same as though she had married him prior to June 27, 1890.

Mr. DIES. If he died from injuries received in the service?

Mr. ADAIR. Yes.

Mr. DIES. That is what I thought, and that is the reason I want to interrogate the gentleman with reference to H. R. 1305. The report, on page 5, says:

H. R. 1305. Georgianna Peabody, aged 68 years, is the widow of William R. Peabody, who served as a first lieutenant in Company A, Twenty-eighth Regiment Maine Infantry, from October 13, 1862, to August 31, 1863 (10 months and 18 days). Post-office address, Farmington, Franklin County, Me. The soldier was pensioned at $10 per month under act of June 27, 1890.

The claimant and soldier were married August 13, 1895, and lived together as husband wife until date of soldier's death, June 30, 1901.

No former or subsequent marriage of the claimant.

She has been denied pension on the ground of her inability to show that the soldier's death was in any way the result of his military service.

The testimony filed in this action indicates the claimant is in indigent and necessitous circumstances, and incapable, by reason of physical infirmities, including deformity and limitation of left arm and wrist, result of a fracture, from earning a livelihood.

A pension of $12 per month is recommended.

I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill how far the provisions of the law which fixes the date at June 27, 1890, have been abrogated in the practice of the committee. I see this one brings the date down to 1895, or five years subsequent to 1890. I want the gentleman from Indiana to enlighten me, if he will, how much further the Committee on Invalid Pensions have stretched the provisions of the general law.

Mr. ADAIR. I will say to the gentleman from Texas that I am unable to say how much further the committee has stretched the law, or how much further it will stretch the law; but from the evidence submitted to the committee they were of the opinion that the Bureau of Pensions was in error in refusing a pension upon the ground that the death of the soldier was not the result of his military service. From the testimony submitted to the committee, we believed that the Bureau of Pensions erred in its decision, and that under the law this widow was entitled to a pension. Believing that, we granted her $12 a month.

Mr. DIES. Does not my friend from Indiana think that the Committee of the Whole House, who are considering these bills for the appropriation of money out of the Public Treasury, should have the facts upon which the committee report in favor of allowing this pension?

Mr. ADAIR. Certainly, and if the gentleman wants to have the facts, he has access to the papers. He can go to the committee room and get the papers in this case and examine them, and if he believes the committee has erred in its action, he has the right to move to strike out the paragraph of the bill granting this pension.

Mr. DIES. Does my friend from Indiana think we ought to be compelled to leave our duties here and go over to the committee room to get this data? Does he not think the committee in its report ought to advise us of the circumstances?

Mr. ADAIR. I do not think it would be advisable for the committee to have printed in its report all of the documents and proofs filed with each individual case. It would make a book as thick as Webster's Unabridged Dictionary; and I am satisfied that the gentleman from Texas, with all his great duties and responsibilities resting upon him, which he performs so carefully and so well, would not have the time to go through all this evidence and inform himself as to the facts in all these cases.

Mr. LANGLEY. It would cost a great deal to print it, too.

Mr. ADAIR. Besides, it would cost an immense sum to print all the testimony filed in support of these cases. I think, if the gentleman from Texas, in going through this report, finds a claim about which he does not feel fully satisfied, it is better that he examine the papers in that particular case. It would be very little trouble indeed for him to step downstairs to the committee room and ask for the papers and go through them. It would be much less expensive.

Mr. DIES. I accept the gentleman's statement. In this case the committee think the widow is entitled to a pension because her husband, the soldier, died as the result of infirmities incurred in the service?

Mr. ADAIR. Yes.

Mr. DIES. Does that apply to all of the cases in which the committee have abrogated the law that fixes the date at June 27, 1890?

Mr. ADAIR. No; I would not say that it does. We have allowed claims to widows of soldiers who married subsequent to June 27, 1890, where the widow had lived with the soldier a number of years and had cared for him; and we took into consideration the labors she performed and the service she rendered, and things of that sort, in determining these cases.

Mr. DIES. As a matter of fact the general law does not give it with regard to this case?

Mr. ADAIR. We allow claims of this character when we think it is just, notwithstanding the law of June 27, 1890.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Henry C. P. Roebling, late of Company C, Sixth Regiment Ohio Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I am not sure but that the gentleman from Kansas, in his question, got the information that I want. In this case of H. R. 4331, Henry C. P. Roebling, a pension is allowed by the committee, notwithstanding the fact that the soldier did not render the 90 days' actual service required by the general law. I would like to ask the gentleman from Indiana in charge of the bill what is the smallest number of days' service he knows upon which a pension has been based by the committee?

Mr. ADAIR. I will say to the gentleman I can not answer that question. I do not remember the smallest number of days. It is evident from the facts, however, in this case that this man must have been shot out of the service, as he was pensioned under the general law. That prevented him from rendering the full 90 days' service. He was discharged after eight or nine days on a surgeon's certificate of disability.

Mr. DIES. Does not the gentleman think that our pension laws would be less subject to the charge of special favors for certain persons if the law requiring the 90 days' service should be conformed to by the rules of the Pensions Committee with regard to the term of service?

Mr. ADAIR. I scarcely think so. I think the gentleman will agree that if a man serves 85 days and is shot out of the service which made it impossible for him to serve the full 90 days, is in financial straits, is in need and helpless, that he is entitled to consideration at the hands of the committee as much so as if he had served 5 or 10 days longer. I do not believe that the committee should be confined to a hard and fast rule.

Mr. DIES. I am afraid if the man was shot outside of the service——

Mr. ADAIR. Oh, I did not say he was shot outside of the service. I said he was shot out of the service.

Mr. DIES. I was going to say that he was not doing his whole duty if he was shot outside of the service and if he had been doing his whole duty he would not have gotten into this position.

Mr. ADAIR. He was shot while in the service and had to quit on that account.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of John Williams, late of Company F, Seventh Regiment Pennsylvania volunteer Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I do not profess to be as familiar with the pension laws as I perhaps ought to be, but my understanding is that the children of deceased soldiers are not under the general law pensionable after they arrive at the age of 16 years.

Now, in this case James A. Galloway, aged 73 years, helpless and dependent child of John S. Galloway, who served as a private in Company D, Eighty-third Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, from July 24, 1862, to March 17, 1863—eight months—and was a pensioner under the act of July 14, 1862, at $12 per month on account of rheumatism and resulting disease of heart. Soldier died March 31, 1892; he and the mother of this child were married September 4, 1838; this child was born June 28, 1839. The mother was pensioned under the act of June 27, 1890, at $8; she died September 18, 1901.

Now, is this child 73 years old entitled to a pension under the general law or not?

Mr. ANSBERRY. No.

Mr. DIES. He is entitled to receive this pension from the Government by reason of the course of the Pensions Committee?

Mr. ADAIR. He became helpless prior to the age of 16, and it has been the practice of the committee to allow $12 a month in such cases.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Jane C. Parrott, widow of ————, late of Company D, Seventeenth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, there seems to be some error in the print of the bill. I am not prepared at this time to say to the House what the name of the soldier is that should be inserted. I ask unanimous consent to pass over this paragraph for the present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Indiana asks unanimous consent to pass over this paragraph for the present. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Louvina Mays, former widow of Alexander S. McLean, late of Company K, Seventeenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I think this case—H. R. 7090, Louvina Mays—is such that the report should go into the RECORD for the guidance of the 820,000 who are on the pension rolls. Naturally, when the other pensioners of the Government find out that persons are getting pensions from Congress who are not entitled to them under the general law they will feel like we are not living up to the doctrine of equal rights to all and special privileges to none. As was said by a former President of the United States, if the old soldiers of the country knew the favoritism that Congress practiced every two weeks in private pension bills, they would rise up and scourge the system of private pensions. It is because the old soldiers do not know that that thing is being done, that fish is being made of one and flesh of another; it is because they do not understand that 200 are being singled out to-day from the mass of 820,000 and are to be made the favorite objects of our solicitude—I say it is because they do not understand that favoritism that they allow this system of private pensions to exist. Therefore I think every Member of this body who is a friend of the old soldier and wants to enlighten him in regard to this system of favoritism ought to place the more glaring inequalities in the RECORD, so that those on the rolls who can bring themselves within the provisions of any of the private pension bills may come and be admitted to equal justice at the hands of Congress.

Therefore I want to place in the RECORD page 28 of the report, a record of the case on the bill H. R. 7090. Unless there is some objection, I will not read it, because I do not want to take up the time of the Committee. I only want to get it into the RECORD for the enlightenment of those who can bring their cases within its terms.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. What is the gentleman's request?

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD a report on H. R. 7090, as a part of my remarks, without reading it to the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The report referred to is as follows:

H. R. 7090. Louvina Mays, aged 74 years, is the widow of Alexander S. McLean, who served as corporal in Company K, Seventeenth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Cavalry, from January 19, 1864, to May 19, 1865 (1 year, 4 months, and 1 day). Soldier was not pensioned. Claimant is not pensioned.

Address, New Hope, Mo.

Claimant and soldier were married March 15, 1860.

Soldier died January 4, 1895.

Dr. A. M. Taylor testifies that the claimant, by reason of old age, an injured hip, and chronic indigestion, is unable to earn a support.

The claimant has no income except from charity.

Nine years after the marriage of the claimant to the soldier he deserted her, leaving her with two children by him, one 7 years old and the other a child at the breast. Both these children are dead. After waiting many years for the soldier to return, and having finally come to the conclusion, based upon what she believed to be reasonable and reliable evidence of his death, she remarried to one Elias B. Mays, September 17, 1882. Elias B. Mays died August 12, 1901.

In view of all the facts of this case, and in particular the facts that the claimant is old, poor, and a "war widow," it is recommended that she be pensioned at $12 per month.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Joel M. Morgan, late of Company K, Ninety-first Regiment Indiana Valunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the report with reference to H. R. 9094, being on page 43 of the report, for the enlightenment of those widows of soldiers who did not marry the soldier as early as June 27, 1890, in order that other widows who can not get a pension under the general law may use this special favor as a cloud by day and a pillar of fire by night to guide their feet toward the Public Treasury.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection, and it was so ordered.

The report referred to is as follows:

H. R. 9094. Susan Zeck, aged 73 years, is the widow of Ruben Zeck, who served as a private in Company D, One hundred and sixty-sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Infantry, from October 24, 1862, to July 28, 1863 (9 months and 4 days). The soldier was pensioned under the act of June 27, 1890, at $12 per month for disease of left arm and rheumatism; formerly pensioned under the general law at $6 per month for disease of left arm. Post-office address, York, York County, Pa.

He and this claimant were married December 25, 1890, and lived together as husband and wife to the date of his death, June 11, 1905. She has made no claim for pension under the general law and has no title to pension under other existing laws.

Medical testimony filed in this action shows she is in bad physical condition by reason of deafness, weak eyes, and disease of heart, which is supplemented by the testimony of others, indicating she has no property of any description, except a small home, valued at $900 and incumbered at $600, or income from any source except what she is able to earn by taking in washing and rent of rooms in her home.

It is recommended she be granted a pension of $12 per month.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of James T. Taylor, late of Company E, Sixty-seventh Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $30 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Chairman, I also ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the report on H. R. 9636, being found on page 50 of the report, being a case where the report says that the claimant's application under the act of April 19, 1908, was rejected upon the ground of no title under that act.

Mr. LANGLEY. Why not insert the whole history of the case?

Mr. DIES. Oh, I am going to. My desire is that other widows of soldiers may see this in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and demand of their Congressman that they be not held to the strict letter of the general law. In other words, Mr. Speaker, there are 820,000 pensioners. We select a few of them, who survive, from the harshness of a general law upon the subject of pensions. I have maintained since I have been a Member of this body that if you give a special pension to one soldier under one state of facts, you ought to be willing to give it to every other soldier who brings himself within that state of facts. Your general law provides a 90-day service. If you repeal the general law and give it to a man who has rendered 89 days of service, then, I say, give it to every soldier who rendered 89 days of service. If you pass a special pension bill and you give it to a widow who marries a soldier subsequent to June 27, 1890, to wit, in 1891 or 1892, then, I say, every other widow who can bring herself within the terms of that private pension bill ought to have as a matter of right under the law equal treatment at the hands of this body, and that has always been my objection to private pension bills, because it violates that fundamental principle of the Government under which we live of equal rights to all and special privileges to none.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to insert certain statements in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The statement referred to is as follows:

H. R. 9636. Rachel Markcauro, now Millerte, aged 70 years, is the former widow of Pleasant Markcauro, who served as a private in Company E, One hundred and twentieth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, from August 14, 1862, to April 19, 1863 (8 months and 6 days). Soldier was not pensioned. Claimant was formerly pensioned under the act of July 14, 1862, and subsequent acts at $8. This pension was discontinued April 5, 1873, the date of her remarriage to Joseph Millerte.

Address, Roodhouse, Ill.

Claimant and soldier were married February 25, 1864. The soldier died February 28, 1868. Claimant's second husband, Millerte, died in March, 1878.

Claimant's application, under act March 3, 1901, was rejected on the ground that claimant has no title under that act, as she was not the soldier's wife during the period of his service, which terminated April 19, 1863, and she having married him February 25, 1864.

Claimant's application under the act of April 19, 1908, was rejected upon the ground of no title under that act, claimant having remarried prior to the date of filing her claim thereunder.

It is testified that claimant is physically unable to earn a support, and it is further testified that claimant has no means of support and no income from any source.

It is recommended by this committee she be granted a pension of $12 per month.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Thomas C. Goforth, late of Company E, One hundred and thirty-first Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $36 per month in lieu of that he is now receiving.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the report on the bill H. R. 10956, to be found at page 68 of the report, being the case of Judson N. Pollard, who is now receiving a pension under a special act of Congress, and who is to receive the benefits of a second special act, in order that those pensioners throughout the country who have succeeded in getting one bill introduced and enacted into law exempting them from the provisions of the general law may avail themselves of this opportunity to have introduced a second bill in derogation of the general statute, and as a guide to persons throughout the country who may wish to avail themselves of this repeal every two weeks upon the general law upon the subject of pensions.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object——

Mr. DIES. Oh, Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman is going to object, then I withdraw the request for unanimous consent, and I will read it into the RECORD.

Mr. LOBECK. Oh, I just wanted to state that I would be glad to have this record of Judson N. Pollard go into the RECORD. I will read in my own time the last three paragraphs, which are as follows:

Claimant was discharged for being under size and age.

Medical testimony is that claimant is confined to his bed most of the time; he has locomotor ataxia, and is totally blind.

Claimant has no property and no income but his pension. Lives at a soldiers' home.

In view of blindness a rate of $30 per month is allowable. A higher rate is not recommended in view of service and that claimant is cared for at a soldiers' home.

Mr. Speaker, I think the claimant is entitled to the amount. He is a blind man.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, if my colleague from Nebraska had listened patiently to what I have had to say and had been in sympathy with my remarks, he would have known that I was predicating my remarks with reference to this case upon the fact that the soldier has already had his case excepted from the 820,000 and has already received a special act of Congress and is now about to receive a second special act of Congress in contradistinction to the four or five hundred thousand other pensioners. I wish only to insert it, not for the purpose of showing that he can not use all the money you are giving him or that he is not in needy circumstances, but to hold it out as a ray of hope to the other four or five hundred thousand old soldiers who have never received even one private pension bill, to let them know that here is a man who has been the beneficiary of two private pension bills, that they may hope on and write on and expect on to receive at least one in the course of their lifetime from the Pension Committee. In other words, that as long as the light holds out to burn and one soldier gets two private pension bills all soldiers may reasonably hope on and expect to get at least one during their lifetime.

Mr. LOBECK. Mr. Speaker, in this case "the light did not hold out to burn," and I am willing to let the 820,000 pensioners in this country know that when a veteran of the Civil War becomes blind the Government will take care of him if it takes half a dozen increases in pensions. [Applause.]

Mr. DIES. And the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. LOBECK] would not apply that magnanimous rule to all the soldiers of the war, but such as the Pension Committee can pick out and handle every other Friday?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Texas has expired.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for a minute more.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. DIES. The only difference between the gentleman and myself is this: He would pick out by private legislation the man who appeals to the sympathy and to the gratitude of the Congress and this committee and give that one soldier relief, when I would make one law under which every honorable soldier of this Republic might walk up to the Treasury and demand as a right that he receive equal and exact justice along with every other man, and not have to go to his Congressman to get a bill introduced. He need only assert his right under the general laws of the country.

Mr. LOBECK. If ever opportunity comes to me and I find that an old soldier who has rendered service to his country has become blind, and he comes to me, I will try to have him assisted in the latter days of his life, with the greatest of pleasure. And so would the gentleman from Texas under the same circumstances, because I know the goodness of his heart.

Mr. DIES. Would not the gentleman extend that to all blind soldiers?

Mr. LOBECK. If he was an old soldier and had become blind, I would be willing that he should have $30 a month.

Mr. DIES. The thing to do is to give it to all of them in a general law.

Mr. LOBECK. And you would vote for it.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] asks unanimous consent to insert the report which he has referred to in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Following is the report:

H. R. 10956. Judson N. Pollard, aged 67 years, served as a private in Company B, One hundred and fortieth Regiment Illinois Volunteer Infantry, from May 14, 1864, to June 10, 1864 (27 days). Subsequently served under Gen. Thomas, as a scout and spy. He is now a pensioner under special act at $20 per month, No. 1056415. Address, National Military Home, Leavenworth, Kans.

No board of surgeons report on file.

Claimant was discharged for being under size and age.

Medical testimony is that claimant is confined to his bed most of the time; he has locomotor ataxia, and is totally blind.

Claimant has no property and no income but his pension. Lives at a soldiers' home.

In view of blindness a rate of $30 per month is allowable. A higher rate is not recommended in view of service and that claimant is cared for at a soldiers' home.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I have a great deal of admiration for the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES], and I always like to hear him speak, whether I agree with him or not. I have a good deal of sympathy with his views on the subject of personal legislation. Yet the gentleman from Texas is a very distinguished member of the Committee on Claims, which deals all the time with personal legislation and private bills. The Committee on Claims constantly reports bills to pay compensation or gratuity, whichever you may call it, to persons who are injured in the Government service, persons who have no legal claim against the Government and think they have a moral claim against the Government in various directions.

I am not criticizing the gentleman from Texas for not opposing all of those bills, because I have no doubt that he attempts to or does oppose those that he thinks are not meritorious. It is, however, impossible to always provide by general legislation for every case which may appeal to us, where the persons can be taken care of by private legislation. I expect that it is probably as fair to all the parties, including the Government, and undoubtedly more economical, for the Government to pay an increased amount to pensioners under peculiar conditions that are brought to the attention of Congress than it is to pass a general law applicable to everybody, regardless of the peculiar merits in the case.

Now, I would prefer, as to the question of claims, to have a general law that would reach everybody, if that is practicable, and yet we have somebody coming in with a hard story that appeals to the hearts of everybody, and we pass a bill allowing that person some money because he or she has been injured in the Government service. If we could stop personal legislation on pensions and claims, we would be exceedingly lucky, because the fact is that in the military service, in the naval service, in the Revenue-Cutter Service, in various other services of the Government, the man who has the persistence to keep after some Member of Congress to get a bill introduced, and then the patience and persistence to visit each member of the committee to which the bill is referred, very often gets a right from the Government to which he is no more entitled than all in his class. I agree with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] that so far as possible we ought to avoid personal legislation, and legislate for everybody upon the same plane.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

I have never laid much claim to the virtue of consistency, if it is a virtue—and sometimes I doubt if it is—but on this question of private bills my brief legislative course here has been consistent. When I first came to this House, in the Sixty-first Congress, Speaker Cannon placed me on the Pensions Committee, which dealt, not with pensions growing out of the Civil War but with pensions growing out of the Mexican War, and probably other wars. And it was because I saw the injustice of the private-pension system in that committee, and because I could not bring my fellow members of the committee to abrogate that unjust system, I resigned from a place on it.

Now, my friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN] says that I am a member of the Committee on Claims, and so I am. I was a member of the subcommittee to which the Committee on Claims in the Sixty-second Congress referred the question of a program or a plan to be outlined for the guidance of the committee.

As the chairman of that subcommittee, I was asked to write the report to the full committee, and I reported to the Committee on Claims that we ought not to handle these matters as private bills in the way that we were about to do—because the committee was then being organized—but whenever we thought desirable we ought to recommend to Congress an enactment of general laws applicable to all claims that might bring themselves within their purview. And all I say with regard to private pension bills I say with respect to private claims bills, with this qualification, that the claims bills are not as popular as the pension bills, and you can scarcely get a bad claim through Congress, and you can scarcely get any claim at all through Congress, and the system of private claims, while it is just as bad as the system of private pension bills, is not pressing us so closely, for the reasons I have just indicated.

Mr. MANN. I hope the gentleman from Texas does not think I was accusing him of inconsistency.

Mr. DIES. Oh, no; and if he had so accused me, I do not know that I would have been in the slightest degree offended by the gentleman, because, while I do not believe that consistency is necessarily the virtue of fools, yet it often stands in the way of wise reform and sound philosophy.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman believes that consistency is right at the same time?

Mr. DIES. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I did not accuse the gentleman of inconsistency. I simply wanted to encourage the gentleman in extending his views with respect to private pension bills to legislation with respect to private claims.

Mr. DIES. No; the gentleman misunderstands me. My desire was to have the Committee on Claims recommend general legislation to the House, instead of the piecemeal legislation practiced by the Committee on Claims and the Committee on Pensions and other committees that handle these questions in installments. If a man comes before the Committee on Claims, who was injured in the service on the Isthmus of Panama, for example, and who lacks 50 days of coming within the terms of the law, and we allow his claim for that reason, we ought to allow the claim of every other man who brings himself within the pale of that provision. Until we do it we will be making fish of one and flesh of another.

The gentleman will remember that when the Post Office appropriation bill was up for consideration it was proposed to single out the employees of the Post Office Department and give them free Government life and accident insurance. The gentleman will remember that I objected then, and one of my grounds of objection was that we ought not to single out the employees of the Post Office Department and give them these gratuities of life and accident insurance, but that if it was desirable to provide for them let us embark on general legislation for the benefit of all of the employees of the Government. I do not believe that the gentleman from Illinois can lay at my door a charge of inconsistency in connection with my opposition to private pension bills.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, the amendment was to strike out the last word. That has not been withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will withdraw it, then.

Mr. BRYAN. Then, Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last two words.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington [Mr. BRYAN] moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] has been more or less consistent in his fight here with reference to these pension bills, and I do not care to take issue with him on that particular line. The gentleman speaks for a general rule governing all Government employees, and yet when he gets down there in the pit and makes his general speech he opposes all forms of gratuity, all forms of consideration with respect to the employees.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentelman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRYAN. Yes.

Mr. DIES. Does not my friend think that a law permitting all gratuities and pensions to civil employees is general enough as a general law?

Mr. BRYAN. That is where I desire to take issue with the position of the gentleman on these matters. I believe it is essential not only as to Government employees when injured and as to soldiers and sailors and their widows and dependents, but we are also compelled to grant some kind of consideration and to adopt some system of retirement to civil employees when they have served the country for a number of years.

The gentleman from Texas has introduced here the bill H. R. 18172, which provides that every civil-service employee of this Government must lay down his commission and give up his office at the end of 10 years' service, and that, no matter how efficient a civil-service employee may be, no matter how well he fills his position, no matter how important and valuable he may be to the Government in the particular department in which he is working, nevertheless, at the end of 10 years he must lay down his work and seek another job, and this particular department must advertise for three more eligibles through the Civil Service Commission and from those three select one person to fill that place.

Mr. DIES. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. BRYAN. I do.

Mr. DIES. In the case of my friend from Washington, the law provides that he shall lay his office down at the end of two years without regard to efficiency. Does my friend think that my proposition to require the civil-service employees to lay theirs down at the end of 10 years is so bad after all?

Mr. BRYAN. Of course the two matters are not related at all. It is as the gentleman stated the other day. People will seek the jobs even if salaries are reduced. I think there would be candidates in the gentleman's district for his job if the salary were made $5,000 instead of $7,500.

Mr. DIES. Yes; the gentleman is right, Mr. Speaker. There are several $5,000 fellows trying to get my place now. [Laughter.]

Mr. BRYAN. I think the gentleman's argument in regard to consistency in these pension matters ought to be applied to matters of retirement and the pensioning of employees; and the gentleman's proposition to retire Government officers at the end of 10 years and to refuse any kind of consideration is destruction instead of construction, and the gentleman's policy along that line is not consistent with his position for a general bill.

In contrast with this bill of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. DIES] to fire all employees at the end of 10 years, without regard for efficiency or the fundamental principles of humanity and social justice, is the bill of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. HAMILL] that proposes a retirement of civil-service employees at the end of 30 years' service at half pay and proportionate consideration for less years of service. I favor the retirement plan. It is not only humanitarian; it is economical. It will give the people better service, and will lessen the taxes instead of increasing them. It is pretty hard for a clerk or average Government employee to lay aside for the rainy day that is inevitable and sure to come. When that day comes, it is cruel and inhuman to throw the employee and his dependents out on charity, nor does it pay society in the end. I favor the retirement system, because it is economical; it is humane; it is right.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read. But before he proceeds, the Chair will withdraw the pro forma amendment of the gentleman from Washington. If pro forma amendments should stay in the bill, it might damage the bill a good deal in some respects. [Laughter.]

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Clara A. Harlow, helpless and dependent child of William A. Harlow, late of Company C, Thirty-eighth Regiment Indiana Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 per month.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER] moves to strike out the last word.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Speaker, I have gone over the private pension bills which are incorporated in this omnibus bill with some degree of care, and in each instance I am satisfied that the Committee on Invalid Pensions has rendered a great service to this country as well as to each individual named in the bill.

The object of these private pension bills is to even up inequalities which can not be reached by a general pension bill. Were it not for the opportunity to pass private legislation for this purpose many deserving soldiers, their widows and orphans, would go without relief, and I want to subscribe to the policy of the passage of private pension bills and private claim bills wherever they are needed.

Mr. Speaker, I was indeed glad to hear my colleague from Illinois [Mr. MANN] plant himself upon the plane of equality in dealing with the rights of those who were unfortunate in the war. I only wish that he would be as fair to that great army of men employed in dangerous employments who have received injuries while engaged in toiling for the purpose of satisfying the wants of man. I have repeatedly heard him on the floor of this House contend that a poor laboring man, on a small salary and who had lost one leg, ought to be satisfied with a compensation equal to one year's salary, yet very small, while a man receiving a much larger salary and who had received a less injury should receive a much larger compensation for such injury.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired. Without objection, the pro forma amendment is withdrawn.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I want to oppose the pro forma amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from South Carolina is entitled to five minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I want to ask the gentleman in charge of the bill how many private bills were incorporated into this one omnibus bill?

Mr. ADAIR. Two hundred and fifty-eight.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Does the gentleman know how much the amount involved is?

Mr. ADAIR. The total increase allowed under this bill is $34,098.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. For each month?

Mr. ADAIR. No; annually, or $2,841 a month.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Now, Mr. Speaker, I am willing that the pro forma amendment be withdrawn.

The SPEAKER. If there be no objection, the pro forma amendment will be withdrawn. The Chair understands there was a section passed over.

Mr. ADAIR. Yes.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Jane C. Parrott, widow of ———, late of Company D, Seventeenth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Mr. ADAIR. Mr. Speaker, I move to insert the name of Joseph R. Parrott after the word "of," in line 11, on page 12.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 12, line 11, after the word "of," insert the words "Joseph R. Parrott."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I call up the bill (H. R. 13297) granting pensions and increase of pensions to certain soldiers and sailors of the Regular Army and Navy, and certain soldiers and sailors of wars other than the Civil War, and to widows of such soldiers and sailors, and I ask unanimous consent that it be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEY] asks unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will now report the bill section by section for amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Jennie H. Domingos, widow of John Domingos, late of Company D, Thirteenth Regiment United States Infantry, War with Mexico, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

After the word "receiving," in line 24, on page 2, amend by adding the following:

"The name of Russella J. Ross, widow of Henry L. Ross, second lieutenant Company B, St. Louis Legion Volunteers, Mexican War, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, old age and the infirmities incident thereto, coupled with extreme poverty, have sent old Mrs. York to the poorhouse, where she now is, and the Pension Committee have tabled her application for a pension, because she could not go down into Mexico during the Mexican War and marry Henry L. Ross, whom she did marry a few months after the close of his service.

The facts in this case are these: This woman is now more than 85 years of age. She is a pauper and is an inmate of the poorhouse. She is blind. Her first husband, Henry L. Ross, was a second lieutenant in the St. Louis (Mo.) Legion in the Mexican War. He was mustered out the last of August, 1846. About three months after he was mustered out the petitioner married him and lived with him until he died. She remained a widow for a number of years and then married a man by the name of York, and he died some years ago. The committee say there is no general law which will reach this case. I know that. If there was a general law that would reach all pension cases, there would be no use for any pension committee.

Mr. SHERWOOD. How long did she live with the Mexican soldier?

Mr. THOMAS. I do not know; four or five years, I think.

Mr. LANGLEY. What was the length of his service?

Mr. THOMAS. About one year, I think. I do not remember the exact length of his service, maybe some months. At any rate, she is in that condition I have just described. Now, the Pension Committee is, or ought to be, a court of equity to grant pensions in meritorious cases. If every meritorious petitioner could receive a pension under the general law, there would be no pension committees and no need of pension committees.

This committee sent me a little slip of paper informing me that they had tabled this application because this woman did not marry the soldier during his term of service. In this very bill they have pensioned Mrs. Clara Fisher and her two children——

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. THOMAS. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. THOMAS. Mrs. Fisher is comparatively a young woman, the widow of a Spanish-American War veteran. She married her husband four years after his term of service expired, and the committee report that he himself was not pensioned under the general law. He made application for a pension, but could not prove his claim, and she never applied to the Pension Bureau for a pension, but she applied to this committee; and although the soldier had not received any proved injuries or contracted any disease in the service, and although she married him four years after his term of service expired, yet this committee granted to this young woman a pension, but refused to pension the blind, pauper widow of a Mexican War veteran. [Applause.]

Mr. SHERWOOD. Did the gentleman say that this woman did not exhaust her right in the Pension Office before she applied to the committee?

Mr. THOMAS. This report says, if I mistake not, that that is the fact. I do not think I am mistaken in that.

Mr. LANGLEY. That is probably a case where it was manifest that she had no status under the general law.

Mr. ANSBERRY. The case of Mrs. Fisher, which has just been mentioned, is a case from my district, and I introduced the bill myself. The reason she did not make application to the Pension Office was because it was a case that on the face of it showed that she could not get a pension under the general law. And it is not unusual for cases to be reported out here, not only by this committee but by the Invalid Pensions Committee, under similar facts. In other words, they do not require soldiers' widows and soldiers' orphans to do a needless or useless thing, as it would be in this case.

Mr. THOMAS. Nevertheless, it is a fact that neither she nor her husband had any pensionable status. The gentleman, however, is, if I mistake not, on the Invalid Pensions Committee, and there is a sort of reciprocity between the two committees.

Mr. ANSBERRY. The gentleman is mistaken; I have not been on that committee for three years.

Mr. THOMAS. Well, it was what he learned when he was on the committee. [Laughter.]

Mr. ANSBERRY. I learned when I was on that committee to present only proper cases and to abide by the decision of the committee. I will say to the gentleman that my experience with both committees is this: That if the proof in his case is what he says it is, this committee will give this soldier's widow a pension.

Mr. THOMAS. The proof, I think, is just as I stated it. He served in the St. Louis (Mo.) Legion in the Mexican War, and that is proved. He married this woman after he came out of the service, and that is proved. She is blind and in the poorhouse to-day, and that is proved. And I ask this House to grant this old Mexican War veteran's widow a pension of $20 a month that she may end her last days out of the poorhouse. She is now over 85 years of age. [Applause.]

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman when did the committee send him notice that they had rejected the claim on the ground that she had married the soldier after the service?

Mr. THOMAS. I think they sent it to me last week. They have been sending it to me for the last two or three years. I have been trying to get the committee to pass this claim, but they have turned it down every time.

Mr. LANGLEY. Did my colleague present this argument that he has made here to the committee?

Mr. THOMAS. No; not to the committee.

Mr. KEATING. Did the gentleman appear before the committee or any subcommittee?

Mr. THOMAS. No; but I talked with individual members.

Mr. KEATING. The gentleman did not appear before a committee or a subcommittee?

Mr. THOMAS. I did not at this session of Congress appear before the committee. I have been before the committee, and they told me they did not hear Members.

Mr. KEATING. The gentleman understands that a new committee is appointed every Congress?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes. I did not go before the committee at this session of Congress because I have been informed that it was useless to go before the committee, as it did not hear argument in pension cases.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, as a member of the committee, it seems to me that we should make some statement in regard to this case. As a matter of fact, the committee grants a pension of $20 a month to the widows of Mexican War veterans almost as a matter of form. I do not recall this particular case, and upon consultation with other members of the committee I find that there is no gentleman in the vicinity who does recollect the details of this case. But the fact that we did not grant this particular widow $20 a month is evidence, to my mind, that there is something in the record that has not been disclosed by the gentleman from Kentucky. I assure this House that if there is nothing in the record which should prevent the granting of this increase, and the gentleman will appear before the committee, the committee will gladly reconsider the case and will grant the widow $20 a month. The committee goes over these cases with a great deal of care and endeavors to grant increases to those who are deserving and to refuse increases to those who do not deserve them. We will treat this case exactly as we treat every other case of the widow of a Mexican War veteran.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KEATING. Yes.

Mr. DYER. The gentleman is a member of the Committee on Pensions?

Mr. KEATING. Yes.

Mr. DYER. Will the gentleman state how many claims they have allowed widows of Spanish War veterans?

Mr. KEATING. This is a Mexican War veteran.

Mr. DYER. I know; but how many widows of Spanish War veterans has the committee pensioned?

Mr. KEATING. This is the first bill reported by the committee.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I will state, with the permission of the gentleman from Colorado, that this is the first omnibus bill that the Committee on Pensions has had this year. As a general rule the Committee on Pensions has about two bills during the month of December and one bill during the month of January. This bill contains 44 names. There is 1 item for the widow of a soldier in the Indian war, 8 for Mexican War widows, and 12 original claims in the War with Spain.

Mr. DYER. For widows?

Mr. KEY of Ohio. No. Seven increases in the War with Spain, four widows original in the War with Spain, three minors in the War with Spain, four members of the Regular Establishment for increase, three widows of members of the Regular Establishment for increase, two original members of the Regular Establishment, and two widows original.

Mr. DYER. I thank the gentleman for the information, and I would like to ask one further question of the acting chairman. I understand the committee has reported a bill to the House providing for the widows of Spanish War veterans regardless of whether the soldier died or was disabled in the service.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. The committee is authorized to report a bill of that character.

Mr. DYER. Does the gentleman think that it will be considered at this Congress?

Mr. KEY of Ohio. I think so, and hope so.

Mr. DYER. I am glad to hear it.

Mr. LANGLEY. So am I.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, I trust the House will not adopt the amendment submitted by the gentleman from Kentucky. I hope they will manifest sufficient confidence in the committee to leave the matter with the committee. I assure the House that in case the record is without a flaw the committee will give this widow $20 a month.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Kentucky a question.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kentucky has not got the floor yet.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Then, Mr. Speaker, I will take the floor for the purpose of asking the gentleman a question. Is the widow in this case drawing any pension now?

Mr. THOMAS. None whatever. She could not obtain a pension under the general law.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Did her husband ever draw a pension?

Mr. THOMAS. No; he died along about 1849 or 1850; I do not know the exact date.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman one more question?

Mr. THOMAS. Yes.

Mr. KEATING. How long was she married to her second husband?

Mr. THOMAS. She was married to her second husband, I think, six or eight years.

Mr. KEATING. Is it not a fact that it is about 30 years since she was married to her second husband?

Mr. THOMAS. No; I think not.

Mr. KEATING. I recall such a case as that.

Mr. THOMAS. I would not be positive about that; but I think not. That would not make any difference in any event.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the gentleman from Kentucky.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

The name of Henrietta Lee Coulling, widow of William M. Coulling, late major and quartermaster, United States Army, Regular Establishment, and pay her a pension at the rate of $50 per month in lieu of that she is now receiving, and $2 per month additional for minor child until it reaches the age of 16 years.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 8, page 8, insert as a new paragraph:
"The name of William H. Franks, late of Company I, First Regiment United States Cavalry, and pay him a pension at the rate of $12 a month."

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, two weeks ago I offered this amendment to an invalid-pension bill. It was not properly an item that should have gone in that bill, but I stated the facts on that occasion.

This old man is more than 80 years of age. He served five years on the frontier, from 1855 or 1856 to 1860 or 1861. His service was that of a cavalryman, which carried him all through the States of Utah, Wyoming, Kansas, Nebraska, and that section of the country. He was engaged in frontier service. The old man has no money and he has not many more weeks to live. I can not show to the Committee on Pensions that his present poverty and disability are due to his service. I am perfectly candid with the Committee on Pensions and with the House, but I believe that those five years of service in the days of his young manhood and strength must add to his disability in his old age. I was taught when I was a young man that every draft drawn on nature must be paid some day. If that be a true proposition, it must follow that these 5 years of arduous service of this man more than 50 years ago add something to his present disabled condition.

Mr. SHERWOOD. How old is he now?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. More than 80 years old, and he has no property and is not able to earn anything.

Mr. SHERWOOD. How much does the gentleman ask for him?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Twelve dollars a month. He served five years in the Regular Army as a cavalryman. I leave it to the House.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, did the gentleman have this before the Committee on Pensions?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I have had this before the Committee on Pensions for several years.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Before which committee?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I do not know. I have talked to individual members of the committee, but I frankly stated to the gentlemen the facts, just as I have stated them here. I can not show that his present disability and poverty are due to his Army service. I am simply asking that you give the old man $12 a month.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. I would like to state that I am sure if the gentleman had submitted the evidence to the committee just as he states, it would have been willing to grant this pension.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. It has already been filed before the committee. I have filed the evidence of his age and the service, that he is not able to do any work, and that he has not any property. If you want to give him $12 a month, now is the time to do it. He can not wait much longer. He will soon be dead.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KEY of Ohio) there were—ayes 18, noes 38.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

The names of Helen M., Emery R., and Glenia N. Sarver, minor children of Dr. E. Sarver, late of Company G, Second Regiment West Virginia Volunteer Infantry, War with Spain, and pay them a pension at the rate of $12 per month, to be apportioned equally between them as long as they are minor children, and when one ceases to draw his or her share it is to be immediately apportioned between the other two, and when one of these two ceases to draw his or her share it is to go to the remaining minor child; and also, in addition to the above pension apportionment, each child is to receive $2 per month until it becomes 16 years of age.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of line 25, page 8, add the following:
"The name of Sarah Jane Scurlock, widow of Benjamin F. Gordon, bugler, First Missouri Volunteer Cavalry, War with Mexico, and pay her a pension at the rate of $20 per month."

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Speaker, the case of Mrs. Scurlock has been before the Committee on Pensions. Technically she has no pensionable status. Her husband served one year in the Mexican War with honor and credit, and was honorably discharged.

Mr. SHERWOOD. The first year of the war or the last year of the war?

Mr. TAGGART. I think he enlisted in 1846. He died about 1866. She was not entitled to a pension then, because he served in the Confederate Army. He was Brig. Gen. Benjamin F. Gordon, originally of the First Missouri Volunteer Infantry, Confederate Army, and afterwards promoted to the rank of brigadier general. Several years after his death she married a man named Scurlock. The marriage was unfortunate. Her children obliged her to get a separation from Scurlock. She has no pensionable status at this time, because she is not technically the widow of Benjamin F. Gordon.

Mr. SHERWOOD. How long did she live with Gordon?

Mr. TAGGART. She lived with him until his death, from 1851 to 1866—15 years.

Mr. ANSBERRY. Was Gordon, the first husband, a Confederate veteran?

Mr. TAGGART. Yes.

Mr. ANSBERRY. And the gentleman says she could not get a pension?

Mr. TAGGART. Right after the war she could not get a pension. I forget the year when the prohibition was lifted, but I think 1879. She could not get a pension until 1889 on account of the death of her husband, who served in the Mexican War, unless she could prove that he died from wounds or disease contracted in the service.

Mr. ANSBERRY. He afterwards served in the Confederate Army?

Mr. TAGGART. Yes.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. And the gentleman's claim is for the Mexican War?

Mr. TAGGART. Yes. This woman is past the age of 80 years. The records which the committee has will show that she was married as early as 1851, 63 years ago.

We have been generous to a degree to the men who served in the Union Army and the loved ones whom they left behind them. I am going to ask you to vote for this amendment, and let us send a message to the old lady, who has passed the age of 80 years and is in practically destitute circumstances, that we have not forgotten the services of her husband.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAGGART. I will.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Has this case been before the Pension Committee?

Mr. TAGGART. It is before the Pension Committee, and because she is not now the widow of the Mexican War soldier the committee could not consider it.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. When was the case before this committee?

Mr. TAGGART. A year or more ago.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. Well, that committee is dead now, as it were.

Mr. TAGGART. The rule is not dead.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. That is true. What are rules for? If they are to be ignored, we may as well resign and get out of the way.

Mr. TAGGART. I am not going to ignore the committee.

Mr. KIRKPATRICK. I will say for the Pension Committee that that committee has been very patriotic in granting pensions. I am frank to say to you, gentlemen of the House, that that committee is willing to make a flat rate on pensions to every widow pensioner of the Mexican War.

Mr. TAGGART. But let me say to the gentleman from Iowa that possibly I did not make myself sufficiently clear. She is not a widow at this time of a soldier of the Mexican War. She married another man after the soldier's death. She is now the widow of that man, and technically has no status under the law or under the rules of the committee.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TAGGART] yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. TAGGART. I do.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. I observe a very unusual spectacle here in the House this afternoon. We have on one hand the gentleman from Texas claiming that we are too liberal in granting pensions, and on the other hand we hear gentlemen claiming we are not liberal enough with pensions.

Now, the Committee on Pensions has gone into these cases very carefully. The examiner, a trained man from the Pension Bureau, a man who is learned in the pension law, has gone into these cases. They have been carefully taken up by the various subcommittees when they have had an opportunity to do so. I would like to ask the gentleman if his case has been properly brought before the present Committee on Pensions?

Mr. TAGGART. The case is pending before the present Committee on Pensions; but the case, as I regard it, is absolutely hopeless before that committee, and I will tell you why. The Committee on Pensions has a rule that is absolutely fixed, so far as I know, that when a woman is not the widow of a soldier at this time the committee will not grant relief. Now, if that is true, we have a specific case here that can not be treated under the rules of the committee and is a proper case to be brought before the House.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAGGART. I will.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Will the evidence show that this woman is the widow or ever was the widow of a Mexican War soldier?

Mr. TAGGART. The evidence shows that this woman was for a good many years the widow of a Mexican War soldier.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. If you refer that to the committee, you can get it in.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TAGGART] has expired.

Mr. TAGGART. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. If that is true, you will have no trouble with this committee. I am a member of that committee, and I know the rule that has been referred to by the gentleman.

Mr. TAGGART. I say that the rules of your committee will not allow you, as stated by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KEY], to grant a pension to one who is not at this time the widow of the soldier.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. She is the widow of the soldier, if she ever was, whether she is the widow of anyone else now or not. She is a double widow.

Mr. LANGLEY. The fact of subsequent marriage and widowhood does not operate as a bar to the jurisdiction of the committee, as I understand its rules.

Mr. TAGGART. This case was before the Committee on Pensions. It was ruled out for the reason that she had no status, and could not be pensioned under any theory of law. If she had been a widow of a soldier who served in the Federal Army, if she were his wife at the time of the war, and subsequently married another man after his death, and that man died, and when a number of conditions—I think six of them—concur, she can be restored to the pension roll if she has ever been on the pension roll. But the widow of a Mexican War veteran has no status under the law under those circumstances, and the committee is unable to grant relief under the rule.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Will the gentleman yield?

The SPEAKER. Will the gentleman from Kansas yield to the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. TAGGART. I will.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. I would like to ask the gentleman if the widow was divorced from her second husband.

Mr. TAGGART. She was.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. Did she obtain the divorce from the soldier or the soldier obtain the divorce?

Mr. TAGGART. She obtained it, and the record is here.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. It seems rather unusual, and I do not understand why the committee should have turned this case down if the facts are as claimed by the gentleman from Kansas. I am sure that if the case is properly brought before the committee and proper evidence submitted, if the facts are as you claim they are, the committee will grant a pension in a case of that kind.

Mr. LANGLEY and Mr. THOMSON of Illinois rose.

The SPEAKER. To whom does the gentleman yield?

Mr. TAGGART. I will yield to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY].

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Speaker, my understanding from what the gentleman said was that he brought this case before the present Committee on Pensions and, if I am not mistaken, that committee turned the case down. The gentleman from Kansas merely desires to bring it before the House before the committee itself has acted upon it.

Mr. TAGGART. Now, I will ask the gentleman a question. The gentleman asked leave to interrogate me and then lectured me.

Mr. LANGLEY. Oh, no; I wanted to get at the facts. If I am wrong, I will apologize to the gentleman. I wanted to see if I had understood the gentleman's position.

Mr. TAGGART. My position is simply this: I presume—and, in fact, I know—that the rules of your committee are precisely the same as they were a year ago.

Mr. LANGLEY. I am not a member of the Committee on Pensions, but a member of the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Mr. TAGGART. I understand; and this does not come before the gentleman's committee.

Mr. LANGLEY. It comes before me as a Member of the House.

Mr. TAGGART. Now we understand each other. The case is no better than it was a year ago. The committee has improved, I think, but I do not believe the case has improved.

Mr. LANGLEY. Does the gentleman wish to incorporate his amendment in this bill now, when the committee has not acted adversely upon it?

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, personally I think we ought to stand by the committee on these propositions. I do not see how it is practicable for the membership of the House, in the House, to determine the merits of a particular case. If the gentleman who offers the amendment had been before the committee and the committee had declined to act favorably upon his bill, and if it involves a principle, it might properly be brought before the House, but if it depends on the facts the House can not ascertain them.

But, Mr. Speaker, I should not have risen to say a word on this bill if it had not been for the position of the Committee on Pensions. Two of the distinguished Members of this House who have been members of that committee, I believe, have resigned from the committee. One of them, unknown to many of the new Members of the House, was the chairman of the Committee on Pensions, the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON], an old Confederate soldier, who at one time was ordered to be shot when captured by the Union forces. Everyone here who has known him has known him only to love him, and if ever there was a man who wrapped himself around the hearts of those who became acquainted with him, I think it was RICHARDSON of Alabama. [Applause.]

Then there is the other gentleman who has recently resigned from that committee, who was the parliamentarian in the last Congress, the parliamentarian in Congress many years ago, who was elected to Congress many years ago, and again elected to Congress, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. CRISP] [applause], who on account of his health has resigned from that committee and, as I am informed, has taken his temporary departure from the city in the hope of regaining his health. The Pensions Committee, with strong men still upon it, was blessed with the strength of these two men, and I voice the sentiment of everyone in the hope that their health may be restored and their lives prolonged. [Applause.]

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman who offered this amendment a question, if I may.

Mr. TAGGART. I will have to ask unanimous consent for two minutes in which to answer the question.

The SPEAKER. He can ask the question in his own time.

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. I would like to ask the gentleman whether this matter that is involved in the amendment he now offers is now pending before the committee?

Mr. TAGGART. The status of it is simply this: I had it before the committee a year ago or more. The committee refused to consider it under the rules.

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. That is not this committee.

Mr. TAGGART. No; that is not this committee. I left it again with the committee, and the claim was marked "Rejected," as having no status; and that is the situation at the present time.

I would not present this amendment to the House—I would not think of presenting it to the House—without first having had it considered by the committee unless I took it for granted that the rules of the committee absolutely precluded the committee from considering it.

Mr. THOMSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I agree with what my colleague [Mr. MANN] said a few minutes ago, when he stated that he felt the House should stand by the committee and that it was difficult for us to judge of the merits of these cases when presented on the floor in this way, because it is impossible to get at the facts in the few moments allowed when an attempt is made to get consideration of them in the House.

In view of the expressions that have come from various members of the committee, to the effect that on the statement of the case made by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. TAGGART], they feel the committee would be justified in giving the amendment favorable consideration, and would so act if the gentleman would come before them, it seems there is every reason why the matter that is the subject matter of this amendment should go before the Subcommittee on Pensions.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. KEATING. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the Committee on Pensions, I would like again to ask the House to reject this amendment. And, to illustrate how easy it is to advance claims of a questionable character by presenting them in the House, I want to call attention to the record in the case presented by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. THOMAS]. I have no doubt that the gentleman from Kentucky, relying upon his recollection of the record, endeavored to state the facts, but, as a matter of fact, he did not state the facts.

This is the record prepared by our pension examiner: It shows that Henry L. Ross was a second lieutenant in the Mexican War and that he served for three months. After quitting the Army, he married on December 8, 1846, and died June 24, 1847. He was married for six months. In 1871 his widow remarried. She lived with her second husband for 36 years. He had no military record. The committee felt that under all the circumstances that was not a good claim.

Mr. THOMAS. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Colorado yield to the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. KEATING. Yes.

Mr. THOMAS. Is the gentleman reading the record of that case, or a statement prepared by some clerk?

Mr. KEATING. This is the record prepared by our examiner, Mr. Speaker; and, fortunately, the evidence is here to sustain it. I cite this merely to illustrate the danger of amending these pension bills on the floor of the House on the hastily considered statements of Members.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was rejected.

The Clerk resumed and completed the reading of the bill.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. Two weeks ago to-day I offered an amendment to the invalid pension bill. To-day I offered that same amendment to the pension bill. In both instances the amendment was rejected. I want to pay my respects to the Committee on Pensions. The bill now before the House is the first bill that that committee has reported in this Congress. I want to say that in the case I referred to in my amendment the bill has been introduced, and the affidavits have been filed, and it is the business of that committee to get them from the file clerk or their own clerk and consider and report some of those bills. I give notice now that there will not be many more pension bills passed here without a quorum unless some of these cases are investigated and reported.

Mr. KEATING. Will the gentleman yield for just a moment?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Yes.

Mr. KEATING. The gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON], the chairman of this committee, is ill.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. There are plenty of other members of the committee.

Mr. KEATING. But that is what has prevented the committee from considering the case.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I hope the committee will consider bills hereafter.

Mr. KEATING. We will consider the gentleman's bill.

Mr. MANN. I should like to ask the gentleman from South Carolina a question.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will soon have charge of the legislative appropriation bill, and he knows that no amendment to that bill will be carried unless he approves it.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. But the "gentleman from South Carolina" spends every day in the week in the committee room considering these matters that ought to be considered before he brings in a bill.

Mr. MANN. That may be. I do not see that that makes any difference. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. JOHNSON] has been well, while the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON], who is chairman of the Pensions Committee, has been ill. I think it ill becomes the gentleman to reflect upon the Pensions Committee under such circumstances.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I am not reflecting on the chairman of the Committee on Pensions. Everybody knows that the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. RICHARDSON], the chairman of that committee, is a sick man, but there are plenty of other members of the committee who could carry on the work.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last two words. I want to call the attention of the House to an editorial appearing this morning in the New York Herald. I want to read it, because it is a remarkable business comment. It is entitled:

THE BUSINESS BOOM.

In this country, in spite of the croakers——

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to make the point of order against this.

Mr. HARDWICK. The gentleman will not make anything by making a point of order, and he knows that as well as I do.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether I will or not. If the gentleman wants to go into a political discussion, I am perfectly willing. The gentleman will have an opportunity later on the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. HARDWICK. I know; but there is no need for the gentleman to be captious. This will not take over five minutes, and it will take more time than that if the gentleman insists on his point of order.

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order. The gentleman can occupy all the time he pleases.

The SPEAKER. What point of order does the gentleman make?

Mr. MANN. I make the point of order that the gentleman is not discussing anything connected with this bill.

The SPEAKER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. HARDWICK. Then I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I hope the gentleman will not make that point of order. The Indian appropriation bill is coming up in a few minutes for general debate, and I will give the gentleman his opportunity then.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman from Georgia is constantly complaining if anyone over here says anything in the way of political debate.

Mr. HARDWICK. No; I have been pretty fair to the gentlemen on that side.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I hope the gentleman will withdraw his point.

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman insist on his point of order?

Mr. HARDWICK. I will withhold it. Is there much more to this bill?

The SPEAKER. The consideration of the bill is finished except the gentleman's five minutes. Does the gentleman withdraw his point of no quorum?

Mr. HARDWICK. I do.

The SPEAKER. The pro forma amendment is also withdrawn. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. ASHBROOK, for 10 days, to attend his father's ninetieth birthday celebration.

To Mr. GRAY, for two days, on account of illness.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I desire to call up House bill 6464, for the relief of Charles R. Grant. The bill does not involve the expenditure of any public money, but is merely to muster him in and muster him out of the service.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is this a pension bill?

Mr. GORDON. It is not.

The SPEAKER. There is another pension bill.

Mr. GORDON. I was not aware of that.

FORSYTH SCOUTS.

The next pension bill on the Private Calendar was the bill (H. R. 10594) granting a pension to the Forsyth Scouts, and to widows of the deceased members of said organization.

The SPEAKER. It is in order to make a motion to go into Committee of the Whole to consider pension bills.

Mr. FRENCH. I ask unanimous consent that this bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I should like to ask how much this bill involves?

Mr. FRENCH. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from South Carolina asks how much is involved in the pending bill. I think a very brief explanation of the bill will be sufficient to convince him and the other Members of the Congress that the measure should pass.

The bill provides for granting a pension to the Forsyth Scouts and to the widows of the deceased members of this organization, and it has the unanimous report of the Committee on Pensions, the members of which have given the measure most careful consideration after complete hearings. The bill provides for the granting of a pension of $20 per month to each of the surviving members of the Forsyth Scouts and $12 per month to each of the widows of deceased members of the organization. At the time the bill was reported there were six surviving members. Within the last few weeks, however, one of this number has died. Also when the bill was reported there were five widows, of whom one has died since that time.

The amount involved for our Government is inconsiderable. The principle involved of recognizing the Forsyth Scouts in this manner is one that is of intense interest to the West, and the recognition of the surviving members of the noble organization known as the Forsyth Scouts and to the widows of the deceased members of the organization is tardy recognition of service that can only be compared with the most heroic service ever given in the upbuilding of our country.

The history of the Forsyth Scouts and the experience of the members of this organization reads like a page from the life of Daniel Boone or Kit Carson, and equals the choice imagination of those who have written of frontier life and the sacrifices that were made by people, some of whom are still among us, for the conquest and upbuilding of the West.

One of the serious consequences to the West that occurred as a result of the great Civil War was the lessening of vigilance upon the part of the Government in maintaining order and peace among lawless bands of Indians and certain Indian tribes throughout a section of country extending from the Dakotas and Minnesota on the north, through the States of Nebraska, Kansas, and Colorado, and on down to Texas upon the south, as well as other territory still farther west.

During the years immediately following the close of the war many depredations were committeed by the Indians. Communities were wiped out; men and women and children were murdered; women and children were carried away by lawless bands; property was destroyed; fields were ravaged and barns burned, and cattle and horses were driven away.

It was not an uncommon occurrence for members of a party who were going West in the canvas-covered wagons to be attacked and to be destroyed and their property confiscated. The building of the Union Pacific Railway, which connected the Pacific with the Atlantic, seemed to be especially objectionable to the Indians and probably spurred on many of their number to lawless deeds.

The records show that in the year 1868, from June until December, 154 settlers and freighters were killed in this territory, numerous women and children were carried away, and havoc and outrage visited upon many communities.

The Government maintained military headquarters at Fort Leavenworth, and Gen. Philip H. Sheridan was department commander of the military forces that embraced nearly all of the territory in which the depredations were being committed. Upon the staff of Gen. Sheridan was Gen. George A. Forsyth, who in 1868 was a major with the brevet of colonel.

Gen. Sheridan had observed the peculiar character of warfare that was carried on by the Indians. He recognized that many of the depredations were committed by comparatively small bands, and it occurred to him that it would be of tremendous value if he could supplement his forces made up of cavalry and infantry by an organization to be known as scouts and to be made up of the hardy frontiersmen who were familiar with western conditions, who knew the habits of the Indians, and who knew something of the country.

He called Gen. George A. Forsyth into his council and asked him if he would take command of an organization of 50 men of the character indicated, with Lieut. Fred Beecher, of the United States Third Infantry, as second in command. This was in the latter part of August, 1868.

Gen. Forsyth responded that he would, and within an hour his commission was handed to him in the following language:

HEADQUARTERS DEPARTMENT OF THE MISSOURI,
Fort Harker, August 24, 1868.

Bvt. Col. GEORGE A. FORSYTH,
Acting Assistant Inspector General, Department of the Missouri.

COLONEL: The general commanding directs that you, without delay, employ 50 first-class, hardy frontiersmen, to be used as scouts against the hostile Indians, to be commanded by yourself, with Lieut. Beecher, Third Infantry, as your subordinate. You can enter into such articles of agreement with these men as will compel obedience.

I am, sir, very respectfully, your obedient servant,
(Signed) J. SCHUYLER CROSBY,
Aid-de-camp and Acting Assistant Adjutant General.

Within two days Gen. Forsyth had enrolled 40 men at Fort Harker; and marching from there to Fort Hayes, 60 miles westward, he completed the enrollment of 50 scouts, and on the 20th of August, five days after he had been commissioned to undertake this service, he was in the field. The equipment of this band of scouts was simple. A blanket apiece, saddle and bridle, lariat and pick pin, a canteen, a haversack, butcher knife, tin plate, and tin cup. A Spencer repeating rifle, a Colt's revolver, 140 rounds of rifle and 30 rounds of revolver ammunition per man completed the equipment that was carried by each person.

There was a pack train of four mules, carrying such ordinary equipments as were necessary, and, in addition, 4,000 extra rounds of ammunition and certain medical supplies.

The names of those who were upon the original roll of Gen. Forsyth were as follows:

First Lieut. Fred H. Beecher, Third Infantry, United States Army; Acting Asst. Surg. J. H. Mooers, of the Medical Department, United States Army; Abner T. Grover, chief scout; William H. McCall, first sergeant; W. Armstrong; Thomas Alderdice; Martin Burke; Wallace Bennett; G. W. Chalmers; G. B. Clarke; John Donovan; Bernard Day; Alfred Dupont; A. J. Entler; Louis Farley; Hudson Farley; Richard Gantt; George Green; John Haley; John Hurst; Frank Harrington; J. H. Ketterer; John Lyden; M. R. Lane; Joseph Lane; C. B. Nichols; George Oakes; M. R. Mapes; Thomas Murphy; Howard Morton; H. T. McGrath; Thomas O'Donnell; C. C. Pinatt; A. J. Pilley; William Reilly; Thomas Ranahan; Chalmers Smith; J. S. Stillwell; S. Schlesinger; Edward Simpson; William Stewart; H. H. Tucker; Isaac Thayer; Pierre Truedeau; Fletcher Violett; William Wilson; C. B. Whitney; John Wilson; Eli Ziegler; Louis McLaughlin; Harry Davenport; T. K. Davis.

The guide of the expedition was Sharp Grover, a man well posted in Indian matters and one who could speak the dialect of the Sioux. A few days later Gen. Forsyth received the following letter from Gen. Sheridan:

FORT HAYS, KANS., August 29, 1868.

Bvt. Col. GEORGE A. FORSYTH,
Commanding Detachment of Scouts:

I would suggest that you move across the headwaters of Solomon (River) to Beaver Creek, thence down that creek to Fort Wallace. On arrival at Wallace report to me by telegraph at this place.

Yours, very truly,
P. H. SHERIDAN, Major General.

This letter directed Gen. Forsyth, who was at that time at Fort Hays, in Kansas, to move across the headwaters of Solomon River to Salina River and to go down Rock Creek to Fort Wallace and to report from there to Gen. Sheridan in Kansas and immediately set out for the scene of the disturbance.

Very shortly after this the expedition was advised of an attack that had just been made upon an immigrant train near Sheridan, about 12 miles distant, and it was determined to pursue the Indians who had committed the outrage.

Two of the teamsters had been killed and some of the teams had been carried away. Gen. Forsyth did not believe that the band of Indians consisted of more than a small number, possibly 35. He set out in pursuit. He believed that with 51 men they at least could protect themselves and possibly defeat the Indians.

After five days of scouting and traveling he found himself on the north bank of the Republican River, where Indians had recently been, and by following what was apparently the trail of the Indians his band reached the Arickaree Fork of the Republican River in Colorado, where his party encamped at night.

On September 16 the party had nearly reached the Indians, but at the same time were nearly out of food. At this point camp was made, and on the early morning of September 17 it was suddenly observed by the sentry that Indians were approaching and the alarm was sounded. Gen. Forsyth's scouts began to defend themselves at once, as the Indians rushed on, and within a few moments every man was in his saddle, with the exception of two whose horses had been stampeded by the excitement. At that moment it seemed that instead of a small band of Indians an immense number had all at once sprung out of the ground, and the Forsyth party found itself completely surrounded and outnumbered.

By the side of where the Forsyth camp was there was an island in the river, and I recall that one of the brave scouts, Thomas Ranahan, of Weiser, Idaho, in testifying before the committee declared that God Himself had placed the island in the river at that point for their protection.

The Forsyth Scouts took their position on Beecher Island and laid down, facing the Indians. From this position the scouts continued the defense of themselves, and did their best to pick off the Indians who drew within the range of a rifle shot. The Indians continued the attack. By not much after 9 o'clock of the first day of the battle all the horses belonging to the Forsyth Scouts had been killed. It was soon apparent that the Indians involved in the battle—nearly 1,000 in number—were the Ogallalahs, the Brûlé-Sioux, and Dog Soldiers, a name applied to about 100 renegade Sioux, and also the northern Cheyennes. They were under the command of Roman Nose. The battle continued all day. The men had lain there in imminent danger of death, and several of their number were killed. Lieut. Beecher, Sergt. Mooers, Chalmers, Smith, Wilson, Farley, and Day were either dead or dying. Fourteen or fifteen others, including Gen. Forsyth, were wounded.

That night a rain occurred, and the suffering of the men in a country where the nights are chill, although the days are hot, can hardly be imagined. The surgeon of the company was unconscious and was dying. The next day the battle continued, a sort of desultory fighting, in which only one scout was hit, and he was not severely injured. The third day fighting again continued, although it was beginning to be apparent that the Indians were scattering. Many of their number had been killed. On the night of September 19 Gen. Forsyth sent the following message to Col. Bankhead at Fort Wallace:

ON DELAWARE CREEK, REPUBLICAN RIVER,
September 19, 1868.

To Col. BANKHEAD or COMMANDING OFFICER,
Fort Wallace:

I sent you two messengers on the night of the 17th instant, informing you of my critical condition. I tried to send two more last night, but they did not succeed in passing the Indian pickets and returned. If the others have not arrived, then hasten at once to my assistance. I have 8 badly wounded and 10 slightly wounded men to take in, and every animal I had was killed save seven which the Indians stampeded. Lieut. Beecher is dead and Acting Asst. Surg. Mooers probably can not live the night out. He was hit in the head Thursday, and has spoken but one rational word since. I am wounded in two places—in the right thigh and my left leg broken below the knee. The Cheyennes alone numbered 450 or more. Mr. Grover says they never fought so before. They were splendidly armed with Spencer and Henry rifles. We killed at least 35 of them and wounded many more, besides killing and wounding a quantity of their stock. They carried off most of their killed during the night, but three of their men fell into our hands. I am on a little island and have still plenty of ammunition left. We are living on mule and horse meat, and are entirely out of rations. If it was not for so many wounded, I would come in and take the chances of whipping them if attacked. They are evidently sick of their bargain.

I had two of the members of my company killed on the 17th, namely, William Wilson and George W. Chalmers. You had better start with not less than 75 men, and bring all the wagons and ambulances you can spare. Bring a 6-pound howitzer with you. I can hold out here for six days longer if absolutely necessary, but please lose no time.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

GEORGE A. FORSYTH,
United States Army, Commanding Company Scouts.

P. S.—My surgeon having been mortally wounded, none of my wounded men have had their wounds dressed yet, so please bring out a surgeon with you.

The battle continued in this way for several days, and finally, in response to the message that had been sent out at night by a couple of the brave scouts, Donovan and Pliley, a troop of the Tenth Cavalry, under Lieut. Col. H. H. Carpenter, appeared over the hills, and in a short time was at the scene of the battle with his infantry. In less than an hour Col. Brisbine, with the Second Cavalry, was there.

The Indians failing in their purpose vanished but did not surrender.

Most of the surviving members of the organization, following the Battle of Beecher Island, continued their service in the Nineteenth Kansas Regiment, and others continued their service under Lieut. Pappoon, of the Tenth Cavalry of the United States Army. Gen. Forsyth was badly wounded and was in a hospital for 2 years and 11 months following the engagement.

As I stated at first, only six of the Forsyth scouts were believed to have been alive at the time the report was made on this bill, and only five widows, though there are a few who have not been heard from for many years and are believed to be dead.

Such, in brief, is the history of the service of the Forsyth scouts and the story of the battle in which they participated and which marks the most conspicuous service that these men rendered.

I have only outlined their service. I have not attempted to more than indicate the frightful suffering of this band of men as they lay on Beecher Island surrounded by nearly 1,000 Indians who were well armed—in fact, in some instances better armed than the scouts themselves. I have not commented on the bravery and worth of Gen. Forsyth nor told of the desperate straits to which his loyal followers were pressed during the most critical days of their compaign.

I have not told of scouts being sent at nighttime from the island to carry the information of the disaster that had overtaken the Forsyth party. I have not told of the horrible experiences of these scouts as they found their way through the hostile lands surrounding Beecher Island, sometimes walking backward to deceive the Indians as to their direction, sometimes crawling upon the ground, and sometimes running; nor of the privations and strain that caused the death of one of their number just as he had reached the nearest fort and had delivered his message. I have not told you how the flesh of their horses that had been killed became their food, nor how, finally, a wolf of the prairie, that came within reach and was shot, became a delicacy that could be tasted only by the wounded. These are experiences that can never be appreciated by those who did not meet them and can only be approached by those who will take time to read the history of the developments of our western country.

The company of Forsyth Scouts was an organization unique in composition. It was organized but three years after the Civil War, and was made up in part of men who had worn the gray and in part of men who had worn the blue and in part of men whose life had been on the frontier during the struggle between the North and the South, and who had seen and experienced the hardships of the West. It was a motley crowd; it was made up of men of the various nationalities whose blood has been blended into the making of our western citizens.

As long ago as the early seventies the question of pensioning the Forsyth Scouts was considered by the Government, and on December 5, 1872, the pensionable status of the members of the company was considered by the Secretary of War, and a letter addressed to the Commissioner of Pensions set forth the following condition:

DECEMBER 5, 1872.

To the COMMISSIONER OF PENSIONS,
Washington, D. C.

SIR: I have had under consideration the subject of the relation of the organization known as "Forsyth's Scouts," a body raised and mustered in by Col. Forsyth, of the Army, for service in the Indian campaign of 1868 and 1869, and which served with credit during that campaign to the military establishment of the United States, the question having been raised by your inquiry of the 24th of September, indorsed by The Adjutant General, whether this body "is considered as having been a regularly organized force, and recognized as such by the War Department."

The Lieutenant General of the Army reports that these scouts were raised from the absolute necessity that existed for the services of such men in the Indian campaign of 1868 and 1869. They were all sworn to obey the officers set over them and abide by the regulations of the United States, were commanded by officers of the Army, and served most faithfully. The work performed by them was invaluable.

While in view of these facts it would afford me pleasure to see a pension granted to any of these scouts who were disabled while in the employ of the United States, yet it becomes my duty to decide that in a legal point of view they were in no part of the regularly organized military force of the Regular Army.

The papers relating to the claim of Frank Harrington, a member of the company of Forsyth's Scouts, above referred to, pertaining to the files of your office, are herewith returned.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant.

WM. W. BELKNAP,
Secretary of War.

From the letter of Secretary Belknap it will be seen that the organization known as the Forsyth Scouts was a body of men organized and mustered into service by Col. Forsyth in the Army for service in the Indian campaign of 1868 and 1869, and that it served with credit during that campaign as a part of the military establishment of the United States.

The organization of the scouts was made from the absolute necessity that existed for the services of such men in this campaign.

These men were all sworn to obey the officers set over them and abide by the regulations of the United States, were commanded by officers of the Army, and served with a fidelity always asked and expected but seldom required of the American soldier.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. How much do you propose to give these people?

Mr. FRENCH. Twenty dollars a month each to the scouts and $12 a month to the widows.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. And there are about nine of them?

Mr. FRENCH. When the bill was reported there were six of the scouts and five of the widows living, and since the report was made one scout and one widow have died. The gentleman is correct. There are nine survivors—scouts and widows.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. I shall not object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Idaho asks unanimous consent to consider this bill in the House as in Committee of the Whole. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the names of the surviving members of the company of Indian scouts, known as the Forsyth Scouts, commanded by Col. George. A. Forsyth, United States Army, who participated in the battle with the Indians on the Arickaree Fork of the Republican River in Colorado on the 17th day of September, 1868, be placed upon the pension rolls at the rate of $20 per month, and that the names of the widows of the deceased members of said organization be placed upon the pension rolls at the rate of $12 per month.

The Clerk read the following committee amendment:

On page 2, line 2, after the word "month," insert: "Provided, Nothing in this act shall be held to grant or increase in amount any pension authorized by any act of Congress to any member of the Forsyth Scouts or widow of a deceased member."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRENCH. I have the following amendment, which I send up to the Clerk's desk. It has the approval of the committee.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 2, line 2, by inserting, after the word "month," the following words: "from and after the passage of this act."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FRENCH, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CHARLES R. GRANT.

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take up the bill (H. R. 6464) for the relief of Charles R. Grant, and I ask unanimous consent that it may be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent to consider the bill H. R. 6464, and that it be considered in the House as in the Committee of the Whole.

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, let us have the bill reported.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in the administration of any laws conferring rights, privileges, or benefits upon persons who have been honorably discharged from the military service of the United States, Charles R. Grant shall hereafter be held to have been in the military service of the United States as a member of Company F, Twelfth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, from the 15th day of November, 1861, to the 1st day of August, 1863, and to have been discharged honorably as a member of said company and regiment on the latter date: Provided, That the said Charles R. Grant shall not become, under the provisions of this act, eligible to receive a pension or any payment whatever for services rendered to the Government of the United States.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That the Secretary of War be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to muster in and muster out Charles R. Grant, Company F, Twelfth Regiment Connecticut Volunteer Infantry, Civil War: Provided, however, That this act shall not confer upon him any right to pay, annuities, pensions, or other emoluments which otherwise accrue to him from such service."

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. LANGLEY. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman is this a case of desertion?

Mr. GORDON. No; it is a case of a boy who went into the Army under the age of 14 and performed services extending over two years, distinguished services, and this is a bill to permit him to be mustered in and mustered out, so as to give him a status, but no rights under the pension law.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. MILLER. Reserving the right to object, how did he get in?

Mr. GORDON. His brother was a captain, and there is a letter in the report from the colonel of the regiment which points out in detail the very distinguished services which the boy rendered.

Mr. LANGLEY. It is a bill to give the boy another chance.

Mr. GORDON. No; he is a distinguished jurist in my State now, and he wrote into the bill himself the provision that there should be no pension or other allowance by virtue of this act; so that under no circumstances could he or any of his relatives realize any pecuniary advantage from the bill. This is simply a bill to recognize his services to the country when he was not legally enlisted as a soldier.

Mr. LANGLEY. The beneficiary is not now a young man?

Mr. GORDON. Oh, no.

Mr. MILLER. Reserving the right to object, I would like to make a further inquiry. I do not understand what the status of this young man could have been.

Mr. GORDON. He was in the Army, but not legally enlisted.

Mr. MILLER. What was he doing?

Mr. GORDON. He was performing services which are pointed out in the report. He was sent on several special missions to the South, and performed distinguished services.

Mr. MILLER. Was he on detached service?

Mr. GORDON. His brother was a captain in the regiment. There is a letter from the colonel which details all these things.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, this is a private bill?

Mr. GORDON. It is.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I shall object, because I desire to get at the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

Mr. WILLIS. I think, Mr. Speaker, that the objection comes too late. We have commenced the consideration of the bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will yield if I can have the assurance that this will not take any length of time.

Mr. FINLEY. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask what was the character of the services this boy performed?

Mr. GORDON. He was sent on several special missions to the South.

Mr. FINLEY. Did he wear a uniform and carry a gun?

Mr. BATHRICK. Yes, he did; and fought in the trenches.

Mr. FINLEY. He was in the Secret Service?

Mr. GORDON. He was sent as a special commissioner. I do not now recall exactly the details of it, but it is stated in the report.

Mr. FINLEY. Did he drill with the company?

Mr. GORDON. I can not say about that.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. He was a carrier, and he was in greater danger than a regularly enlisted man.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended.

On motion of Mr. GORDON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ANNA E. FISH.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to call up the bill (H. R. 7946) granting a pension to Anna E. Fish.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to know how much time it will occupy?

Mr. HELM. It will take about five minutes. I wish to state to the House that the Committee on Pensions has reported this bill favorably, but by inadvertence it was not included in the omnibus bill.

Mr. MANN. When was it reported? I shall object to calling up bills that have not been reported.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. This bill was intended to have been included in the omnibus bill which we passed to-day, but through inadvertence the bill was omitted. It had the indorsement of the full subcommittee and was intended to be considered.

Mr. MANN. As far as I am concerned, I would not object if the gentleman asked unanimous consent to reconsider the vote by which the omnibus bill was passed and put this in as an amendment. You can not pass bills without having them introduced and reported.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I understand it is not on the calendar.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can get at it in that way.

Mr. KEY of Ohio. I ask unanimous consent that the vote whereby the omnibus bill was passed be reconsidered.

The SPEAKER. It can not be reconsidered. The proper method is to vacate the proceedings by which the pension bill was engrossed, read a third time, and passed.

Mr. MANN. The one from the Committee on Pensions.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to vacate the proceedings on that bill back to the place where the vote was taken on the motion to engross and read a third time. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. It is now in order for the gentleman from Kentucky to offer his bill as an amendment.

Mr. HELM. Mr. Speaker, I now offer the following as an amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

At the end of the last section of the bill insert the following:
"The name of Anna E Fish, dependent mother of Edward E. Fish, late of Company B, Third Regiment Kentucky Volunteer Infantry, and pay her a pension at the rate of $12 a month."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. KEY of Ohio, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the vote was passed was laid on the table.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12579, the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Indian appropriation bill, with Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee in the chair.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK].

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Chairman, I desire now to read to the House for the especial benefit of my friend from Illinois [Mr. MANN], who is present, and of my friend from Washington [Mr. HUMPHREY], who is absent, an editorial, carried in the New York Herald of this morning, on the subject of the industrial condition of the country. It is entitled "The business boom." It reads:

In this country, in spite of croakers, the upward movement of American securities continues steadily. This steadiness is a most encouraging feature. The improvement in Wall Street is no mere flash in the pan. On the contrary, it is continuous, irresistible, and general. It is based on the increasing prosperity of our business conditions all around, to which the Herald has repeatedly called attention.

A few disappointed speculators and disgruntled politicians have shown a disposition to cavil at the Herald's optimistic reports and, as might be expected, the bears remain as active as ever and, like wolves in a hard winter, are more than usually enterprising in their campaigns.

But the public refuses to be intimidated by either bear raiders or political croakers, and improvement in every department of American business activity continues unabated.

Workshops all over the country are returning to full-time conditions. The latest monthly report of the United States Steel Corporation shows that the unfilled orders on the books at the end of January amounted to 4,614,000 tons, an increase of 332,000 tons as compared with the unfilled orders on the books at the beginning of the year. Indication that such satisfactory conditions are improving still further is contained in the fact that while the daily average of orders booked in January amounted to 40,000 tons the daily average since the beginning of February has increased to 50,000 tons.

Big manufacturing concerns are assured of working to the full extent of their capacity for two and in some cases four months. The railways, the country's business barometer, also show that a great development of traffic is at hand by the extensive measures they are taking to increase their supply of rolling stock.

Another detail of great significance is the enormous trade balance in favor of this country that is disclosed in the official report just issued for the six months ending December 31. It shows an increase, as compared with the same period of 1912, of $38,401,934, or a little more than 10 per cent. It is noteworthy, also, that this increase is not due to greater exports of foodstuffs, but to greater exports of manufactured articles. This indicates not only great industrial activity at home, but also the steady development of American markets abroad.

Still another indication of the business prosperity now existing in this country is the general advance of American securities. Since the beginning of the year this movement has been gaining strength, and almost without exception securities to-day stand from 5 to 7 points higher than at the end of December. Then Atchison was quoted at 93½; to-day it stands at 98¼. Central New Jersey closed the year at 290; now it is 305. Delaware & Lackawanna has risen in six weeks from 382 to 394, Great Northern from 126¼ to 131½, Illinois Central from 106½ to 111, Northern Pacific from 109 to 115⅝, Pennsylvania from 109¼ to 112⅛, Union Pacific from 154⅞ to 162⅛, United States Steel from 58⅝ to 65¾, Amalgamated Copper from 73¼ to 76½, and American Tobacco from 243 to 248.

Improvement, in fact, reveals itself in every branch of industry and commerce, and the boon is only just beginning.

Gentlemen, I commend these specifications to those political gentlemen who have been so much alarmed at the imagined panics that are sweeping over the country.

Mr. STEENERSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HARDWICK. Certainly.

Mr. STEENERSON. Did the gentleman read the editorial in the Washington Post this morning in regard to the conditions on the Pacific coast?

Mr. HARDWICK. I did not think it was worth very much. It did not specify very much.

Mr. STEENERSON. Did the gentleman read the interview with the late Socialist candidate for Vice President as to labor conditions in the city of New York?

Mr. HARDWICK. No. I do not get my doctrines from the Socialists, nor my facts.

Mr. STEENERSON. It is in relation to labor conditions in the city in which the paper he has just read is published.

Mr. HARDWICK. Mr. Chairman, I want to say to the gentlemen on that side that here are specifications—specifications that touch every line of industry and commerce; here are specifications that establish the fact that instead of panic, which you gentlemen have been claiming has been sweeping over this country, industrial conditions are good, that business is prospering, and under a Democratic administration at that.

Mr. STEENERSON. That is simply to boom the stock market.

Mr. HARDWICK. Not at all. It seems to me that when gentlemen undertake to rise on this floor and tell the American people that we are in the throes of a panic, or that we are about to be in the throes of a panic, they ought to have some specifications on which to rest, some proof, some facts to cite, instead of merely orating about closed workshops, instead of getting up and saying all sorts of things in a general, vague, indefinite sort of way.

It seems to me that it is a pretty serious matter to endeavor—not to endeavor, because I do not think any gentleman meant to do that, but to play politics on a matter like this. And I cite this editorial because it does to my mind contain specifications that are important and that the country will be interested in, and I commend it to these gentlemen who have had so much trouble about hard times that we either are already having or are soon going to have, simply because we have a Democratic administration.

Now, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Georgia yields back two minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, how does the time stand?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] has 2 hours and 20 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] 1 hour and 54 minutes remaining.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman permit me to yield about 40 minutes?

Mr. CAMPBELL. The gentleman from Texas has already consumed almost twice as much time as has been consumed on this side, and I desire to yield time in a moment; but before I yield I want to say to the gentleman, in reply to the editorial the gentleman from Georgia has just read, that there are to-day in the city of Greater New York 345,000 idle men.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the gentleman give his authority for that statement?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I will give as authority the chairman of the committee of relief in the city of New York. He stated that to me.

Mr. HARDWICK. Has the gentleman compared that number with the number idle last year? There are always——

Mr. LANGLEY. There were 100,000 less last year.

Mr. CAMPBELL. And the same authority stated to me that that was the greatest number of unemployed they had had in the city of New York since 1907.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the gentleman give us the name of his informant?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have forgotten the name of the gentleman; but the facts are known to everybody.

Mr. HARDWICK. On the contrary, the very greatest paper in New York says there is not the slightest truth in that sort of stuff.

Mr. CAMPBELL. It has been published in the papers. There are more empty buildings on Broadway in New York to-day than there have been on that street since 1895.

Now, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I rather wonder at the temerity of my friend from Georgia in reading this editorial. Every day for months I have received letters, telegrams, newspaper clippings, official reports, charitable requests, which, if I should read in the House, any one of them would explode the statements made by the gentleman from Georgia. I have no desire to make the country think that it is in a depressed condition. I prefer, even like the New York Herald, to herald the booming and prosperous condition of the country to-day. But if I were to undertake to argue in favor of prosperity, like the gentleman from Georgia is now arguing, I would not select a slight periodic variation in the stock market. The stocks to-day are lower than they were when the tariff bill passed, as quoted in the New York Herald editorial. The gentleman from Georgia does not pay any attention to the stock market, and probably did not know there was such a stock as the Delaware & Lackawanna until he read it in the New York Herald editorial, showing there had been a slight increase in that stock and other stocks since the 1st of January. That is true. There is a considerable decrease in the last week, too. Atchison stock was higher 10 days ago than it is now.

Mr. HARDWICK. The gentleman evidently knows more about the stock market than I do, then.

Mr. MANN. The stock market is one of those barometers of conditions in the country which I scan every day, not for the purpose of speculating in stocks, but as a matter of information, and if the gentleman from Georgia would follow my example he would know a great deal more about the subject than he has exhibited here to-day.

Stocks are lower than they were last summer when the tariff bill was passed. And when I made the statement on the floor of the House some time ago that there was a panicky condition in the country and that the people were in a panic, that was a fact.

Mr. HARDWICK. Does the gentleman believe any such stuff as that?

Mr. MANN. Stocks were rapidly dropping. Now, I am perfectly willing to admit that in the stock market panicky conditions come sometimes, but do not last long. Stocks vary in price. I hope the conditions in the country will get better, and I do not intend, unless the gentleman from Georgia further provokes me or somebody else on that side of the House provokes me, to bring into the House and read all of the circular letters which have come to me, issued by charitable organizations throughout the country, in every one of which is the description that now there is more need of charity than has been known in the country for nearly 20 years, and more men out of employment than have been out of employment since 1896.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the gentleman pardon me for a moment? Does the gentleman credit any such absurd statements as those?

Mr. MANN. Why, certainly I credit them. I would much rather take the information of these charitable men at the head of these great charitable organizations, who come in touch with the unemployed, than the wish of the gentleman from Georgia.

Now, here is a little article from a New York paper, of to-day, which is not conclusive, but yet is entertaining in view of the fact that the gentleman from Georgia claims the country is in such a very prosperous condition. It says:

> The municipal lodging house at Twenty-fifth Street and the East River proved a blessing to 1,850 homeless ones driven to shelter last night by the extreme cold. Forty-five of them were women and 15 children. The house itself could not accommodate all, but about 610 of the early birds got beds there.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MANN. I read further:

> Six hundred more were housed at the recreation pier recently fitted up at the foot of Twenty-fourth Street, and the rest found warmth and a place to sit up and sleep at the charity department's dock at Twenty-sixth Street.
> At midnight the department usually closes up, but the line was still forming at that hour last night and the rule was suspended. There was plenty of hot soup and coffee for all, but only the early arrivals could be accommodated with beds, clothing, and a bath. It was not a record night for municipal charity, but the number taken care of was one of the largest this winter.

Mr. HARDWICK. Does the gentleman think that the present administration and the Democratic Party are to be blamed for the storm in New York which made these people go to those places?

Mr. MANN. It was not the storm in New York that caused this. It was because these people were out of work and could not find a place to earn a dollar, because of your legislation. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. HARDWICK. The gentleman, I suppose, believes there were never any homeless or thriftless people in New York before?

Mr. MANN. There never were as many before as there are now.

Mr. HARDWICK. I would like the gentleman to cite the figures to support that statement.

Mr. MANN. If I cited the figures, the gentleman would not believe them.

Mr. HARDWICK. There are no such figures.

Mr. MANN. When I cite the statements of charitable organizations in New York that there are 300,000 unemployed there, and when I cite the figures of charitable organizations in Chicago to the effect that there are 175,000 unemployed there, we know that in many other places throughout the country men have been thrown out of employment, and there never has been such a demand for charity and for aid from charitable organizations as there is to-day in these prosperous times of Democratic supremacy. We are thankful that it is not worse. Of course we are thankful that it is not worse. It might be a great deal worse than it is. If the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] had his way about the tariff, so that there were no duties at all levied upon competing articles, it would probably be worse than it is now.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. Nobody has any money in the banks that they can not get out now, as was the case in 1907, has he?

Mr. MANN. The money in the banks to-day is looking for employment. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] spoke of the increase in the price of bonds. True, there has been a slight increase. Why? A short time ago people could not borrow money. To-day you can not lend money, hardly. Business is largely stopped and there is no demand for money. I do not know whether the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] had trouble in getting money out of the banks in 1907 or not. I expect he would have trouble in getting it out now, though. [Laughter.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I would like to yield one-half minute to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. REILLY].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, is my time up?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has half a minute left.

Mr. MANN. I just want to warn the gentlemen that they can bring in all of these articles they wish to; and if that is to be the propaganda, if you want to present to the country that question through political sources, we will file on the other side the articles on the other side——

Mr. HARDWICK. Put it in——

Mr. MANN. Not fearing because the gentleman from Georgia indirectly refers to disgruntled politicians.

Mr. HARDWICK. No; I read an article.

Mr. MANN. I said "indirectly."

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman from Kansas has no objection, I would like to have the gentleman from Connecticut read a short article.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Texas may yield to him a minute if he will.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. REILLY] is recognized for one minute.

Mr. REILLY of Connecticut. Mr. Chairman, I wish to read an article from last Sunday's Waterbury (Conn.) Herald. It is as follows:

> Still further evidence of the increase in prosperity for Waterbury's manufacturing concerns was given yesterday, when notices were posted in the American Brass Co. plants to the effect that hereafter the Saturday afternoon holiday would be discontinued and work continued on that day until 5 o'clock. * * * In several departments of some of the factories overtime work has been started in order to prepare orders.

The American Brass Co. is the largest producer of brass goods in the world. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. MANN. I wear a Waterbury watch myself. It cost only a dollar. That is all that people can afford to pay for a watch now. [Laughter on the Republican side.]

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield four minutes to the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] is recognized for four minutes.

Mr. LANGLEY. Mr. Chairman, I place more reliance upon newspaper news items than I do upon editorials, which are usually theoretical and based upon some one's opinion only, when I am trying to ascertain the actual industrial conditions in the country. I desire to call the attention of the gentleman from

Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] to conditions existing right here in our own city. In to-day's issue of the Washington Times, which is a Democratic paper, I believe [laughter]——

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The gentleman should apologize for that before going any further. [Laughter.]

Mr. LANGLEY. Well, it is not a Republican paper, anyhow, and has as much Democracy as the New York Herald, and apparently more information on this subject. At any rate, I scarcely ever pick up a newspaper without seeing something in it of this character, and it certainly does not corroborate the optimism of the New York Herald or of the gentleman from Georgia. I read from the noon edition of to-day's Washington Times:

FIFTEEN THOUSAND DESTITUTE IN NEED OF AID AT ONCE—MISSION WORKER APPEALS FOR HELP AS UNEMPLOYED CROWD LODGING DURING COLD.

There are 15,000 destitute unemployed in Washington in freezing weather, said Herbert W. Kline, superintendent of the Gospel Mission on John Marshall Place, to-day.

The mission was crowded last night with men sleeping on floors, tables, and chairs. All night long they groped their desolate way, shivering and blue with the biting cold, to the already packed haven, and were admitted as long as there was an unoccupied board.

None were warmly clad. There was not one man in fifty with an overcoat, many had no underwear, shoes were gaping, and all were hungry and spent.

Mr. Kline appeals, first, for work for them, and then for aid—money, food, or clothing.

From among the men the mission can supply carpenters, painters, or mechanics.

At the bottom of the mission circular appears the following:

"Two dollars will feed 100 men. Five dollars will provide lodging for 50 men, including hot and cold shower bath, with coffee and rolls in the morning."

This does not read like prosperity to me, although it may be Democratic prosperity.

Mr. BARKLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to his colleague?

Mr. HOWARD. Mr. Chairman, does the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. LANGLEY] has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. Chairman, it is refreshing to be able to find out at last where the prosperity in the country is located. It is said by gentlemen who are in a position to know that it is in at least two places. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK] has located a little spot in the New York stock market, and the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. REILLY] has found a little in a manufactory of Waterbury watches.

Now, since this debate has degenerated into a reading of editorials, I have a few little literary contributions which I wish to make. Here is what appears in a news item in a recent edition of the Washington Herald. It reads as follows:

NEW YORK, February 6, 1914.

The vanguard of New York's 300,000 unemployed men called on Mayor Mitchel this afternoon and pleaded for jobs. They were turned down.

"I am sorry that I can not give work to you men," Mitchel said. "If some one can suggest to me a way in which work can be created for the unemployed in this city, I shall be glad to give it my immediate and full consideration."

It was suggested by Dr. Hallimond that $50,000,000 be taken at once from the city treasury and used in public works, such work creating jobs for many thousands. Mr. Mitchel, however, said that such a plan can not be carried out.

That is the situation in New York at this time when there is such amazing prosperity.

Mr. PAYNE. Will the gentleman allow me just a single question?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes.

Mr. PAYNE. Does not the gentleman think it would have warmed and fed those men if they could only have been assured that Lackawanna was selling at 394?

Mr. WILLIS. No doubt that would have helped amazingly, and particularly if they could have had the assurance that they were going to continue to enjoy these things under the New Freedom.

But that leads me to suggest that these difficulties are not confined to New York. Here is another clipping from a local paper, the Times, and it reads as follows:

Newark, N. J.—

Think of it, the fabled land of the seven sisters, Newark, N. J.

NEWARK UNEMPLOYED DEMAND WORK.

NEWARK, N. J., February 3.

About 400 men, ranging in ages from 18 to 70, followed the tactics of the unemployed of San Francisco and assembled in a body before the city hall to-day to demand work. They visited the municipal bureau of employment, and when told that there was no work to offer them, appointed a committee to call on Mayor Haussling.

Pedestrian traffic was blocked to such an extent that it was necessary to call out the police reserves to disperse the men.

Also the following from the same paper:

OUT OF WORK.

More than 330,000 wage earners are recorded as being out of work in Greater New York. To realize fully what this means in the way of population deprived of its usual support one must consider that in the great majority of instances the breadwinner represents not himself only, but a family, big or little, as the individual case may be, but averaging perhaps several.

Think that if the average is three to these families whose breadwinners are without work, the total population thus deprived of its support is about a million souls. That population ranks among the great cities of the world. And if the average is only two there would be a population deprived of its usual support of more than 650,000 souls; and that population would rank among the great cities of the United States. That is what it means, from one point of view, to have more than 330,000 wage earners out of work in New York City.

There is another point of view no less impressive. It comprehends the delicacy, the sensitiveness, the sympathetic relationship of the economic machinery of a community, a State, or a Nation.

Very often the man that talks lightly of shutting down mills in one removed part of the country, or even a whole industry in some other part, has no conception of what this must bring to others, may bring to them five hundred, perhaps a thousand, miles away from where the shutters have gone up before the windows and the pay-roll books have been stored away.

Mr. TAGGART. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. WILLIS. Yes.

Mr. TAGGART. Has the gentleman any woeful news from his own district?

Mr. WILLIS. I am not a purveyor of woeful news. I am undertaking to present some news items to show that if gentlemen undertake, by the reading of market reports, to unfairly represent conditions in this country they are going to get the whole truth, and more of it than they looked for when they started. That is what I am undertaking to do. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. TAGGART. Now, has the gentleman anything doleful from his own district?

Mr. WILLIS. I regret to say that I have not the information the gentleman desires. [Laughter.] If I had, I would read it.

Mr. TAGGART. I sympathize with the gentleman from the bottom of my heart.

Mr. WILLIS. I think I have nothing from the eighth district. If I had, I would read it, because our purpose on this side is to tell the whole truth. We all want our country to prosper, but there is no use in shutting our eyes to the facts. But since the gentleman has referred to that, I will read him something that relates to a great industry in Ohio.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman certainly did not mean to say that he regretted that he had no bad news from his own district?

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly not; I meant to say that I was very glad that I had no discouraging news from my section. No patriotic man would rejoice over industrial disaster anywhere; certainly not in his own community and State. But I expressed regret because of my present inability to furnish the information requested by my friend from Kansas [Mr. TAGGART].

Mr. CARTER. Then you do not regret it now?

Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman wants to know about something in my own district. Here is a resolution adopted by the National Woolgrowers' Association.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I yield to the gentleman two minutes.

Mr. WILLIS. Here is a resolution, which I will not take the time to read, adopted by the woolgrowers, the sheep raisers, showing that their industry is prostrated, that the prices are greatly reduced. It is even reported that one man is practically trying to give his flocks away. That is the condition of one great industry in this country.

Mr. CARTER. If anybody is trying to give away his sheep, let him send them to Oklahoma.

Mr. HOWARD. What is his address?

Mr. WILLIS. The gentleman who offers to take those sheep knows so little about the sheep industry and the general industries of this country that he would not know what to do with them if he had them. That is the difficulty about the legislation under which we are now proceeding, that it was framed by those who do not understand fully the industrial conditions in the country.

Mr. HOWARD. I know the difference between a sheep and a goat.

Mr. MANN. We can tell the gentleman from Georgia from a sheep.

Mr. WILLIS. Yes; one difference between a sheep and a goat is this, that the goats are raised down in Texas and are protected in the present tariff law, and the sheep are raised in the great Northwest, and wool was put on the free list. We know that difference very well.

Mr. TEMPLE. I have always understood that when the sheep were separated from the goats, the goats were on the left.

Mr. WILLIS. We have scriptural authority for that.

I do not wish to be misunderstood. I am not seeking to publish to the country the things that we all read in the newspapers with the very greatest regret; I especially regret that gentlemen rise upon that side when they find somewhere a little editorial or statement of conditions in the stock market that gives them a faint ray of hope—I regret that they rise in their places and undertake to put such things in the RECORD, when, as the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has said, everybody on this side, if he wanted to use his position for such a purpose as that, has had the opportunity for weeks to fill the RECORD with material as to the industrial situation, but we have not done so.

Mr. HARDWICK. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN]. [Applause.]

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, the growth, extension, and development of agriculture is of the utmost importance to the people of this country. First, because nearly half of our population reside upon the farm, and, second, because agriculture is a basic industry upon which all industries depend largely for support.

One of the obstacles in the way of agricultural development is the high rate of interest that many farmers are required to pay. It is said that the farmers of the United States pay annually in interest the immense sum of $500,000,000. There is a movement on foot to remedy this evil. Steps are being taken to provide our farmers with a better system of credit. Now, as never before, we are investigating this great subject, with a view to providing our farmers with the necessary money and capital with which to conduct their business at the lowest rate of interest possible. We have had a commission touring Europe, studying the farm-credit institutions abroad. I am greatly interested in this subject. I will gladly vote for any measure that will encourage, aid, and help the farmers of the United States. I am especially interested in the farmers of my own district and of my own State. The farmers of Oklahoma are greatly handicapped by lack of capital to develop their farms and by the high rate of interest they are compelled to pay.

I do know the matter should be remedied, if possible. In reflecting over this matter, and in trying to plan some practical method to reduce the rate of interest Oklahoma farmers were paying, it occurred to me that the surplus funds in the custody of the Government belonging to the Indians of Oklahoma could be utilized to materially reduce the interest charge to the farmers of Oklahoma. I made some investigation as to the amount of these funds now in the Treasury, the probable amount to be added in the future, the length of time these funds would be held by the Government, the conditions and terms upon which these funds were held. As a result, I reached the conclusion that at least a large part of these funds could be loaned on improved farm lands of Oklahoma without loss or injury to the Indians or the Government, but with profit and benefit to both.

On June 16, 1912, there was on deposit in Oklahoma National and State banks the sum of $4,572,727.72 belonging to the Five Civilized Tribes of Indians. These funds were derived from the sale of what is known as surplus and unallotted lands belonging to these tribes. The law under which these funds were deposited in these banks was approved March 3, 1911, and is as follows:

The net receipts from the sales of surplus and unallotted lands and other tribal property belonging to any of the Five Civilized Tribes, after deducting the necessary expense of advertising and sale, may be deposited in National or State banks in the State of Oklahoma, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, such depositories to be designated by him under such rules and regulations governing the rate of interest thereon, the time of deposit and withdrawal thereof, and the security therefor, as he may prescribe. The interest accruing on such funds may be used to defray the expense of the per capita payments of such funds.

It will be observed that under this act the depositing of these funds in the Oklahoma banks is entirely at the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, and that the act authorizes the depositing in Oklahoma banks only funds derived from "the sales of unallotted lands and other property belonging to any of the Five Civilized Tribes." Such funds constitute but a comparatively small part of the funds in the custody of the United States belonging to the several Indian tribes of Oklahoma and the individual members thereof. On June 17, 1913, the Bureau of Indian Affairs prepared a statement showing that at that time the Five Civilized Tribes had in the custody of the United States the sum of $12,820,466.72. According to a table prepared by the same bureau there were, on July 1, 1912, in the Treasury of the United States funds belonging to Indian tribes in Oklahoma and members thereof other than the Five Civilized Tribes amounting to $15,354,969. There were at that time, therefore, in the custody of the United States belonging to the several Indian tribes of Oklahoma funds to the amount of $28,175,436.52.

But after some thought over the proposition I concluded that a large part of these funds should be loaned to the farmers of Oklahoma upon improved farms, and that these funds should be utilized as a beginning of our effort to establish a better system of farm credits by which we hope to give our farmers necessary money at the lowest rate possible. Having reached this conclusion, on the 9th day of July, 1913, I introduced in the House H. R. 6744.

INDIAN FUNDS LOANED TO FARMERS.

H. R. 6744 complete is as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6744) to authorize and require certain Indian funds to be loaned to the farmers of the State of Oklahoma, and for other purposes.

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby authorized, empowered, and directed to loan to bona fide farmers, residing in the State of Oklahoma, all the funds or moneys now in, or which may hereafter be in, the Treasury of the United States, belonging to the several Indian tribes of said State, or to individual members thereof, held in trust or otherwise, which will not be required under any law or treaty, for a period of two years from date of loan, to pay any debt or obligation due any Indian tribe or member thereof, and all of such funds not subject to be loaned under the foregoing provision to farmers shall be deposited in the National and State banks of the State of Oklahoma under such conditions, for such time, and with such interest and security as shall be prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior, and the interest accruing under such loans and deposits shall be placed to the credit of the various Indian tribes and members thereof as their interests shall appear.

SEC. 2. That said loans shall be secured by first mortgage upon improved farm land or lands situate within the said State, and shall bear interest at the rate of 5 per cent per annum, payable annually. No loan shall exceed 50 per cent of the appraised value of the land mortgaged to secure said loan, ascertained by appraisers appointed or designated by the Secretary of the Interior. Loans may be made for a period of not less than one year and for not to exceed a period of five years. Payments on principal of not less than $100 may be made at the time of any interest payment. The amounts loaned in the various counties, so far as may be practicable, shall be equitably distributed according to the number of farmers residing in the respective counties of said State.

SEC. 3. That the loans and deposits herein provided for shall be made by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs under the direction and with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, and the Secretary of the Interior is hereby authorized to make all necessary rules and regulations for the safeguarding of the interests of the United States and the Indian tribes or members thereof and for the carrying out of all the provisions of this act, and is authorized to extend the time for the payment of any loan: Provided, That all deposits of such funds in the banks of the State of Oklahoma heretofore made under existing law may be continued at the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior: And provided further, That all laws or parts of laws in conflict with the provisions of this act are hereby repealed.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, there are something like $28,000,000 in the United States Treasury belonging to the Indians of Oklahoma. If the Government of the United States will loan this money, or two-thirds or three-fourths of it, to the farmers of Oklahoma upon good approved farm mortgages, the Government will save $600,000 or $700,000 a year, and the farmers of Oklahoma will, by the reduction of interest, save from $500,000 to $600,000 a year. And if the Government will apply this policy to all the Indian trust funds in the Treasury of the United States, it will save $1,700,000 annually or in the next 10 years $17,000,000.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Certainly.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. What rate of interest is the Government now paying to the Indians on their trust funds?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Three or four per cent.

Mr. CARTER. And in some instances 5 per cent.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. How much do you propose that the farmers to whom you loan these funds shall pay?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Five per cent.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Why should the money be loaned the farmers in Oklahoma, rather than to the farmers of other States?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Because the funds belong to the people of Oklahoma, to Indians who are citizens of Oklahoma; it is Oklahoma money, Oklahoma capital, but by virtue of a Federal statute it is taken from Oklahoma and placed in the Treasury of the United States, diverted from Oklahoma enterprise. This should not be. These funds should be used to help develop Oklahoma.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. There are other Indian funds in the Treasury than that which belongs to the Indians in Oklahoma.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Yes; and I am advocating the extension of the policy so that not only Oklahoma, but in other States with large Indian population, and the United States holds large Indian trust funds, in all such States the same policy should be extended.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Certainly.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman should be aware that there are many millions of dollars belonging to the Indians in Oklahoma, a great portion of which is in the banks in Oklahoma.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I will state that there are four and a half million dollars, or about that amount, of Indian funds belonging to the Five Civilized Tribes in the banks of Oklahoma, and on which the banks are paying 4 and 5 per cent interest. The total funds in the Treasury belonging to Oklahoma Indians are about $28,000,000. About twelve and a half millions belong to the Five Civilized Tribes and fifteen and a half millions to tribes other than the Five Civilized Tribes. I do not contemplate taking these Five Civilized Tribes funds from the banks, because these funds will be needed from time to time to pay obligations due the Indians.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I will.

Mr. CARTER. Let me understand the gentleman. I believe he says that the Five Civilized Tribes have $12,000,000, and there are about $4,000,000 deposited in the banks and $8,000,000 in the Federal Treasury?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Yes. Now, then, the bill which I have introduced authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to loan a certain part of these funds to the farmers of Oklahoma upon farm mortgages. I will say that I have no desire in any way by this proposition to delay or hinder the closing up of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes. It is not my idea that we should use any fund for long-time farm loans that is expected to be needed to pay the per capita payments or any other obligations due the Indians under any law of the United States.

Mr. MILLER. I agree with the gentleman that it is never wise to leave money inactive in a bank or any other place. Does not the gentleman think it would be better to loan this money for the development of the Indian lands and the Indian allotments rather than to loan it out to the white people generally?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I do not understand how that proposition could be applied. The Indians receive the interest for their support and the development of their property. The Indians could not mortgage their lands to secure payment.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Will my colleague yield?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Certainly.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I want to suggest that the Cherokee tribal affairs are wound up, and the money is about ready to be paid out per capita. I would like to ask the gentleman whether he wants to include their funds in the loan?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I will state that it is not my idea to include any funds that would be needed within the next two or three years to pay any obligations or anything due the Indians; but there are now $28,000,000 in the Treasury. In addition to that, in a short time there will be something like 500,000 acres of the so-called segregated coal and asphalt lands, which will bring in five or eight million dollars, the coal and other minerals to be sold in time. So for many years there will be in the Treasury of the United States from twenty-five to forty million dollars of the funds and capital that belong to Oklahoma tied up in the Treasury of the United States.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I will.

Mr. SLOAN. Does the gentleman object to loaning this money in any other State than Oklahoma; that is, in States where the security would be good?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Certainly I would. Nebraska has Indians, and I would loan the Indian funds of Nebraska in Nebraska, and the Indian funds in South Dakota to South Dakota farmers, and so on, because the funds belong to the Indians in the State and should be used to develop that State.

Mr. SLOAN. But the Indians do not belong to the State.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Nebraska has no just right to the funds of Oklahoma and ought not to take the funds of Oklahoma to loan in Nebraska.

Mr. SLOAN. Are the Indians of Oklahoma the wards of Oklahoma or wards of the Government?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. They are wards of the Government.

Mr. SLOAN. Then why not distribute it all around through the States?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I will come to that argument later. There is nothing impracticable about my proposition. The States, many of them, loan their large school funds on farm-loan securities. Our State has three and a half million dollars loaned on farm mortgages. In other words, our State for the purpose of handling its school fund conducts a farm-loan department. What the State can do the National Government can do. All that is necessary is to establish a farm-loan department with a competent director at the head of it, organize a proper force, make the necessary rules and regulations, and proceed to business. There is nothing impracticable about it. What a State can do the National Government can do. Now, the National Government does not take any risk.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. In answering the question of the gentleman from Nebraska my colleague said that the funds in Nebraska ought to be loaned on farms in Nebraska. Does not the gentleman think the same argument would necessarily follow that the funds ought to be loaned in the same congressional district to which the Indians belong?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I do not think that would apply, for this reason——

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Let me state in that connection that the gentleman's opinion may be influenced by the fact that there is no such fund belonging in his district as there is in the other districts.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Not at all. In my district there is a large number of Indians and a large amount of Indian lands. There are the Cheyenne, Arapahoe, Kiowa, Comanche, and Apache Indians, who own nearly 3,000,000 acres of land on the west side of the State and have large trust funds in the Treasury. But every taxpayer in the State loses something by reason of the nontaxable Indian land, and consequently the benefits ought to go to those who are bearing the burdens. The fact is the trust funds in the Treasury which would constitute the greater part of the fund to be loaned on mortgages, belongs to Indians on the west side, and not to the Five Civilized Tribes, and if the gentleman would apply the rule he suggests there would be precious little loaned to farmers in his congressional district.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, just as a matter of inquiry, having heard the stock market of New York praised so highly by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], I would ask the gentleman if he thinks it would be a good idea to loan those funds on the stock market in New York? It seems to be very prosperous, according to the gentleman.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I think not. It would be risky under a national Democratic administration.

Mr. BARKLEY. The gentleman would be in favor of doing it in a Republican administration?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Hardly.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman stated that a great many lands were not taxed. Does the gentleman know that the east side of Oklahoma, where these lands are nontaxable, pays more than half of the State taxes?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I hope they do.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. That is true. That being true, ought not those people over there whose property is taxable to have this public benefit because of the inequality of taxation on that side of the State?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Oh, the gentleman forgets that there are 4,000,000 acres of land on the so-called west side that belongs to Indians, and that the Five Civilized Tribes are not the only Indians in the State. There are nearly 4,000,000 acres of land on the west side belonging to Indians, constituting nearly one-fourth of the nontaxable lands of the State.

I say the proposition is not impracticable. The Government would take no great risk, because it is universally conceded that farm loans are the safest investments that can be had. Of all the vast hundreds of millions of dollars that have been loaned in the last half century on farms, only an insignificant per cent has been lost, as a rule. The Government would make its own appraisement. My bill provides that not over one-half of the value of the land might be loaned on any tract, so that the Government would take practically no risk. Now, on these trust funds the Government is now paying out to Oklahoma Indians $700,000 a year in interest, and that is absolutely lost to the United States; that much is being paid out in interest on trust funds to support the Indians, without any recompense to the Government except the discharge of a national duty. That is lost. But if this money were loaned upon the farms the Government would get back an interest that would more than pay the amount of money it is paying to the Indians in interest. It is a safe business proposition. There is no risk to the Indians. I would not want to put a single dollar of that trust fund belonging to the Indians in jeopardy. We must guard it sacredly and carefully, but the Government would stand between the Indians and the farmers who borrowed this money. In other words, the Government would be responsible for every dollar of it, so there is no risk to the Indians.

As I have said, it would be a great saving to the Government. The Government would run not only no particular risk, but the Government is paying to Oklahoma Indians $700,000 in interest, and is paying to the Indians of the United States $1,700,000 annually in interest. Think about that. If the Government goes on and pursues this policy, as it has in the past 10 years, it will pay the Oklahoma Indians alone $7,000,000 in interest. There is that much lost. If you continue that policy for 20 years, there will be $14,000,000 lost, and, taking the entire United States, if the same amount of trust funds should remain in the Treasury, the Government would pay out from all those funds $34,000,000 in interest. This is not a good business proposition for the Government. It is not the way the National Government should run its business. It ought to loan these funds in some way to make them pay.

I noticed in reading a report from the Agricultural Department some time last year, I think last March, the Secretary of Agriculture sent out 3,000 letters to bankers all over the United States asking the banks to report the rate of interest that was being paid by farmers of the State on short-time loans, and those reports came in from all the various States, and when the data were collected they showed that the farmers of Oklahoma were paying a higher rate of interest on short-time loans than the farmers in any State in the Union.

The average rate paid, according to that report, by the farmers of the United States on short-time loans was 7¾ per cent, while, I regret to say, the farmers of Oklahoma, according to the reports of the bankers, on short-time loans were paying an average of 11.58 per cent. Out in my section, the western part of the State, farm loans are made at 9 and 10 per cent. My observation has been that on an average about 7 per cent is the lowest that the farmers get loans on farm mortgages in any part of Oklahoma. Why it is that we can not get loans more cheaply than that, I do not know. Why it is that our farmers are paying a higher rate for short-time loans than in any one of the Western States, I do not know. If we could loan, say, $20,000,000 out of this vast sum, leaving $8,000,000 or $10,000,000 in the Treasury to pay from time to time and from year to year the obligations due the Indians, and loan the $20,000,000 to the farmers of Oklahoma at 5 per cent, reducing the rate from 8 to 5 per cent, there would be a saving of 3 per cent, and on $20,000,000 there would be a saving to the farmers of Oklahoma in one year of $600,000, and in the next 10 years a saving to our farmers of $6,000,000. If the National Government can do this without any great risk to the Government, with a certainty that there can be little if any loss to the Government, why should it not be done?

Another proposition is this: The $28,000,000 is Oklahoma capital. It belongs to the Oklahoma citizens. Those Indians are citizens of our State, and it is our money. It is our money, and why should the Government lock it up in the Treasury of the United States when it can be placed back there and be made to serve a useful and helpful purpose to our people? There can be no good reason why it should not be done.

Few people understand or comprehend the burden to the taxpayers of Oklahoma that arises from nontaxable lands belonging to the Indians of the State. There are 44,000,000 acres of land in Oklahoma; 22,000,000 acres of that land belong to the Indians. Under the census of 1909 there were 1,657,000 people in Oklahoma, and 117,000 of those citizens were Indians.

Now, look at it. Fifty per cent—one-half of the land area in that State—belongs to our Indians, although they constitute but 7 per cent of our population. In round numbers, out of that 22,000,000 acres that belong to the Indians, as near as I can estimate, there are probably 18,000,000 acres of it that is untaxable. Two-fifths of all the Indian property in the United States is in Oklahoma. According to the report made by the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, or a statement given out, there is something over $687,000,000 of Indian property in the United States. According to that same report, $267,000,000 of that property is in Oklahoma. One-third of the property of Oklahoma to-day is probably untaxable under the policy pursued by the National Government. My friends, to exempt one piece of property from taxation is necessarily to place additional taxation upon the property beside it, and that is taxed. So that we are peculiarly bearing a burden there, and I hope nobody will construe anything I say as in any way criticizing the Indians, for I am not. But it is a fact that one-half of our land belongs to the Indians, and they constitute but 7 per cent of our population. Three-fourths of that property is nontaxable. Now then, we are bearing a burden in that way. You take the State government, the county government, and the school district government, and Oklahoma is losing probably $2,000,000 a year in revenue by reason of this nontaxable land.

Mark you, the care of the Indian is a national burden. The protection of the Indian is a burden and a duty and an obligation that rests upon the National Government and not upon the people of any one State. And yet, on account of the peculiar condition of things down there one-third of the Indian population, over one-third of the Indian property in the United States, is in that one State, and that places a peculiar burden upon our people.

I have introduced in this House a bill to appropriate $20,000,000 to the State of Oklahoma to compensate the State, the counties, and the school districts for loss of revenue by reason of this nontaxable land. And that bill is based upon absolute justice. The Indian lands must be kept free from taxation until the Indian can care for himself.

On the west side of Oklahoma there are some 12,000 or 13,000 Indians, their lands exempt from taxation—4,000,000 acres—and the exemption will expire in the next six or seven years on most of that land, and yet those Indians will still be incompetent to care for themselves. That period of exemption must be extended in order to discharge the duty of the National Government to those Indians. And thus it goes on and on and on, a continuous burden upon the people of Oklahoma.

All through the history of the admission of States into this Union the National Government has never claimed the right to exempt land from taxation after it had disposed of it, and in the admission of all the States throughout the first 50 years, you might say, of the history of this country there was a provision placed in the enabling acts granting States certain things upon the express and specific condition that the State would not tax certain lands for a period of five years. The United States Government has never claimed the right to exempt land from taxation in the State after the United States had disposed of or conveyed the soil. That has always been the principle. And yet for some reason or other Oklahoma was admitted without any particular consideration of that question, and so we have there one-third of our property exempt from taxation, and every man knows that that brings a burden upon the other people of the country.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN] yield to his colleague?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I do.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I do not know whether I understood my colleague correctly or not, but I understood him to say that Oklahoma was admitted without any proper consideration of the taxing of the lands in Oklahoma, and I want to call his attention to the fact that the greater portion of the lands, especially of the Five Civilized Tribes and affiliated tribes, are exempt from taxation by a specific agreement between the United States and the respective tribes prior to the admission of Oklahoma as a State, and those agreements were such that they could not be set aside by legislation.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. The gentleman states an important fact, and it is true. By a treaty made before statehood was passed the Indians acquired the right to have their lands exempt from sale and taxation for so many years.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is it not also true that the Government of the United States entered into a solemn treaty with the Indians when they sent them to Indian Territory that the Government would not sell that land away from them or permit white men to do it, and that to-day the white man has most of the Indians' land?

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman permit just an interruption there, Mr. Chairman?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. According to the statement of the Indian Bureau, Mr. Chairman, the title to 85 per cent of the land which is allotted to Indian allottees is still in the Indian allottees.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am not talking about what the allottees had. The Indians owned the whole of the country, and had an absolute right to the protection of the United States against the invasion of the white man, and now the white man is cursing the Government because the Government does not permit him to loot the Indian property and to tax the lands that the Indian still has remaining.

Mr. CARTER. I agree with the gentleman's contention fully.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Not at all; I do not so agree.

Mr. SLOAN. Will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield to the gentleman from Nebraska?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. SLOAN. Just one question. Would you not think it more wise, and do you not believe the Oklahoma delegation would agree with you, especially Mr. DAVENPORT and Mr. FERRIS, if this Indian money should be invested in bonds or in financing the Alaska railroad, rather than loaning it on the Oklahoma farms?

Mr. DAVENPORT. I would like to answer the gentleman by saying "no." My whole life, or the greater part of it, has been spent in that Indian country. I raised my family there, and I and the Indian tribe to which I belong resent the proposition of lending our money to anybody to finance with; and I wish to say that the Creeks and the Cherokees and the Seminoles in my district are as competent to-day to handle their funds as are any other people in the Union to handle the same amount of funds.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Now, Mr. Chairman, here is my proposition: The capital, the money that belongs to the citizens of Oklahoma, is tied up in the National Treasury.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I will yield.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman allow me five minutes more to close?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN] five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MORGAN] is recognized for five minutes additional.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I made an investigation. There is in the Treasury available a little more than $7,000,000 due to the Chickasaws and Choctaws. There are assets of $7,000,000 more. These assets are the proceeds from the sale of lands and town lots upon which they have time to sell under the law. This $7,000,000 under the law is due to the Indian now. The Indian is in debt and wants it. He is paying more than 10 per cent. Does not the gentleman think the honest and just way is for this Government to pay the Indians that $7,000,000?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Yes, sir.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. And that the equity due to the farmer ought to come directly from the Government fund, rather than from the Indian fund?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. I say, whatever is due to the Indian, pay it when it is due. I would not support any bill that had for its object a delay in paying the Indians what is due them. We know that there is a vast sum there that is needed to pay the Indians what is due.

It is a safe proposition; it is a safe proposition for the Government, and a safe proposition for the Indians; indeed, it is a profitable proposition for the United States as a matter of good business. The United States ought to loan that money so as to recoup the Nation from this large annual interest payment to the Indians out of funds that are lying there idle.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. The gentleman means the fund that, under the law, is not required to be paid immediately?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. That is a different question.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Now, you can save the farmers of Oklahoma a half million dollars annually. The statistics show that the farmers of Oklahoma owed in 1900 on farm mortgages $28,000,000. At 8 per cent interest our farmers are paying out over $2,000,000 annually in interest on these loans. They pay vast sums on short-time loans. You talk about enacting a law that would give the farmers better credits. What the farmers want is lower interest. This high interest is taking the farmers' very life and vitality.

Give to the Oklahoma farmer his $20,000,000, loaned upon absolutely safe security. Save the farmers of that State that $500,000 annually by reducing the interest rate of 8 per cent to 5 per cent, and in that one respect you will have given the farmers a credit that you can not give by any other bill you can enact, and you will have done something that will repay the farmers and the taxpayers of Oklahoma for the burden that the National Government is now compelling them to bear every year by reason of nontaxable lands.

Mr. ASWELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. ASWELL. The Indians of Oklahoma are ready to vote, are they not?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Yes, sir.

Mr. ASWELL. Does not the gentleman think it would be better for the Indians and for the Government if the Government should pay what it owed the Indians, and put their lands on the assessment rolls and let the Indians take care of themselves as other people do?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. Well, they are competent, but there are a great many who——

Mr. ASWELL. I understood the gentleman to say they were competent.

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. That applies only to certain of the civilized tribes. There are 26,000 full bloods in the Five Civilized Tribes, and many of those full bloods are competent.

Mr. ASWELL. Would they not be competent more speedily if put upon their own responsibility?

Mr. MORGAN of Oklahoma. The gentleman must remember that there are thousands in Oklahoma who are merely children, who are totally incompetent to transact their own business; and it would certainly be unwise to turn those Indians loose and sell their property and spend their money and have them become paupers on the State and on the Nation. Certainly the gentleman would not advocate that.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I want to yield three minutes to the gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Nebraska [Mr. SLOAN] is recognized for three minutes.

Mr. SLOAN. Mr. Chairman, in answer to the echoes of the ticker that come from the New York Herald, as recited by the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. HARDWICK], I want to read from a labor paper published in the tricity composed of Davenport, Rock Island, and Moline. Remember it is a labor paper, namely, the Tri-City Weekly Review. I read:

We do hope the new currency law, the revised tariff law, and the antitrust law of President Wilson will soon begin to work, for we are tired of saying "No" when men come into this office looking for a job.

Davenport is the largest of those three cities. Davenport is the largest city in the second Iowa congressional district; and it seems that the voters of that district are coming very rapidly to agree with the editor of this paper in matters of cause and effect, because on last Tuesday they had an election in that district and the result was that the President's party lost, as compared with the last fall's election, 7,000 votes, while the Republicans gained 2,500 votes, a net loss to the Democracy of nearly 10,000 votes. [Applause on the Republican side.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to yield to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK], if he desires, 30 minutes.

Mr. CLARK of Florida. I am very much obliged, Mr. Chairman, but I do not care for it now.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then I yield to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Indiana [Mr. CULLOP] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CULLOP. Mr. Chairman, the second Iowa district replied on Tuesday to all such publications as the gentleman from Nebraska read by sending a Democrat to Congress after one of the most heated campaigns ever waged in that district. [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Now I want to call attention to what one of the great papers and one of the great financiers of this country said upon his return to St. Louis from New York, and I will read from the St. Louis Republic of Thursday, February 12:

PROSPERITY AHEAD, ALTHEIMER SAYS—SITUATION IN WALL STREET SHOWS MONEY EVERYWHERE FOR INVESTMENT—BUSINESS OUTLOOK BRIGHT—HEAD OF FINANCIAL FIRM BELIEVES WILSON POLICIES HAVE RESTORED CONFIDENCE.

The marked changes in financial conditions in New York to-day are harbingers of a period of great prosperity, according to Ben Altheimer, president of the Altheimer & Rawlings Investment Co., who has just returned from the East.

"There is money everywhere for investment. Interest and discount rates have been lowered. Commercial paper in large amounts is being bought up rapidly by the banks, and new issues of securities are absorbed as quickly as they are offered.

"Banking houses that had prepared February bond circulars to mail to their clients were compelled to withhold them, as the securities were disposed of without the necessity of circularizing.

"Whether this is a natural reaction from the lethargy of business that existed a few months ago, or whether it is caused by the demand resulting from prosperity, I can not say. It is certain, however, that confidence has been restored here and abroad, and Wall Street has proved again that it is not only cold and practical, but also sensitive and sentimental—a contradiction, but a fact.

"There has been no real scarcity of money during the past few months. It was only temporarily out of sight. London and the Continent are again buying our securities, whereas in October and November indifference to American issues was the rule.

"The passage of the currency bill, which will give us a fixed status in banking and currency affairs, has much to do with this change of conditions, no doubt. It has given a stimulus and confidence where doubt and hesitancy existed."

This is the report that one of the financiers of St. Louis brings back from the great city of New York. It shows a prosperous condition in the country and one that augurs well for the entire country. Now, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and several of his colleagues have for weeks been preaching calamity here in the National House of Representatives, circulating the word all over the country, trying in every way possible to convince the people of the country that we were in the throes of a great panic. Yet he says now that there is an abundance of money for investment of every legitimate kind. This, Mr. Chairman, is the preaching of a new philosophy. We have never, in the history of this country or any other, known of panics when there was an abundance of money for legitimate investment. And according to the reports that are now going out through the press, there is an abundance of capital to be found everywhere for the purpose of carrying on the legitimate industries of the country. The gentleman may read reports stating that during the present severe winter weather people call at lodging houses for shelter for the night. In all of his lifetime the gentleman has never known a winter when the same condition did not exist. Now, what was the condition in 1907–8? Not only were the lodging houses filled, not only were the highways lined with men begging for labor, but every industry in the country was shut down and business was at a standstill, and there was no money to be had to operate them or relieve the deplorable conditions. What were the conditions then compared with now? Congress has made great changes in two of the greatest systems that underlie and are the foundation of the business of the country, a change in the tariff and a revolution of the money system of the country. Yet there has never been a change in the tariff that brought as little halt to the legitimate industries of the country as did the change which has come by the passage of the Underwood bill.

Immediately upon the enactment of the new currency law all business revived and every industry took on new activity and prosperous conditions at once appeared. This was the result of Democratic legislation and Democratic policies.

It is new philosophy declared by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] that panics occur and exist when money is plentiful, easy to be had, and at low rates of interest for legitimate use. If that doctrine be true, then it is the advent of a new order of panic. The like has never been known before, and we feel certain it is not known now. The truth is such a condition could never furnish a panicky condition in business and never will. Panics only exist on the reverse of these conditions, when money can not be had to conduct legitimate business, and hence it must cease operations for this reason. The history of business furnishes no example of a panic when money can be procured easily to conduct business.

Every effort it appears has been made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and a few of his trusted colleagues to create a panic in this country by almost daily howling calamity. This effort on their part is the result of the conspiracy formed by certain leading Republicans at the time of the recent meeting of the Republican national committee in this city last month. The calamity howl on the floor of this House has been going on daily by a few Republican leaders as the result of that conspiracy. These men who are proclaiming calamity daily put party success above all else, above public welfare, above prosperity, above business success. How can a party hope to succeed, when it must resort to such methods and employ such tactics to regain its lost prestige with the American people? It appears that they must rest their whole case in the belief that the American people are ignorant of the true business conditions existing throughout the country. If they do, they are woefully mistaken. The people of this country fully understand what the true conditions are, and will not be deceived or misled by the calamity howls from the gentlemen on that side of the House. When gentlemen say money is abundant, prices of staple products are high, they contradict their charge by giving facts.

If money is plentiful and can be had on easy terms, business is good; if prices of staple products are high and there is good demand for them, it is a true index that business is good. Panics never exist or thrive under such conditions, but thrive only when money is scarce and hard to get and when prices on staple products are low and when there is no demand for them. Some people are frantic because there is no panic and they are unable to create one.

This administration is not a panic maker, but is enacting legislation which prevents panics and creates prosperity, spreads happiness among the whole people. It lights up the hopes and stimulates the energies of the greatest people in the greatest country in all the world.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. ANSBERRY].

Mr. ANSBERRY. Mr. Chairman, during the discussion of the condition of the country this afternoon from a Republican viewpoint my colleague from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] made a statement in this House which I think he made inadvertently and did not mean. At any rate, I hope he did not mean it. When the question was put to him whether or not he could read from a newspaper in his own district of conditions of unemployment, of factories shut down because of hard times in his own district, he stated that he regretted to say he could not make any such statement with reference to his own district.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. ANSBERRY. I refuse to yield to the gentleman at this time.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Well, I——

Mr. ANSBERRY. I do not care to yield, and do not. I decline to yield.

Mr. CAMPBELL. This is as fair as misrepresenting his own colleague.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman declines to yield.

Mr. ANSBERRY. In fairness to my colleague, I said I thought he did not mean that. I still say that. But even if he had, he would only have reflected the position of his party in the State of Ohio with reference to this condition. Afterwards, when the question was put to him, he said he did not mean that. Now, if the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] can make that any stronger, he is at liberty to do so in his own time.

Some time in January of this year the Republican organization in the State of Ohio sent out boiler-plate matter to the little weekly and daily Republican papers throughout the State of Ohio on this same question, containing a calamity howl. Among other papers they sent this boiler-plate matter to the Medina County Gazette, which is supposed to be a stalwart Republican paper; but the Gazette did not look at the world through the colored spectacles of the gentleman who has charge of that organization, and here is what that Republican paper said with reference to the attitude of these men:

DASTARDLY POLITICS.

There has been nothing more reprehensible in American politics than the present studied effort on the part of the standpat forces in control of the Republican Party to aid and abet an era of hard times in this country. It was openly proclaimed at the recent meeting of the Republican national committee at Washington that hard times, want, and poverty were to be the life-savers of that party. To-day from every standpat source is coming a calamity howl coldly calculated to shake business confidence and bring on industrial paralysis.

As we write there lies on our desk a copy of the Republican News Letter, dated at Columbus, January 3, 1914. Editors are invited to use the contents of this letter in whole or in part. And what is this Republican News Letter that all the editors of Ohio are "invited" to use and bring before their readers? It is a pure calamity howl calculated to bring on a business panic, if possible—and it is nothing else. Its one big, flaring headline reads: "Industrial depression." Then follow three columns of "calamity" talk, prophesying hard times and business disaster.

At a recent meeting of the Republican national committee at Washington, Senator REED SMOOT, national committeeman from Utah, was cheered again and again when he airily made the following declaration for a turkey-buzzard policy for his party: "The silent wheels of the factories, the smokeless stacks of our mills, and the suffering of our people under a Democratic administration will speak louder than any national declaration of principles that we can make. All we have to do to bring victory to our banners will be to point to the closed mill doors and say: 'Wilson—that's all.'"

No declaration of principles needed, says SMOOT; just wait for calamity and suffering.

From every other standpat Republican source is coming the same sort of business poison—the studied attempt to bring suffering and want to millions of American citizens to further the political ends of the Penroses and Smoots and Barneses and Daugherties now in control of the Republican Party.

The attempt to inject this poison into the business arteries of this country is made, too, when reliable financial authorities like Bradstreet's and Dun's and Henry Clews's tell us that the business outlook for 1914 is brightening daily and that there is no business depression nor panic ahead.

Benedict Arnold and others of his ilk were not so dastardly traitors to their country as are the Republican leaders who are trying to bring hunger and cold and suffering and misery to millions of poor men, women, and children in this country in order to advance their political interests; and the Republican calamity howlers and the Republican news letters are seeking to do just this thing.

The despicable political panic effort has already failed. The country is aroused against it, and the boomerang is already recoiling upon its projectors.

The political party that seeks a new lease of life at the hands of American voters by encouraging panic and hard times badly miscalculates, for it can reap from such foul sowing only the contempt and distrust of all right-thinking people.

Now I will yield to the gentleman from Kansas to ask his question.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have no question. I simply wanted to state that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] disclaimed the intention of saying that he regretted that he had not such an article to read.

Mr. ANSBERRY. I so stated before the gentleman spoke. But I want to say that there is a Biblical quotation that may be used in that connection, and that is, "That out of the fullness of the heart the mouth speaketh." [Applause on the Democratic side.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. PETERSON].

Mr. PETERSON. Mr. Chairman, I have listened since I have been here to this calamity howl that has been going on. If there was anything that would justify it, I come from a district where, I think, I would have some knowledge of it. But in order to inform myself upon the subject I have made some investigations. Within my county is what is known as the Calumet district, where there are a great number of iron and steel mills, where the United States Steel Corporation has one of its largest plants, at Gary. At Indiana Harbor there are various plants of this kind. At East Chicago there are more of the same nature. I have investigated in that locality to find out the true situation. I have a letter here that I received only a few days ago from the superintendent of the Inland Steel Mill at Indiana Harbor. The Inland Steel Mill is the largest independent steel mill in the United States, having a greater output than any other independent mill in this country. I will read a portion of a letter from the general superintendent of that mill:

The feeling here regarding the business situation is growing more optimistic. We are running 11 out of 12 open-hearth furnaces. Traveling men coming into my office feel very good, and many of them look for a banner year.

I hold in my hand a clipping from a newspaper published at Gary. I will read it:

INLAND CAPACITY AT FULLEST.

There have been a number of conflicting reports in industrial circles about the present activity of the Inland Steel Co., of Indiana Harbor.

In order to set such reports at rest and to prove that trade conditions in iron and steel are decidedly optimistic a representative of this paper had an interview with one of the Inland officials. The fact is that this industry is now employing its full quota of men and is running at full capacity. It has 12 open-hearth furnaces, and every one is running full blast.

Some misunderstanding arose from the laying off of about 1,000 men in December. These men were engaged on construction work that was begun in the spring of 1913 and which was completed the latter part of December. They never constituted a regular part of the production force, and when they had finished their special work they were naturally discharged. As said before, the Inland Steel is in full force and likely to continue so for some time to come.

That, gentlemen, is from a Republican paper. I have here another clipping from a newspaper that I received to-day and that was published at Hammond, Ind. I will read it:

STEEL CO. IS BUSIER THAN EVER—EAST CHICAGO'S BIG INDUSTRY EMPLOYS MORE MEN AT PRESENT THAN IT HAS IN SIX MONTHS—PROSPECTS ARE FINE.

Not for six months has the Interstate Iron & Steel Co., of East Chicago, been employing as many men as it is to-day. Monday the 22-inch, commonly called the "big mill," was started, which in itself put on probably 100 men. This means that every mill in the plant is underway.

In speaking of the outlook, General Manager Johns said yesterday, that, while the price of steel was too low to favor a very large increase in production, yet the market showed signs of improving and there seemed to be all over the country, in iron and steel circles, a feeling of hopefulness and security.

The Interstate has at the present time a number of good orders, and production will be held at a normal, steady output until these orders are filled. Meanwhile the indications are that subsequent orders will keep things lively at this plant for some time to come.

I have here another clipping from another Republican newspaper. The fact is, in my district we have mostly Republican papers, and I have to rely upon them for the evidence I bring here to substantiate my statement. It is as follows:

GOOD SIGNS.

A week ago the Times carried the news that four more open hearths were ordered on the active list at the Gary Steel Works. Then came the announcement that the American Sheet & Tin Plate plant, idle during the great part of December and running part time in the meanwhile, was to return to a full-working basis. On Monday four more open hearths will be fired at Gary Works.

All of this news is very welcome, for it presages the return of the good times for which we have been waiting.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FOWLER].

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, some weeks ago I listened to statements of distinguished men on the other side of the House who style themselves leaders, among whom was my colleague from Illinois [Mr. MANN]. If I recollect correctly, he ventured the statement that there were a million unemployed laboring men in the steel and iron industries of the country. I happen to have access to a corporation publication which is known as the Manufacturers' News, and I have a clipping from that paper on that subject which I desire to read for his illumination.

Mr. Buffington, who is president of the Illinois Steel Co., with reference to the "million" unemployed laboring men in the steel and iron business, says:

ESTIMATE TOO HIGH.

President Buffington, of Illinois Steel, believes the estimate of 1,000,000 men idle in metal industries is too high. He says: "I don't believe any such condition as outlined in this report is true. None of our plants have been shut down completely, and conditions in Chicago and Pittsburgh are improving noticeably. These places reflect conditions all over the United States. Metal industries cover such a broad field it is almost impossible to estimate the number employed."

Mr. Chairman, I have another clipping from the same publication of the same date, which reads as follows:

BACK TO WORK.

There is no lack of jobs in South Chicago now. The Wisconsin Steel Co., the second largest metal plant in the Calumet district, yesterday took back 500 of its former employees and announced also that more than 1,500 would be put to work before Monday. Action of the steel concern, following as it does that of the Illinois Steel Co., which last week opened its gates to 3,000 workers, has had an optimistic effect upon business and industrial conditions in South Chicago.

That is the district represented by my colleague [Mr. MANN], who has been the ringleader of calamity howlers. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I read from the same publications an article on the subject of increases in the wages of workingmen in the structural-iron works, as follows:

After a short strike for higher wages, the structural-iron workers of Indianapolis and the General Contractors' Association have signed an agreement carrying wage increases of 3 cents an hour for the present year and 70 cents an hour from January 1, 1915, until April 1, 1916. The former rate was 65 cents.

Why increase the wages of labor with a "million" idle men in the steel and iron business? When did capital become so unreasonably generous? "Millions for defense, but not one cent for tribute" is the policy of the trusts now, the same as it has been heretofore.

Mr. Chairman, I read the following from the same publication:

The Vredenburg mill of Springfield, Ill., where carpenters are on a strike, has posted a notice that it will be conducted as an open shop in the future.

Approximately 500 employees of the Packard Motor Car Co. plant at Detroit, Mich., who were laid off a few weeks ago temporarily, were returned to work this week.

Several independent mills in Pittsburgh have posted orders for a resumption of full time because of orders calling for 100,000 tons of finished steel for immediate delivery. The orders affect 5,000 men, who have been working on short time.

Mr. Chairman, I know that such information has never been put in the scrapbook of these calamity howlers who have a systematic organization for one sole purpose, and that is to be returned to Congress, because they know that if this Democratic legislation makes good throughout the country the rest of them will stay at home to join those who were relegated to the political obscurity of 1910 and 1912.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. FOWLER. Mr. Chairman, I desire to read an article which is a clipping from a New York paper upon this same subject:

LARGE ORDERS FOR STEEL—STILL FURTHER INCREASE IN MILL OPERATIONS IS REPORTED—HEAVY BUYING OF WIRE PRODUCTS A FEATURE OF THE WEEK—RAILROAD ORDERS BELOW NORMAL.

NEW YORK, January 17, 1914.

The most encouraging developments in the steel trade this week were the larger contracts placed for structural shape and the heavy buying of wire products, the latter by jobbers and manufacturers. The fabricating shops booked orders for 58,000 tons of shapes, including consummated subway contracts for 37,000 tons. Orders for wire products on some days were double the average daily mill capacity of the larger interests.

There was a further increase in mill operations. The steel corporation had 56 per cent of ingot capacity active, and close to 60 per cent is expected for the coming week. Large contracts for pig iron were again placed, but the business was more satisfactory in tonnage than in prices. Upward of 250,000 tons of foundry and basic iron were sold. The cast-iron pipe interests were responsible for 100,000 tons of the total, of which 90 per cent was purchased from southern furnaces. Merchants' sales of pig iron since January 1 aggregate 600,000 tons.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, how much time is remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has an hour and 29 minutes and the gentleman from Kansas an hour and 19 minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I do not think there are any more speeches on this side, and I would like to begin the reading of the bill under the five-minute rule.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I have promised some time. It is now 5 o'clock; there are very few here, and I desire to address myself to some matters generally upon the bill. I suggest to the gentleman from Texas that he move that the committee do now rise.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, of course the gentleman realizes the value of time and that we all want to get back home some time this summer and not run into the next session, as we did last summer. If there is any opportunity to consume any time this afternoon, I would like to continue. I do not think we have anybody on this side that wants to use any more time unless something should develop.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have promised some time, and I want to use some time myself. I want to use that time at least when all the members of the Committee on Indian Affairs are present. I will state to the gentleman from Oklahoma and the gentleman from Texas that it is my purpose to aid in putting this bill through just as rapidly as possible, and I think that when we get to reading the bill we shall make rapid progress.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We hoped to get through with the general debate to-day.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That will not be possible.

Mr. MANN. I would like to suggest that there are no other appropriation bills yet reported.

Mr. CARTER. At the very best, Mr. Chairman, we can not hope to get through this bill before next Tuesday. Monday, I think, is suspension day, and it would take to-morrow and Tuesday, and by that time we hope that there will be some other appropriation bill reported.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Up to this time no other appropriation bill has been reported.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I understand that the Army bill is ready.

Mr. CAMPBELL. That can not be considered before Monday.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. And the river and harbor bill, I understand, is ready.

Mr. MANN. Why do not they report them so that we can have a chance to see them?

Mr. CAMPBELL. The House would not be likely to take up an appropriation bill the next day after it was reported.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, the time for general debate has not been exhausted, but it is apparent there is no quorum present. Therefore I am compelled to move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12579, the Indian appropriation bill, and had come to no resolution thereon.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will make this announcement: There are two more appropriation bills ready.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I would like the Chair to inform us why they do not report them?

The SPEAKER. The members of the different committees seem to have a disinclination to report a bill until a day or two before it is to be taken up. The Chair does not know why.

Mr. MANN. I suggest, in the absence of those gentlemen, that they can not hurry business by holding back appropriation bills so that people do not have an opportunity to look at the bills until after they are taken up for consideration. If they desire to expedite business, they should give us an opportunity to look at the bills before they are taken up for consideration.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Saturday, February 14, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1. A letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a copy of a communication from the Librarian of Congress submitting an amendment to his estimate for contingent expenses, Library of Congress, by the addition of $500 for photostat supplies (H. Doc. No. 738); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

2. A letter from the president of the Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., submitting a report of said company to the Congress of the United States for the year 1913 (H. Doc. No. 597, pt. 2); to the Committee on the District of Columbia and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. TALBOTT of Maryland, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 7288) to provide for repairing the U. S. frigate Constellation and stationing her at Baltimore, Md., and for other purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 250), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

CHANGE OF REFERENCE.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXII, the Committee on Invalid Pensions was discharged from the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11783) granting a pension to Anna Lakin, and the same was referred to the Committee on Pensions.

SENATE.

SATURDAY, February 14, 1914.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, how glorious is Thy name in all the earth. We seek no glory of personal life or of our national life apart from Thee. Thou who art the creator of all the worlds, Thou who doth hold them all in the hollow of Thine hand, Thou art our Father. Surely the manifestations of Thyself are so great in the works of nature and in all the voices of providence and grace that we can not find a higher plane of life or a diviner plan of life than by submitting ourselves to Thy revealed way. So do Thou help us this day to walk in the light of Thy countenance, to do Thy will, and seek Thy glory that blessing may come to us and to all the people. We ask for Christ's sake. Amen.

The Journal of yesterday's proceedings was read and approved.

NEW YORK, NEW HAVEN & HARTFORD RAILROAD.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the Interstate Commerce Commission acknowledging the receipt of the resolution of the 7th instant, directing the commission to make public the facts in its possession concerning the financial transactions of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad Co., etc., which was referred to the Committee on Interstate Commerce.

Mr. CHAMBERLAIN, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 4137) authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to pay to Thomas J. McCormick the sum of $100 on account of bounty, asked to be discharged from its further consideration and that it be referred to the Committee on Claims, which was agreed to.

Mr. VARDAMAN, from the Committee on Commerce, to which was referred the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 29) authorizing the President to appoint a member of the New Jersey and New York Joint Harbor Line Commission, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 255) thereon.

Mr. JOHNSON, from the Committee on Naval Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 121) to provide that petty officers, noncommissioned officers, and enlisted men of the United States Navy and Marine Corps on the retired list who had creditable Civil War service shall receive the rank or rating and the pay of the next higher enlisted grade, reported it with an amendment and submitted a report (No. 256) thereon.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. NELSON:

A bill (S. 4494) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Mississippi River at the town site of Sartell, Minn.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. BRISTOW:

A bill (S. 4495) providing for the establishment of a term of the District Court for the District of Kansas at Salina, Kans.; and (By request.) A bill (S. 4496) in relation to the service of process by United States marshals; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

A bill (S. 4497) granting a pension to Fred M. Livingston; and

A bill (S. 4498) to admit to the benefits of existing pension laws the members of the Kansas State Militia who were called out to check what is known as the "Price raid," together with their widows, minor children, and dependent parents; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. OVERMAN:

A bill (S. 4499) for the execution of a suitable and creditable painting depicting and perpetuating the baptism of Virginia Dare, the first known celebration of a Christian sacrament on American soil; to the Committee on the Library.

By Mr. THOMAS:

A bill (S. 4500) to place certain officers of the Army on the retired list; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. SMOOT:

A bill (S. 4501) for the relief of Emma Kiener; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. McLEAN:

A bill (S. 4502) granting an increase of pension to Delia Carey (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Pensions.

OMNIBUS CLAIMS BILL.

Mr. OLIVER submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the omnibus claims bill, which was referred to the Committee on Claims and ordered to be printed.

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. OVERMAN. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After 2 hours and 30 minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened.

DEATH OF SENATOR BACON.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, in the absence of the Senator from Georgia [Mr. SMITH], it becomes my painful duty to announce to the Senate the death of Senator BACON at half past 1 o'clock this afternoon in this city.

The sudden passing away of this great Senator, who came to this Chamber with all the honors which his native State could confer upon him, and who repaid that trust by his long, honorable, and illustrious career in this body, is an irreparable loss not only to the Senate and to his beloved State but also to the country at large.

I send to the desk resolutions which I ask may be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolutions (S. Res. 273) submitted by the Senator from North Carolina will be read.

The resolutions were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. AUGUSTUS O. BACON, late a Senator from the State of Georgia.

Resolved, That a committee of 14 Senators be appointed by the Vice President to take order for superintending the funeral of Mr. BACON.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, as a further mark of respect to the memory of the distinguished Senator, I move that the Senate adjourn.

The motion was unanimously agreed to; and (at 2 o'clock and 45 minutes p. m.) the Senate adjourned until Monday, February 16, 1914, at 12 o'clock meridian.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, February 14, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal God our heavenly Father, let Thy spirit possess us that we may add wisdom to wisdom, knowledge to knowledge, strength to strength, godliness to godliness, in the struggles of to-day; that we may be stronger to meet the conflicts of the to-morrow, and thus add day by day to our character until we attain those qualities of soul which in our better moments we long for, exemplified in the life and character of the Son of God. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following title, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested:

S. 4247. An act to increase the efficiency of the United States Navy by the appointment of six vice admirals;

S. 2904. An act for the relief of certain persons, their heirs, or assigns, who heretofore conveyed lands inside national forests to the United States; and

S. 2440. An act providing for the erection of a suitable monument on the grave of Maj. Gen. Henry W. Lawton in Arlington National Cemetery, in the State of Virginia.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bill of the following title:

H. R. 11283. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge across the navigable waters of St. Andrews Bay.

ENROLLED BILL SIGNED.

Mr. ASHBROOK, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that they had examined and found truly enrolled bill of the following title, when the Speaker signed the same:

H. R. 9848. An act for the relief of the New England Steamship Co.

PEACE CONFERENCE AT THE HAGUE.

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Speaker, I wish to ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD and to incorporate therein a copy of a letter from the Hon. Andrew D. White to the Hon. Joseph H. Choate, which was sent to that gentleman on the 9th instant.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHARP] asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by including a letter from the Hon. Andrew D. White to the Hon. Joseph H. Choate. Is there objection?

Mr. BARNHART. Reserving the right to object, what is it?

Mr. SHARP. Mr. Speaker, I wish to say in answer to the query of the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. BARNHART] that this letter was written to the Hon. Joseph H. Choate in the interest of holding a third peace conference at The Hague, and it was read before the Citizens' National Committee, consisting of more than 50 gentlemen representing all parts of the country, at a meeting of that committee in New York City a few days ago. The exposition of that distinguished diplomat's views on what has been accomplished by the prior conferences held in 1899 and 1907, and the prophecy which he makes as to what may be accomplished at a third conference, is most noteworthy. Indeed, it rises to the dignity of a state paper. It is for this reason, believing it to be peculiarly appropriate and in harmony with the spirit of the times, that I wish to have it incorporated in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I might further say that as a result of that meeting resolutions were unanimously adopted favoring the holding of such a peace conference at The Hague next year. It was a matter of much gratification to those present that their action in indorsing this movement had already been anticipated by the present administration in its declaration to actively cooperate in carrying out the plans for the consummation of that noble purpose. In speaking of what was accomplished at the second conference, Mr. White says, in the letter quoted below, that "it also brought decidedly nearer the establishment of a permanent court for the world, which shall bring public law to bear upon international difficulties more perfectly than any arbitration tribunal can do." To my mind, if the next conference will bring about no more than the definite accomplishment of that achievement, it will not have been called in vain.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. SHARP]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The following is the correspondence referred to:

CORNELL UNIVERSITY,
Ithaca, N. Y., February 9, 1914.

Hon. JOSEPH H. CHOATE,
New York City.

MY DEAR MR. CHOATE: The present condition of my health and strength forbids my attending the approaching meeting to promote the calling of a third peace conference at The Hague, and I regret this all the more since it has long been my wish to attend such a meeting, my hope and belief being that our surviving American delegates in the first and second Hague conferences, our associates in the Carnegie Peace Foundation, a large representation from the various peace societies, and a vast number of our fellow citizens who have in their hearts and minds a belief in settling national difficulties by right reason rather than by war are ready to form the nucleus of a movement throughout our whole country which will encourage our National Government in its work of pressing on this matter as two previous administrations have so successfully done.

The favorable attitude of our present administration toward the summoning of a third conference is most encouraging, and it has clearly become the duty of all American citizens, without distinction of party, to support the President and his advisers in calling the other nations of the earth to join in preparing for it.

Both the first conference, in 1899, and the second, in 1907, took action looking to a continuance of their work by further sessions, and the second conference, embracing delegates from 44 nations, unanimously fixed upon the period we are now reaching as that in which measures should be studied and programs adopted looking toward such a third conference to carry on the work which they began.

The great services to the world by both the conferences already held are no longer denied. As time goes on and the history of those two bodies can be reviewed dispassionately, it becomes clear that not only have most important practical points been gained, but that both those bodies were far more successful in their work than even the most far-sighted statesmen dared expect at the beginning of either.

By the first conference an international arbitration tribunal was created which has already decided a large number of questions, all of them important and some of them dangerous. The same conference provided a "commission of inquiry," which proved its value by preventing a very virulent misunderstanding between two of the most powerful of all modern nations from ripening into a naval war. The plan of special mediation by "seconding powers," as adopted by the same conference, or at least a modification of it, proved itself effective in cutting short a war between two other nations. By that same first conference the laws and customs of war on land and sea were greatly improved throughout and an incalculable mass of human sorrow and suffering was thus prevented.

By the second conference the work of the first was nobly carried on and valuable features were added. A plan for an international court of appeal in prize cases, such as the world has so long desired, was well wrought out and brought to such a point that a third conference can hardly fail to establish it.

The second conference also put an end, virtually, to those wars upon weak nations by strong, in the interest of schemers and speculators, which have led to some of the most disgraceful events in recent history. It also brought decidedly nearer the establishment of a permanent court for the world, which shall bring public law to bear upon international difficulties more perfectly than any arbitration tribunal can do. That conference also perfected and pressed forward a proposal for immunity from seizure upon the high seas of private property not contraband of war, which our best statesmen have so earnestly urged, from 1785 until the present time, and brought it face to face with the public opinion of the world in such wise that the next conference may well hope to obtain its concession by all the powers.

The second conference also rendered a great service to humanity in still further improving and humanizing the rules and customs of war, both on sea and land, and though it did not establish laws to meet the exceedingly complex and dangerous questions arising out of warfare by torpedoes and aerial ships, it left the whole subject in excellent shape for final decision by a third conference.

I recall these facts, which you in your books and discourses have so ably shown, because they warrant the world in hoping that such victories of right and reason for humanity can be continued.

Many of these solutions of international problems by the first two conferences can now, in the light of increased experience, be greatly amended, and some of the business then left unfinished can now be taken up with new hopes of bringing it to a happy conclusion. One of the burning questions left unsettled at the close of the second conference was the very dangerous subject of the partial or complete substitution of contact or floating torpedoes for ships, in maintaining blockades, and this is closely connected with the yet unanswered question of immense importance to neutral powers, as to protecting them from destruction of life and property by drifting torpedoes.

Take another subject which occupied both the first and second conferences. All the great powers of the world are now planning or building airships with reference to future wars. But proper limitations of aviation in war are at present in abeyance. No final decision has been reached upon any important point in that matter. The question is rapidly coming upon us whether the new science of aerial navigation shall be limited to the obtaining of military information or extended to attacks upon fortified or invested places, or whether it shall be given full power to spread devastation over peaceful States, and blot out great unfortified centers of peaceful trade and commerce. We can not shut our eyes to the fact that in spite of a great tendency of opinion toward peace in the world, war is becoming more hellish in its inventions than ever before. Portable magazines, containing high explosives, can be so dropped from flying machines as to wipe from the map some of the largest cities in the world. It seems perfectly within the possibilities, and indeed within the probabilities, that if any power should in the future begin a war in a manner as doubtfully regular as that in which Japan began her recent war with Russia the nation claiming to be aggrieved may easily insist on being absolved from those poor restraints at present relied upon, and go to any extreme in using aerial navigation as a means of projecting explosives into the defenseless cities of her enemy and blotting out some of the greatest achievements of civilization.

Then, too, comes up the question as to pending definitions of contraband of war. I need not tell you how far, and how dangerously to neutral powers, this doctrine has already progressed in some quarters. In the first Hague conference I heard the opinion broached that ships engaged in peaceful commerce may be held to be contraband, and this doctrine has even been made to warrant seizure of the ordinary food of whole nations of peaceful noncombatants.

These are but a few of the pending questions of life and death to neutral and peaceful powers. The time has certainly arrived when these questions, which are already upon us, and others, which are on the horizon, must be met and dealt with.

I am aware that there is, especially among the European powers, much distrust of international conferences, a distrust largely caused, no doubt, by loose, oratorical advocacy of compulsory arbitration.

I trust that this difficulty will be fully and frankly met. It should be remembered that when men talk of making arbitration and other reforms compulsory, this can only mean, if it means anything, that there shall be an armed force somewhere in reserve, and pledges to use that force, even though the attempt to do so might provoke wars on a larger scale than anything we know at present. My belief is that safety rests in trusting to the enlightened self-interest, the good sense, the honesty, and the honor of our sister nations and ourselves. Let the decisions of the international conferences and tribunals show the solemn convictions of the whole thinking world, and armies will not be needed to enforce them.

I trust that your voice will be heard at the coming meeting giving counsels both of vigor and prudence derived from your own large experience. Let the New York Peace Society from its metropolitan center urge on and cooperate with similar organizations throughout the country, and let all these join in supporting both the Executive and the legislative authorities of our country in making the necessary preparations for the new conference. All ordinary national questions seem merely parochial compared with bringing to a happy issue this proposed council of all nations. Party politics should be utterly subordinated in this matter to the interest of our whole race, and the one great question should now be what can our Nation do to develop this movement, so fraught with good hope, not only for our country, but for universal humanity.

I remain, dear Mr. Choate,
Yours, faithfully,

ANDREW D. WHITE.

PUBLIC LANDS IN CALIFORNIA.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from California rise?

Mr. RAKER. I rise to ask unanimous consent that I may file a supplemental report from the Committee on the Public Lands on bill (H. R. 122) authorizing the State of California to select public lands in lieu of certain lands granted to it in Imperial County, Cal., and for other purposes, containing some memoranda from the Department of the Interior that I desire to have before the House when the bill comes up.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. BORLAND. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask whom this report is from?

Mr. RAKER. It is from the Committee on the Public Lands.

Mr. BORLAND. I have no objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER]? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

INDIAN APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Indian appropriation bill.

The motion was agreed to.

The House accordingly resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12579, the Indian appropriation bill, with Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the Indian appropriation bill, of which the Clerk will read the title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12579) making appropriations for the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and for other purposes, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] use some of his time now? I believe there is something like an hour remaining on that side for general debate.

Mr. CAMPBELL. What time remains, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Kansas has 1 hour and 19 minutes remaining.

Mr. CAMPBELL. And how much has the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS]?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] has 1 hour and 29 minutes remaining.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Does the gentleman from Texas expect to use more of his time?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We expect to do so, but the gentleman from Florida [Mr. CLARK] is not here. We can not use it just at the present time. I hope the gentleman will proceed on that side.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, the consideration of the Indian appropriation bill naturally brings us to a discussion of the Indian question. I have stated upon this floor upon other occasions that I protested against the attitude of the white man toward the Indian from the beginning of our relations with the Indian in the United States. From the first there has been a disregard of the rights of the inferior that has been unbecoming of the people of this Republic, and the attitude of mind toward the rights of the Indian has not grown better as time has gone on. We have moved the Indian from one lodging place to another, and have practically forced him into treaties that would enable us to move him. We sought the treaty and forced the Indian to enter into it just as soon as his lands became desirable for the use of the white man. And we finally moved him to the last place in which there was a Territory within the confines of that vast domain that had belonged to the Indian, and located him in a small strip known as the Indian Territory, where we entered into a solemn treaty with the Indians that they should not be disturbed there by the white man. That treaty had no limitations as to time. As long as grass grew and water ran, the Indian was to have absolute dominion over the Indian Territory and the protection of the white man.

Those of you who were here yesterday listened to a speech that disclosed the fact that the Indian Territory no longer belongs to the Indian, but to the white man; and legislation was asked in the interests of the white man in the use of the Indian's money or what he has left. In consideration of Indian matters within my experience in this House the interest of the white man has been made paramount to the interest of the Indian. That attitude upon the part of Congress was not directed or led by men far removed from the last place that had been allotted to the American Indian in the United States. White men from the Indian Territory acted without regard to the rights of the Indian, always having foremost in their minds the rights of the white man who had protruded himself into the Indian Territory. And to-day it is a joke to refer to the Indian Territory as Indian country, if a joke can be made of such a serious matter, and a matter that so reflects upon the honor of this Government in its treatment of a homeless, courageous race of men that we have driven from one place to another until they have practically vanished.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Is it not a fact that the gentleman's State of Kansas and the State of Oklahoma were originally a part of the Louisiana Purchase, and at that time there was no treaty whatever between the United States and the Indians? And is it not a further fact that the State of Kansas stands upon exactly the same footing as Oklahoma, where in recent years many reservations have been broken up?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Not at all. The treaty of 1836 gave the Territory of Oklahoma as a final place of habitation for the American Indian, and it did not include the State of Kansas. It included what is known as the Indian Territory, and it was made sacred in that treaty to the Indians.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield just a moment for a correction?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. There were several of those treaties that the gentleman refers to?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. They ran for a period of years?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. And included the whole of Oklahoma, except the Panhandle strip?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes; that is true.

Now the Indian is a helpless ward. We are giving him out his own in driblets, not as his necessities require, but as our interests and the interests of the white man seem to dictate. Will it be beneficial to the white farmers of Oklahoma to put the Indian's money within reach of the Indian? Will it be beneficial to the white people of Oklahoma to do something for the Indian? If not, God help the Indian! Nothing will be done for him. The first consideration is the benefit that may result to the white man who has taken from the Indian his dominions in the United States. I am not charging anybody in particular with this. I simply charge it upon our Government, and its treatment of these now helpless men.

The present appropriation bill has recognized the fact that we have not only been treating the Indian in this manner, but that we have been plundering him of his property.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. For a question.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. There are a number of claims pending, are there not, against certain Indians for goods furnished to them, or claimed to have been furnished to them?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. GREEN of Iowa. Was any appropriation made in this bill for an examination of those claims?

Mr. CAMPBELL. No. We did not appropriate in this bill for claims. That is a matter that is to be taken into consideration in a separate bill that will probably be called the omnibus claims bill.

The white man in Oklahoma has reserved or assumed the right to take everything belonging to the Indian that he could get his hands on. He entered into contracts with the Indian that were indefensible, and which the courts would not have sustained because of fraud if the contracts had been entered into by one white man with another. Every species of fraud and intimidation has been practiced by white men on Indians in Oklahoma. Courts and court officers have been used to rob helpless children of the last bit of property that they possessed. Children who had estates that were considered valuable, whose assent could not be secured to sell or lease their property, were murdered, and contracts made with the executors of their estates, and the murderers went unpunished by the authorities in the communities in which the murders were committed. I have protested against this attitude for years, and——

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Just for a question.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I would like to ask the gentleman what murder was committed?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I think it was in the congressional district which the gentleman represents.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Please wait for my question. What murder was committed for an estate of any child in any county in Oklahoma and the murderer went unpunished, giving the name of the child and the name of the party that committed the murder?

Mr. CAMPBELL. The murder was in the district represented by the gentleman, and the murderer went unwhipped for his offense until an appropriation was made in this House to send special agents to the place of the murder, who forced the local authorities to indict and convict the party.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I will say to the gentleman that if he does not know that that statement is correct he ought not to make it on this floor, and I say to him now it is untrue. I say that the officers in Muskogee County, if he has reference to that case that occurred at Taft—that nigger town down there in Muskogee County—did perform every duty in their power to capture that man.

Mr. CAMPBELL. They were forced to do it.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I say they were not forced to do it.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. No; I do not yield further.

Mr. DAVENPORT. No; the gentleman does not yield, because he knows it is not true. I can produce the record.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Then produce it.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. I understood the gentleman to say it went unpunished until some action was taken by this House.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I did say that.

Mr. CARTER. What action was that?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Special agents were sent to Oklahoma and brought forcibly to the attention of the local authorities the crime that was committed there, and exposed it and made it a scandal in the State of Oklahoma.

Mr. CARTER. Well, Mr. Chairman, the gentleman does not intend to say that this House took special action on this case?

Mr. CAMPBELL. No; it included it in the appropriation bill. But I referred to it on the floor of the House at the time that appropriation was ordered.

Mr. CARTER. And that same appropriation has been carried since June, 1898, prior to the time this matter occurred.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes; but the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER], who is now questioning me, and the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT] who has just taken his seat were protesting against such appropriations for special agents in such cases.

Mr. CARTER. If I made any such assertion, it ought to appear in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and I would like the gentleman to point it out to this House.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Oh, every Member of the House knows about it.

Mr. CARTER. Well, evidently the gentleman does not remember my speech. In that speech I spoke entirely to the point of a limitation on the expenditure of the trust fund, and if the gentleman will look at my speech he will find that that is the question I discussed.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Very well; I have yielded to the gentleman. I am aware that the gentleman from Oklahoma and the Committee on Indian Affairs have been forced to reverse the position that they have heretofore occupied on this question.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman can not say that. He can not find any such position that I occupied in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not yield further to the gentleman just now, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman recall that what both the gentleman from Oklahoma have probably forgotten—the discussion that we had in this House to prohibit frauds which they denied the existence of, but which now all admit existed at that time?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am just approaching that.

Mr. MANN. All of the speeches on that subject were not inserted in the RECORD.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman, I challenge that assertion.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman ought not to make that statement.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am not——

Mr. CARTER. I do not mean the gentleman from Kansas. I mean the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. CAMPBELL. I can not yield further, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MANN. I stated that to be a fact.

Mr. DAVENPORT. As to myself, I say it is not a fact. I say it is not true.

Mr. MANN. I have not made any statements about the gentleman [Mr. DAVENPORT].

Mr. CAMPBELL. If gentlemen will possess their souls in patience—the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] has an hour and 29 minutes left, and gentlemen can obtain ample time to say anything that they desire to say. I say that a speech was made by a Member from Oklahoma——

Mr. DAVENPORT. Will the gentleman give his name?

Mr. CAMPBELL. A speech denying in toto things that had been charged upon this floor, and that speech has never been printed in the RECORD.

Mr. CARTER. That was not my speech, was it?

Mr. CAMPBELL. No.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Nor mine?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Nor yours.

Mr. MANN. They were not canny enough to withhold their speeches.

Mr. DAVENPORT. I was operating on a principle, Mr. Chairman, to say what I mean, and print what I said.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I must not have these interruptions.

Mr. ADAIR. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Kansas yield to the gentleman from Indiana?

Mr. ADAIR. I want to ask for information if the remedy for this mistreatment of the Indians rests with the Interior Department, or does it rest with Congress itself?

Mr. CAMPBELL. With both, and with the American people, with the white man. That is where it rests, with those who have totally disregarded all the rights of a now helpless people, with a disregard that has become more and more a shame to the white man as the years have come and gone. Ever since Oklahoma was admitted as a State this question has become more and more acute. I have charged from time to time that local courts, fresh from the electorate in Oklahoma, were aiding and abetting those who were plundering helpless Indians—incompetent Indians and Indian children—of their property. It was denied. Charges were made that I was making these charges against the officers in Oklahoma for political effect. I was making these charges against the officers in Oklahoma in the hope that some day the people of this country and the people of Oklahoma would be aroused to the fact that it was wrong to rob the Indians. Why, for years it has not been regarded as a crime to rob and take advantage of the Indian, especially in Oklahoma. I am gratified now to be able to tell the House that the things for which a few of us have been contending here are now conceded by the Members of the Oklahoma delegation to be right, and they are assenting to the appropriation which is included in this bill that is necessary for the protection of helpless wards of this Government known as incompetent Indians and minor Indian children.

Mr. SHARP. Will the gentleman yield for a question, purely for information?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes, sir.

Mr. SHARP. The gentleman seems to have given a good deal of study to this subject. I do not want to destroy the continuity of his argument, but I have read a good deal lately about the possibility of the Indian vanishing from our country owing to the ravages of tuberculosis. Is the gentleman informed upon this question, so that he can tell the House how general that disease has become, and what likelihood there is of its increasing? I note that in this bill the sum of $260,000 is appropriated for hospitals and care, and so on. Does the gentleman think that is adequate?

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is as much as the Indian Office thought could be advantageously used. The Indian is reluctant to take the view of the white man as to the proper treatment of tuberculosis, and we are conferring upon the officers of the Government authority in this bill which practically enables them to force reluctant Indians to take the treatment for tuberculosis that is now regarded as the proper treatment. They do not like to leave their homes or tepees. We have made an appropriation which we think is as much as can be used for relieving the ravages of that disease, and progress is being made along that line. But that is a matter that will be discussed when we are considering the bill.

I was just saying that I was gratified at the present attitude of the Committee on Indian Affairs and of the delegation from Oklahoma. I was more than gratified when the present Commissioner of Indian Affairs, who has the welfare of the Indian at heart and who is sincerely and conscientiously entering upon the work that is set out for that bureau, with a study and an ability that ought to commend him to every thoughtful man in the United States who believes in fair play for these helpless wards of the Government, came before the committee and urged an appropriation to be used in protecting the helpless among the Indians. The commissioner urged the very appropriation for which I have been contending upon this floor for years, and to accomplish the same purpose, the protection of these helpless people. So that this appropriation, for the first time in a number of years, will be unopposed on this floor.

But this appropriation and change of attitude does not alter the fact that we have been guilty of the grossest injustice to the American Indian, and that we have not yet stopped the practices that result in the gross injustice to a brave and courageous race of men that is to-day vanishing from the face of the earth.

A visit to the Indian country to-day in an official capacity that brings Indians to consult with the visitor will disclose the fact that men appear who say they are Indians who do not look any more like an Indian than I do nor the gentleman from Oklahoma who sits before me. He may be the president of two or three national banks, at the same time the owner and manager of large business enterprises, president of interurban railways, and enrolled as an Indian and have every right to the Indian's property that the Indian himself has, of participating with him in allotments of land, in the distribution of funds, and in everything that the Government from time to time sees fit to give to the Indian out of his own estate.

The Indian country does not look like an Indian country. There are but a few Indians left—about 26,000 full bloods in the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma. A mere handful out of what was once an aggregation of proud tribes of a great race of brave men, courageous, splendid women, who raised warriors, who in the forests and upon the prairies made their own way, but to-day are a weak and vanishing people, without hope for the future and only to look to the distant past with pride.

I am hoping that for the remainder of the Indians the Government will do that measure of justice that the conditions demand, and that the attitude of the white man toward the Indian will not be patronizing and of grudgingly giving him what is his own, but that every right that one man owes to another will be given by the American people to these original inhabitants of our country—the men who were here before the white man, the men who led the white man through the forests and out upon the prairie and aided him in discovering and settling the country that the white man has finally taken away from him. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I used?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has used 29 minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, how much time have I remaining on this side?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 1 hour and 29 minutes.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] seems to take great delight in trying to discredit his next-door neighbors, the good people of Oklahoma and their Congressmen, and would seem to like to have this House believe that all the thieves, robbers, grafters, and debauchers of Indians have congregated for their last harbor of refuge in the State of Oklahoma.

Let the gentleman look a little to his own State. Let him remember that at one time practically the entire State of Kansas was owned by the Indians. Unfortunately, the aborigine has been dispossessed in that State until he now owns less than four-tenths of 1 per cent of the land in that entire great State, and what has Poor Lo to show for it?

I want to call attention to the fact that in Oklahoma to-day the Indian still owns on the Indian Territory side of the State 75 per cent, or three-quarters, of all lands included within its vast area. Now, I place that record of my State of Oklahoma against the record of the State of this gentleman who is continually trying to discredit his next-door neighbor as a complete answer to all the biliousness from which he has just relieved his system. I would say no more but for the fact of the insinuation of the gentleman that the Members of Congress from Oklahoma wink at charges of fraud and graft of Indians.

The gentleman has told you that there will be found in my speeches, in my utterances, a defense of graft in Oklahoma. I call to the attention of the fair-minded membership of this House the two speeches I have made on that subject, and they are both in the RECORD. One will be found on pages 4468 to 4673 of the RECORD, Sixty-second Congress, second session. The other, pages 863 to 865, Sixty-second Congress, third session. I invite the gentleman from Kansas to investigate and look into these remarks and not trust his memory again when he comes on the floor of this House and tries to discredit Members of this House who perhaps have as high ideals of honesty and integrity as he. [Applause.]

That there has been some fraud with relation to probate matters in Oklahoma no one attempts to deny, and I have never attempted to deny it in the past, but I defy the gentleman to mention a case in which the culprit has gone unpunished or to give any evidence on behalf of his statement that his punishment was not due to the diligence of the authorities of the State of Oklahoma. We have 40 counties on the eastern side of the State of Oklahoma with more than 101,000 allottees, and it is but natural that some percentage of fraud and some irregularities should be possible under such complicated conditions as these. The attention of this House has only been called to two cases of fraud in deceased estates in the district which I have the honor to represent. One of these was the case of Judge Phillips at Durant, Okla., and these charges were made upon testimony of a very personal friend of the distinguished gentleman from Kansas. His name is Jim Yarborough, and, by the way, Jim is a bully fellow. He is an A-1 boy to have with you in a campaign, as the gentleman from Kansas has found out, for he often has Jim Yarborough up in his district campaigning for him when he has a close race.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. With pleasure.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma deny any of the facts sworn to by Mr. Yarborough before the committee that visited Oklahoma to investigate Indian affairs down there?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I was just getting to that point, and if the gentleman will appropriate to himself his advice to us and just "possess his soul in patience" he will hear the facts concerning that matter. Mr. Yarborough, while one of the best fellows on the face of the earth and a good man to have with you in campaigns, is a man of strong enthusiasm and imagination, and, with all due respect to his very good qualities, sometimes handles the King's English a little bit loosely. Mr. Yarborough did state to the committee that Judge Phillips had permitted fraud and graft upon two Indians who had their estates squandered under the jurisdiction of his court. A few months ago Judge Phillips made application for the position of superintendent of Platt National Park and asked to have my indorsement. I got many recommendations in his behalf. Among others, I had one from this mutual friend of the gentleman from Kansas and myself, Mr. James Yarborough, the same man who testified to Judge Phillip's bad character with relation to these probate matters, and I propose now to insert that letter in the RECORD, in order that he who runs may read.

DURANT, OKLA., January 21, 1913.

Hon. CHARLES D. CARTER, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR AND FRIEND: Judge Charles A. Phillips, of Durant, Okla., is applying for the position of custodian of the Platt National Park, at Sulphur, this State. He is an upright, honest, Christian gentleman, and I consider him thoroughly competent in every particular to fill said position, and I will consider it a personal favor for you to use your influence in his behalf.

Your friend, JAS. YARBOROUGH.

To this letter I replied, clipping the testimony Mr. Yarborough had given before the Burke committee with relation to Judge Phillips, making the following brief comment:

JANUARY 31, 1913.

DEAR JIM: Can't you consider this sworn statement of yours as a complete reply to your letter?

Your friend, C. D. CARTER.

On February 14 I received a letter from Yarborough, in which he said:

DEAR CHARLIE: In reply to your recent communication relative to the indorsement that I gave Judge Phillips for the position of superintendent of Platt National Park, Sulphur, Okla., will say that the attached affidavit or testimony of mine is all right. It was true and correct in every particular; but, you understand, the old man is doty, and I don't believe really at heart that he is corrupt. However, he allowed himself to be the tool of certain grafters that got conditions badly mixed.

Faithfully, your friend, JAS. YARBOROUGH.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Is it not a fact that instead of testifying upon his own information, Mr. Yarborough furnished certified copies of the record in these cases, giving item by item, just what occurred?

Mr. CARTER. I think that he did do that in a measure.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Together with the order of the court?

Mr. CARTER. I think he did do that in a measure, although I do not recall now just what those records disclosed.

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma. I will ask the gentleman if Mr. Sells, the new Indian Commissioner, has not just returned from Oklahoma?

Mr. CARTER. Yes; and I will come to that in a moment. How much time have I remaining, Mr. Chairman?

The CHAIRMAN. One hour and twenty minutes is still under the control of the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS].

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I am going to be perfectly frank and candid with this House. I am going to say that the statement as disclosed by the Mott report was somewhat of a revelation to me. Those statements were a revelation because I had not come in contact with any such conditions in my part of the State. They were a revelation to me because the first I ever heard of them was when they were read from that side of the House by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE]. When I returned to my office I found a copy of that report lying upon my desk, and, as I remember now, my secretary told me it had been placed there by a special messenger from the department after I left for the House.

The gentleman from Oklahoma, Mr. DAVENPORT, the gentleman from Oklahoma, Mr. FERRIS, and myself at that time represented the counties which contain the Five Civilized Tribes, and yet with this investigation going on for many months not one word of notice had been given us, although we would have stood ready and willing at any time to render every possible assistance. Why was that done? Why was this report placed in the hands of the gentleman from far-off South Dakota? Why was it not placed in the hands of that gentleman who stands at the head of this Indian Committee, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS], whose honor and integrity no man in this House on either side of the Chamber will question? Why was it not placed in the hands of Mr. FERRIS, the gentleman from Oklahoma, Mr. DAVENPORT, or myself? You all know the politics of each gentleman I have mentioned. I leave it to the membership on both sides of this House to draw their own conclusions as to the purpose of this Mott report.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman undertake to deny that that report was sent to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs, Mr. STEPHENS, and also to Mr. FERRIS, at the same time it was sent to the gentleman from South Dakota, Mr. BURKE?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I am very glad the gentleman asked that question. I might have overlooked that. The gentleman from Texas, Mr. STEPHENS, has told me in private conversation, and I violate no confidence when I make this statement, that this report was furnished him about the same time it was furnished to me; but, as I have said, it was furnished me after I had come to the floor of the House. The gentleman from Illinois full well knows the ability of the gentleman from South Dakota, Mr. BURKE, and I believe him to be one of the ablest men in this House; but, able man that he is, the gentleman from Illinois also knows that the gentleman from South Dakota, Mr. BURKE, could not possibly have analyzed that report and made the able presentation of it that he did if he had not received the report until after the House met that morning.

Mr. MANN. That is not what I am claiming. That report was sent to Mr. BURKE, Mr. STEPHENS, and Mr. FERRIS shortly after the Indian bill was reported, but a number of days before the matter was taken up for consideration, and the gentlemen so admitted about a year ago.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] are both here, and they can speak for themselves.

Mr. MANN. The gentlemen spoke for themselves a year ago.

Mr. CARTER. I would like to hear from them now. I did not hear them say that a year ago.

Mr. MANN. Their memory will be fresher now than it was then, whatever they may say now.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, my remembrance of the matter is that when this report, the Mott report, was filed I called the gentleman's attention to it at once, and also the attention of the gentleman from Oklahoma, Mr. FERRIS, who represented that part of the country, and also the gentleman from Oklahoma, Mr. DAVENPORT. That is my remembrance. I did that as soon as I received the report. And the Clerk files these reports as soon as they come in, and I assume the report is in the files, and, if it is, it is an easy matter to determine when it was filed, and for what purpose, and so on.

Mr. CARTER. I am stating what the gentleman told me at a time when his mind was fresh in regard to the subject. I would like to hear from the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

Mr. FERRIS. My mind is hazy about it. As I recall, I never had read that report or received that report when the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] made his speech. All the Members know what a mass of stuff comes to our desks every morning. It might or might not have been there a few days before. I do not recall having seen it, and if the gentleman has something there showing where I said at the time I had received it, it undoubtedly is the truth; but I have no recollection now of hearing about it or of seeing it.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will pardon me, I was not criticizing the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] or any other gentleman from Oklahoma, or the chairman of the committee, for not examining the report. But the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] was assuming to give the impression, I think, and honestly on his part, that the report came to Mr. BURKE long before it came to the other gentlemen, and in the debate a year ago when the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] at one time referred to the report as having been surreptitiously sent, the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] stated that the report was sent to all of these gentlemen at the same time it was sent to him. And while the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] did not admit that he had examined the report—and I have no doubt he had not—the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] stated that he had received it at that time.

Mr. FERRIS. Just a word, if the gentleman will yield. I do not care to take the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] off his feet or consume his time. But this is a matter that has been brought——

Mr. MANN. I only speak as to the department, that is all.

Mr. CARTER. My reply to the gentleman from Illinois was as to the statement that the gentleman made to me when I made complaint to the chairman of the Committee on Indian Affairs for not having had this report. I will state further that we have recently had two hearings down in the Interior Department, which will put this matter entirely to rest. Mr. Mott, who got up the report, stated in those hearings that he thought it was furnished to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS], the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], and myself, at the same time. In fact, he said Secretary of Interior Fisher told him it was, but the Secretary was not himself present to testify. I am as positive that I never saw that report, and that it did not come to my desk until after I heard the statement of the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] here, as I am that I am in this House at the present time. But I have a stamp, which is put on all of my letters, showing the date on which they are received, and every communication that comes in is marked as received upon a certain date before anybody knows its contents. My secretary does that without any discrimination whatever.

Now, then, the other point that came out in the hearing was this: This gentleman, Mr. Mott, who got up the report, admitted upon cross-examination of Mr. FERRIS and myself that he went to Mr. BURKE three different times and discussed that report with him, and told him what was in it in order that he might be prepared, and this before the report was given to either Mr. BURKE, Mr. FERRIS, Mr. STEPHENS, or myself.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield there?

Mr. CARTER. With pleasure.

Mr. MILLER. Was the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE], or any of the gentlemen from Oklahoma who are advocating an investigation and remedial measures to stop fraudulent handling of the estates of Indian wards, aware of this?

Mr. CARTER. I will get to that in a moment.

Mr. MILLER. I think the gentleman can answer that.

Mr. CARTER. I will answer it in my own way.

Mr. MILLER. I want to follow it with the additional question, if it should be the gentleman's answer that the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] was the person who was active at that time, if it was not entirely proper that Mr. Mott should present his report to you, and you should go to him and should explain to him the various features of the report?

Mr. CARTER. I do not know what the gentleman means by being active.

Mr. MILLER. I do not think the gentleman can certainly misunderstand what I mean.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman might have been active in having some man appointed postmaster or in advocating an expedition to the North Pole.

Mr. MILLER. The matter had been up in the committee a great many times, and the gentleman certainly knows whether he was active on one side or the other.

Mr. CARTER. Previous to this I never had heard charges brought except as to two cases of fraud in relation to minors in Oklahoma, and those were two cases brought out by the Burke committee. These cases the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] brought before the Indian Committee and mentioned on the floor of this House.

Mr. MILLER. I do not expect that I have anything like the information concerning Oklahoma possessed by its Representatives, but I have information of at least 200 cases.

Mr. CARTER. I call attention to the remarks of the gentleman from Minnesota made in the House at that time, and I want the Members of this House to read them and see if he had one word to say about these probate matters in Oklahoma in either one of his speeches. The only thing the gentleman attempted to bring out, as he must remember, was some graft in connection with Muskogee town sites, a matter manifestly foreign to the subject under consideration. If he had anything to say about probate matters, I would like to have him point it out in the RECORD.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. With the greatest of pleasure at any time.

Mr. MILLER. The fact that the "gentleman from Minnesota" did not make a speech to the House on that subject is certainly no evidence that I did not have the information. I think that I can say that I have information about certain subjects. The reason I did not make a speech on that subject was because my friend, who had been chairman of the committee, the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE], had the information, and I conferred with him many, many times about it.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, no doubt the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] had much information. He may also have some information about the White Earth Reservation that would be of interest to this House if he would only give it to us, and if he has it he ought to give it to us. If the gentleman knew of these 200 cases of graft when he was speaking on this subject a year ago, it is more than passing strange that the gentleman did not mention it in his speech when the subject was under debate—his speech follows or immediately precedes the speech of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL]—but not one word.

Now, I want to get along. Mr. Chairman, I think the statement that I made, or the statement made by Mr. Mott before the Secretary of the Interior in his recent hearing, to the effect that he went to Mr. BURKE's office and practically passed by my office in order to get to Mr. BURKE's office three times to discuss these probate matters, and that he did not enter my office, although I represented those people, and did not come to the office of my colleagues from Oklahoma, Mr. FERRIS and Mr. DAVENPORT, shows very conclusively what his desire was.

Mr. MANN. Did not Mr. Mott state that Mr. BURKE sent for him?

Mr. CARTER. He did not.

Mr. MANN. Mr. BURKE stated it a year ago.

Mr. CARTER. I do not think he stated it.

Mr. MANN. And Mr. BURKE's word is pretty good, is it not?

Mr. CARTER. Yes; as is also that of the gentleman from Illinois. My recollection is—and I do not like to quote testimony of that character from memory—but my recollection is that Mr. Mott, in his testimony, said he went to Mr. BURKE's office to tell him of these things. That evidence is in the Interior Department, taken within a week or 10 days.

Now, when these charges were brought up here, as soon as we knew about them we got the Oklahoma delegation together and we immediately sent a telegram to the governor of Oklahoma, telling him to make an investigation and ascertain if the facts contained in the Mott report were true. The governor made that investigation; and, to be perfectly frank and candid with this House, I will say that the governor reported that the things stated in the Mott report were substantially correct. When he did that I wrote this letter to the governor immediately, and it was right after the debate on the floor of the House, which I believe was in February, and this was on March 9.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the debate was in December; early in December.

Mr. CARTER. Perhaps it was in December. I wrote two letters. I wrote a letter to the governor before that, and I afterwards wrote a letter to the chairman of the committee having the bill in charge, which had already passed the House. The correspondence is as follows:

Resolution adopted by the Democratic members of the Oklahoma delegation in meeting assembled at Washington.

Whereas the Democratic members of the Oklahoma delegation in Congress have for years been making the most vigorous efforts to obtain a settlement of the affairs of the Five Civilized Tribes and to reduce the Federal control over Indian affairs in the State of Oklahoma to its legitimate basis; and

Whereas Hon. CHARLES HENRY BURKE, of South Dakota, and Hon. JAMES R. MANN, of Illinois, on the floor of the House of Representatives, have denounced the probate judges of eastern Oklahoma as corrupt in dealing with the estates of Indian minors through professional guardians, using as a basis for their attack a report of November 27, 1912, by Mr. M. L. Mott, national attorney for the Creek Nation; and

Whereas the good name of the administration of the State government in Oklahoma is deeply affected by a charge of this character, which, in effect, holds up to public scorn of the people of the United States the probate judges of the State of Oklahoma and the State administration; and

Whereas the effect of this assault upon the good name of the probate judges of Oklahoma in dealing with the estates of Indian minors will be to encourage Congress to enlarge the Federal jurisdiction over Indian estates in Oklahoma rather than to terminate Federal activity in these matters: Therefore be it

Resolved, That a copy of the Mott report be immediately transmitted to the governor of Oklahoma, with request that he investigate the allegations made therein; that he call upon all county judges in eastern Oklahoma for information with regard to this matter and take such other steps as may be necessary to correct the conditions complained of, if true, and to inform the Oklahoma delegation of the truth of the matter, if these allegations are not true, or if they can be satisfactorily explained; that a copy of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD showing the debate in the House of Representatives be transmitted to the governor for his further information, and that he be urged to take immediate action in the premises.

THE SECRETARY OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, December 16, 1912.

Hon. CHARLES D. CARTER,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: During our conference this morning with regard to the McCurtain contract you mentioned casually that the Oklahoma delegation in Congress, or some of it, intended asking the governor of Oklahoma to make an investigation into the situation in that State connected with the probate of the estates of Indian minors. I think it is important that a thorough investigation should be made by some impartial and vigorous agency, and I would like to know whether the request to which you refer has actually been made; or if not, what steps, if any, you think will be taken.

Very truly, yours,

WALTER L. FISHER, Secretary.

DECEMBER 10, 1912.

Hon. WALTER L. FISHER,
Secretary of the Interior, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR SIR: In reply to your inquiry of the 16th instant, concerning my reference to request made upon the governor of Oklahoma for an investigation in connection with the probate estates of Indian minors, I will say that such resolutions were addressed to the governor of our State by the Oklahoma delegation several days ago.

Very truly, yours,

DECEMBER 30, 1912.

Gov. LEE CRUCE,
Oklahoma City, Okla.:

On December 24 our delegation addressed resolutions to you concerning certain irregularities and corruptions alleged by the Mott report to have been committed by county judges and others in eastern Oklahoma. I am receiving letters from leading Oklahoma citizens confirming some of these charges. The matter will likely be again brought before the House, and maybe congressional investigation asked immediately after reconvening Wednesday, January 1. Would it not be better to have investigation started by you before that time, and can't you give me assurance immediately both by wire and letter that searching investigation will be instituted at once.

C. D. CARTER.

OKLAHOMA CITY, OKLA., December 31, 1912.

Hon. C. D. CARTER,

As soon as I receive data called for in letter of December 18 to Senator OWEN, I will institute thorough and searching investigation into Mott charges. Letter follows.

LEE CRUCE, Governor.

Data sent by Senator OWEN not received.

LEE CRUCE, Governor.

STATE OF OKLAHOMA,
Oklahoma City, December 31, 1912.

Hon. C. D. CARTER, Washington, D. C.

DEAR CHARLIE: Some time ago I received a letter from Senator OWEN calling attention to the Mott charges and asking that I start an investigation. Realizing the importance of a careful and searching investigation, I at once wrote to Senator OWEN asking that he furnish me with a copy of the Mott report together with a copy of the exhibits attached to the report.

I have received from Mr. Mott copy of his report, but no copy of the exhibits. In his report he refers to the probate cases in counties in the aggregate. For me to investigate to ascertain whether or not his report is based upon facts it will be necessary for me to know each particular case that he investigated that my investigation may cover the same ground. In my letter to Senator OWEN I stated that if it was impossible to furnish me with copies of all of the exhibits, which I understand are quite voluminous, to have prepared and sent to me an exhibit of a single county and I would have that county checked up, and if it was found to be accurate it might be assumed that the report in its entirety was accurate.

I am willing to make just as speedy and thorough investigation as it is possible to make; in fact, am anxious to make such an investigation. If the charges made by Mr. Mott are one-half true, then certainly some sort of legislation is needed to protect the estates of these Indians. No man, either in or out of the State of Oklahoma, is more deeply concerned in the welfare of this class of our citizenship than am I, and I will certainly put forth all of the effort it is possible for a governor to command to see that they are protected from the impositions of guardians and administrators and from the wrongs of sworn officials.

If you can hasten the delivery into my hands of the information I have asked for, it will aid me in more quickly starting the investigation.

I am, yours, truly,

LEE CRUCE.

Let me know at once if any action was taken by legislation for protection of Indian minors. Will there be an extra session, and when?

LEE CRUCE, Governor.

MARCH 9, 1913.

Mr. J. T. MCINTOSH,
State Legislature, Oklahoma City, Okla.

MY DEAR SIR: I sincerely hope the legislature may see the importance of amending the probate laws of Oklahoma so as to insure better protection in the settlement of minor estates and full-blood heirs.

When the bill, which afterwards became the act of May 27, 1908, was pending in Congress the provisions giving the probate courts of Oklahoma jurisdiction of the estates of minor Indians and of the approval of conveyances of the full-blood Indian heirs of the deceased allottees, were attacked on the ground that the local State courts could not be trusted to properly protect them, and a vigorous fight made against these provisions. The Oklahoma delegation, including Senators OWEN and GORE, Congressmen FERRIS, DAVENPORT, and myself, pledged Congress that the State of Oklahoma would safeguard the interests of its minor and incompetent full-blood Indian heirs.

This act of May 27, 1908, giving the probate courts of our State jurisdiction to approve conveyances of the full-blood heirs of deceased allottees contemplated, of course, that the courts would make such rules and regulations as would insure complete protection.

Complaint has been made repeatedly, both by departmental report and in speeches on the floor of the House and Senate, that deeds have been approved by the probate courts without an appraisement of the lands, without hearing in open court, and, in fact, upon a petition presented in chambers, which, it is alleged, has resulted in the estates or helpless persons being completely dissipated and squandered.

Since Gov. Cruce's message, transmitting the partial report of Assistant Examiner and Inspector Cahill, states that these charges are, in substance, correct, and that the cost of handling these estates is "extravagant beyond defense," and since the house has already taken action in the premises, the responsibility for the correction of these evils seems to rest entirely with the senate, and specifically with the committee of which you are chairman.

I have not critically examined any of the bills now pending before the State legislature, but I think we should certainly have legislation which will regulate and reduce to a minimum the cost of administering these estates, legislation that will give the incompetent proper representation in the sale of his property and disposition of the proceeds thereof, and legislation that will provide for hearings in open court after notice of all important matters affecting these estates.

Unless our legislature takes some kind of action looking to better protection in these premises, I seriously fear that Congress may attempt to divest our probate courts of this jurisdiction, which would simply mean a complete "tying up" of the progress of our State by Federal court procedure and departmental red tape.

Yours, very truly,

C. D. CARTER,
Chairman Committee on Probate Procedure.

MARCH 9, 1913.

Gov. LEE CRUCE,
Oklahoma City, Okla.

DEAR LEE: Herewith I hand you letter expressing briefly my views as to the necessity for probate legislation, and which I ask you to be kind enough to have properly placed before the committee having jurisdiction.

Without some legislation along the lines suggested in your message I think we have little hopes of getting matters loosened up at this end of the line for some time to come.

Your friend,

Has my letter on probate matters been referred to Senator McIntosh?
C. D. CARTER.

STATE OF OKLAHOMA,
Oklahoma City, April 7, 1913.

Hon. C. D. CARTER,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR CHARLIE: Replying to your telegram just received, will say that on the 14th day of March I transmitted your letter regarding probate matters to Senator McIntosh, and presume it is still in his hands.

LEE CRUCE.

APRIL 22, 1913.

Gov. CRUCE, Governor of Oklahoma;
J. J. MCALESTER, President of the State Senate;
HARVE MAXEY, Speaker of the House,
Oklahoma City, Okla.:

Your delegation in Congress desires to respectfully call your attention to the necessity for amending and improving our probate laws for the better protection of minor estates and full-blood heirs. The numerous investigations of these matters made by Federal employees report appalling conditions. These reports have been exploited in both Chambers of Congress. An investigation by our State authorities confirms such reports and finds the derogatory accusations of the Mott report "substantially correct." Your delegation is sure to be confronted with these charges and this admission when attempts are made to get legislation. Unless something is done toward outlining a procedure which will regulate and reduce to a minimum the cost of administering these estates, which will give to the incompetent proper representation in the sale of his property and disposition of the proceeds thereof, which will provide hearings in open court after due notice on important matters affecting these estates, and which generally tightens up our probate procedure, along safe and honest lines, your delegation in Congress will be unable to get congressional legislation necessary for the development and prosperity of our State, and it may be extremely difficult to retain such probate jurisdiction as we now have.

Now, if there is anything else that ought to have been done with reference to the court to protect minors, I would like to know it. As the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] would have you believe, and as the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] insinuated, there is no denying that there is some sentiment in Oklahoma against this probate legislation. But what I want to assert here and now is that it is confined largely to a class of grafters, with whose purposes not a man on the Oklahoma delegation, no member of our State admmistration, and none of our good citizenship has any sympathy whatever.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. I will be glad to.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Has the gentleman protested here or elsewhere, or taken any steps to stop that sort of grafting, before this year?

Mr. CARTER. Yes. I just read a letter which was written to that end last year.

Mr. CAMPBELL. This is the first time that the gentleman has been in favor of an appropriation.

Mr. CARTER. For what?

Mr. CAMPBELL. For attorneys, as you call it.

Mr. CARTER. No, sir. The appropriation for attorneys was put in at the Senate end of the Capitol, by Senator OWEN, at my suggestion, because it was subject to a point of order here, and he will tell you so.

Mr. CAMPBELL. The gentleman from Oklahoma had the same opportunity to take up these cases that have been referred to during the investigation, every word of which, I believe, the gentleman from Oklahoma heard—the same opportunity as the Member from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] or myself, or the Member from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] had. Has he ever protested against that sort of graft before?

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman from Kansas now addresses himself to the only real point of criticism that could be brought against any Member of Congress from the State of Oklahoma, to wit, that this alleged graft has gone on and that we have not protested against it. We have not protested against it because we did not know it, because we had been in Congress for 10 or 12 months out of every year, because we were kept here and had not the opportunity to find these things out, and as soon as we found them out and were convinced of them we went to work to try to get real relief, while the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] was taking his part out in getting it out of his system here on the floor of the House.

Mr. CAMPBELL. And working for appropriations to get men to go down and stop it.

Mr. CARTER. The act of May 27, 1908, had an appropriation of $90,000 for the employment of special agents. Who was the first man appointed? I want to ask the gentleman from Kansas; he ought to know.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not know.

Mr. CARTER. Perhaps you have forgotten. I will tell you. He was a man who had never had any business reputation, who had never had any reputation or standing in the community as a business man; a man who was not a lawyer; a man with no experience in such matters; and the only thing that he had to commend him was the fact that he was a partisan secretary of the Oklahoma Republican executive committee and was on all down the line. Now, what did these agents do? What protection did they offer to the Indians? That is the question that has so often been asked by us on the floor of this House and still remains unanswered. They did nothing, as the gentleman from Kansas knows, except to use Federal funds provided them for the purpose of trying to antagonize the Indians in Oklahoma against our State administration, which was Democratic; and all this graft that has been exploited on the floor of this House happened under this system of protection by the district Indian agents and while the district Indian agents claimed to have been on the job at every turn in the road. Our complaint was not directed so much to the existence of the agent as it was to the character of the agents and their neglect of their work and playing politics. They were appointed for the specific purpose of protecting these Indians in probate matters. The very alleging of these frauds by gentlemen on the floor of this House is proof sufficient that they were not doing their duty, because if they had done their duty the Indians would not have been robbed. We were not opposing these agents because they were giving protection to the Indians, as I stated on the floor of this House at that time, but we were opposing them because they were failing and refusing to give the very protection for which this Federal Government was paying out its hard-earned money and which, in the light of things, it is alleged, the Indians needed. I ask any man here to dispute this fact. If these district Indian agents had done their duty, would we ever have had these charges of wholesale fraud against Oklahoma brought into this House? No; because the only duty they had to perform was to protect the restricted Indians.

But those gentlemen busied themselves mostly by going out among the Indians and giving them the information that the Democratic Party were not their friends; that the Republican Party were their friends; that they must stand by the Republican Party; and I can get numerous affidavits to that effect and put them in the RECORD if the gentleman would like to see them.

Mr. MANN. It is true. We do not require an affidavit as to what the gentleman has said about the Republican and Democratic Parties.

Mr. CARTER. I have no quarrel with the gentleman from Illinois for saying that. That is what he is here for.

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, when the gentleman gets through talking to the empty seats over on the other side I want to ask him a question.

Mr. CARTER. This side over here need the light of religion thrown into their souls.

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma. They need a good deal of light about Oklahoma.

Mr. MANN. We will have to get some new Members to give it to us, then.

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma. The gentlemen over there could not understand it, anyway, no matter who gave it to them.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman knows this is not a new matter. I am quite confident the gentleman must recollect the debate we had on this same proposition two years ago.

Mr. CARTER. I have just recently read every word of it, and am thoroughly familiar with it.

Mr. MILLER. Was not the membership on this side of the House advocating the retention of those district agents for the sole purpose of looking after probate matters?

Mr. CARTER. I will not attempt to say what intentions prompted the Members on that side. They may have been perfectly honest, and I assume they were, but they were proposing to retain on the pay roll a band of political gangsters that had done absolutely no service for the Indians, with a few isolated exceptions.

Mr. MILLER. I will not stand for that statement.

Mr. CARTER. In a moment I will yield. The gentleman ought not to interrupt me in the middle of a sentence. I say, they were a band of political gangsters who were giving no protection to the Indians, but were traveling all over that country, spending the funds of the Government, trying to tell the Indians that the Democrats were not their friends, and were a detriment to the country, and that they ought not to have anything to do with them. Now, that is a very good thing for a Republican to tell, but I should like to have him do it at his own expense, and not at an expense to a part of which I contribute.

Mr. MILLER. Of course I can not agree, and in my judgment the facts do not agree, with the statement the gentleman has just made. But that aside, is it not also true that two years ago, and a year ago, the gentlemen on the Democratic side contended that it was not necessary to have these agents, because there were no frauds in Oklahoma.

Mr. CARTER. I speak for myself alone, and I invite the attention of the gentleman to a close scrutiny of the RECORD to see if I made any such statement as that.

Mr. MILLER. My recollection is—and I was here through the debate—that it was universally claimed, on the opposite side of the aisle, that there was no need for these agents, because this condition did not exist there at all.

Mr. CARTER. Perhaps I occupy so small a place in the mind of the gentleman that the matter was universal without my taking part in it.

Mr. MILLER. I do not want to occupy too much of the gentleman's time, but let me ask him, What does he think about the advisability of having agents of this kind, and the need for them?

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, as I have stated time and again on the floor of this House—and there are some Members who do not agree with me on this—I think it is the duty of the Federal Government to protect and take care of every incompetent Indian who is incompetent on account of Indian blood; but I do not think that should be carried to the extent of paying out a lot of money to supervise my affairs and the affairs of other Indians who, like me, are less than half Indian blood.

Mr. MILLER. There is no question about that. That is not, however, an answer to the question I propounded. My query was, and is, Does the gentleman now think that there is need for agents of the United States Government to protect the estates of minors and incompetent Indians?

Mr. CARTER. I am glad the gentleman called my attention to that, and in reply I say yes, if you get agents who will protect them; but I do not think you or anybody else have the right to stand on the floor of this House and attempt to defend a bunch of political gangsters, such as most of the district agents were.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman does not mean that.

Mr. CARTER. I mean exactly what I say.

Mr. MILLER. Oh, no.

Mr. CARTER. I can furnish the gentleman evidence of it and put it in the RECORD.

Mr. MILLER. A man blinded by partisanship might consider it evidence, but I do not think any fair-minded man would.

Mr. CARTER. Here is what one of those agents did, and I can put his name in the RECORD if necessary. One of those agents, when he was appointed, told a banker at Oklahoma City—the banker is there now, and he is an Indian—"I am going over into the Choctaw Nation."

"What are you going to do?"

"I am going to make Republicans out of those Indians over there. We will not have a Republican Congressman this year, but we will cut CHARLIE CARTER'S majority down, and we will have a Republican Congressman two years thereafter."

He made good on his first threat, but he did not quite make the boat on the second; and if he was not a political gangster, then I would like to have a definition of the term.

Mr. MILLER. Oh, well——

Mr. CARTER. I am not half through. I am glad the gentleman called my attention to it. Two of these district agents went into conference, and another one happened to be present, who let it leak out, and says he will testify to it. They were in conference with one of their overhead officials, with the purpose of trying to arrange districts in Oklahoma so that my colleague [Mr. FERRIS] and myself might be eliminated from Congress; and I can furnish an affidavit from one of the district agents to that effect.

Mr. MANN. We do not defend that.

Mr. MILLER. Certainly not. The gentleman has found two men. I join with the gentleman in saying that those men should be eliminated from the service.

Mr. CARTER. That is what we are trying to do with them; that is all.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman has mentioned two.

Mr. CARTER. If the gentleman will possess his soul in patience, I can, with a few exceptions, go down the line with the whole 18.

Mr. DONOVAN. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order that the gentleman from Minnesota has not had recognition from the Chair.

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma rose.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Oklahoma yield to his colleague?

Mr. CARTER. I will.

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma. When you were a boy I suppose you went to shows, did you not?

Mr. CARTER. When I had the money, and if I did not I sometimes crawled under the tent. [Laughter.]

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma. And when there was a large crowd around there was always a shell game, was there not?

Mr. CARTER. I have heard of that.

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma. But we have had no more of this kind of a thing in Oklahoma than they have in other States in proportion to the size.

Mr. CARTER. In proportion to the number of Indians, I judge not.

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma. One more question. This man Mott the gentleman is talking about; is he the man that was attorney for the Creeks for 10 years and spent $125,000?

Mr. CARTER. I believe he stated that before the Secretary a few days ago.

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma. And is he the same man that lived in Oklahoma 10 years and never became a citizen and never paid a cent of tax?

Mr. CARTER. I believe he admitted that.

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma. And is he the same man that practiced law in Oklahoma and never was admitted to practice?

Mr. CARTER. He also admitted that before the Secretary, I understand.

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma. That is the same fellow?

Mr. CARTER. Yes.

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma. Then I want to say if that is the fellow, the people down in Oklahoma do not believe anything he says.

Mr. CARTER. I think there is very much virtue in what the gentleman from Oklahoma says.

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma. I want also to say that the Mott report was made for political effect. I will not ask any more questions, but I will take my own time after the gentleman closes.

Mr. CARTER. Now, Mr. Chairman, how much time have I consumed?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has used 41 minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. How much time remains to this side?

The CHAIRMAN. Forty-eight minutes.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I can go down along the line, and if the gentleman insists I can call the names and put them in the RECORD.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman calls them grafters.

Mr. CARTER. No; I said political gangsters.

Mr. MILLER. I may have misunderstood the gentleman.

Mr. CARTER. I think that when a man goes into a gang and spends Indian money for political purposes, he approaches pretty near a grafter.

Mr. MILLER. But the gentleman does not mean to accuse them of being grafters?

Mr. CARTER. A number of them were relieved of duty on account of grafting, but what I say now is that I accuse them of neglecting their duty to play politics, I accuse them of not giving the Indian the protection that they were paid to give; that it was their duty to protect them against the very things that the Mott report complains of; that we were paying $100,000 to them for this very purpose, and they were rendering practically no service, except in a few isolated instances. If they were rendering any material service, how did all this graft take place? The service they were rendering was political service to the Republican Party.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CARTER. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. What legislation was enacted by the State Legislature of Oklahoma?

Mr. CARTER. The letters I have read were sent during the closing days of the regular session of our State legislature. Nothing was done then, but as soon as the special session was called, we sent other letters and telegrams that I have read. Unfortunately, in Oklahoma, as in other places, we have some people who would neglect such important matters as these in the hope of gaining political advantage. Some kind of bill regulating probate matters had passed the house unanimously and had been referred to a committee of the senate.

The Oklahoma delegation was not sufficiently familiar with this bill to insist upon its passage, but was asking legislation for relief along lines specifically set forth in this correspondence. Whether it be true or not, it has been charged that the chairman of the committee in the Senate to which this bill was referred was at that time contemplating making the race for Congress, and that he expected to make this probate matter the issue of his campaign. At any rate, he had sufficient force to bury the bill in that committee. Since that time, I understand, he has concluded that the people of Oklahoma are as honest as in any other State, and that neglect of the protection of minor children's property is not good dope in a political campaign.

Since the legislature adjourned, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois, who, I believe, has this matter at heart and has often expressed himself to me much along the lines of my own thought, the Commissioner of Indian Affairs made a visit to Oklahoma. He had three different meetings with probate officials of our State, came down on the common level, extended the right hand of good-fellowship to them, and told them he was there not to advise and malign but to assist them in the discharge of their duties and protection of minor estates. He succeeded in getting in complete harmony with the probate courts in Oklahoma, and says if we will give him this $75,000 for probate attorneys he can offer sufficient protection to the minors that will prevent any further charges from coming into this House, that the county judges will be glad to assist him in the premises, and that while under the law Oklahoma State courts have full jurisdiction of probate matters, the county judges did not resent the hand he has taken in the matter and will give him full and complete cooperation.

The difference in the way that Commissioner Sells handled this matter and the manner in which it was handled by the former administration is surely responsible for this change of attitude toward the Federal Government. These district agents and others, in effect, walked up and slapped the county judges in the face, denounced them as crooks and grafters before they ever attempted to give the Indians any protection themselves at all. But Commissioner Sells has created such an era of good feeling among the people of Oklahoma in the way he has handled this matter that for the first time in the experience of our State our people are beginning to believe that they are really a part and parcel of these United States.

Mr. MANN. And before that they thought they were the whole thing.

Mr. CARTER. They knew they could not be that so long as Chicago and the gentleman from Illinois were on the map. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to use one minute myself for the purpose of placing in the RECORD the set of rules and regulations that have been agreed upon between the Commissioner of Indian Affairs, Mr. Sells, and the County Judges' Association of the Creek, Cherokee, Seminole, Chickasaw, and Choctaw Nations. I hope that this will pour oil on the troubled waters, because in the future I do not believe any of these troubles will occur. I ask that these rules and regulations be placed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to insert in the RECORD the rules and regulations to which he has referred. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The rules referred to are as follows:

RULES OF PROCEDURE IN PROBATE MATTERS ADOPTED BY THE COUNTY JUDGES OF EASTERN OKLAHOMA.

JANUARY, 1914.

Rule 1. The ——— days of each month are hereby set apart and designated as the dates on which the court will hear guardians' reports, provided that such reports have been on file and notice given as provided in Rule 3.

Rule 2. All guardians are required to make annual or semiannual reports, unless otherwise directed, under oath, showing fully and completely the description, character, kind, and value of all property held for their wards. All items of receipts and disbursements must be in detail, and receipts produced and filed for sums paid out. All securities and assets should be listed in each report, and copies of deeds, mortgages, etc., evidencing same, recorded and attached thereto as exhibits. Upon an approval of any order of court to invest the funds of a ward, guardians shall attach to their reports copies of evidence of title or other investment. The date and amount of guardian's bond, premium paid, if any, as well as the names, addresses, and solvency of sureties thereon, must be given. The name, age, sex of the ward and relationship, if any, to the guardian should be stated, and the school advantages disclosed. All reports must be self-explanatory. A failure or refusal to file reports as due will be grounds for removal.

Rule 3. Upon the filing of the reports and fixing of the date for hearing thereof the judge shall cause notice to be given of the date of such hearing to the person having custody of the ward, the representative of the Interior Department or the probate attorney, at least 10 days before the date of the hearing. Any person or persons interested may appear and make objections, if so desired, to the approval of such reports, and offer evidence to support such objections.

Rule 4. No receipt from the ward upon the final accounting of a guardian will be accepted or considered unless the ward be brought into open court, and upon the hearing of said final receipt the stenographic notes shall be transcribed and a copy thereof filed with the papers in the case. In the consideration of any reports, annual or final, any item included in any previous report may be reviewed.

Rule 5. Petitions for the sale of land of minors and incompetents will be heard ——— of each month. On the hearing on petitions for sale, the guardian, person in custody, and the ward himself, when over 14 years of age, must be present and must be examined as to the necessity for said sale and the truth of the allegations of the petition, and furnish such additional evidence as the court may require. The evidence offered must be taken down and transcribed and a copy thereof filed with the papers in the case. No bid will be considered by the court unless a certified check in the amount of 10 per cent of the amount of the bid be deposited either in court or with the guardian offering the land for sale.

Rule 6. In the sale of minors' lands or minors' interest in land, the guardians shall be required to render to the court for his approval before confirmation of sale, an account of sale showing each item of expense incurred in such sale, and in no case shall abstract fees be charged against the minor's estate, except by a special agreement with the court at or prior to the time of filing bid. Confirmation will not be had except on the ———.

Rule 7. Under the sale of real estate by guardian, no fees in excess of the following schedule of fees will be allowed attorneys:

On the first $500 or less, 10 per cent.
From $500 to $1,500, inclusive, 5 per cent.
From $1,500 to $3,000, inclusive, 2 per cent.
For all above $3,000, 1 per cent.

But in no case shall the fee exceed the sum of $300. The minimum fee will be $25, unless the court, in granting the petition for the sale, shall stipulate that the fee and costs incident thereto shall be borne by the purchaser.

Rule 8. No petition for the sale of ward's property or voucher for the payment by the Interior Department of money to the guardian will be considered if said guardian is delinquent in making reports or filing inventory as required by law.

Rule 9. No oil and gas, or other mineral lease, covering lands belonging to minors or incompetents, will be approved except after sale in open court to the highest and best responsible bidder. All petitions for the approval of oil and gas leases shall be filed at least five days before the same are sold as provided herein, and notice of such sale must be given by posting and by publication, where publication is practicable, and shall be on ——— of each week.

Rule 10. Deeds conveying inherited lands of full-blood Indian heirs shall be approved only on the verified petitions of grantors, which shall set forth the names of the parties, description of the land, roll number of the decedent and grantors and quantum of blood, the permanent residence of the deceased allottee at the time of death, and the character and extent of the interest sold. Said petitions shall be set down for hearing not less than 10 days from the date of filing, and on one of the two days hereinbefore provided for the confirmation of sale by guardian, advertised in the county where the land is located for one week, and probate attorney or local attorney for the tribe of which the grantor is a member shall be notified upon the filing of the petition. Said land shall be appraised, and testimony of disinterested parties may be required as to the value of the land conveyed when deemed necessary by the court. The grantors shall be present and be examined in open court and before such deeds shall be approved, and the court must be satisfied that the consideration has been paid in full in the presence of the court. No petition will be considered when any deed has been previously placed of record upon the land, or taken within 30 days after the death of the allottee. The evidence taken shall be transcribed by the stenographer and filed of record in the case, the expense of which, including attorneys' fees, must be borne by the grantee. When it shall appear for the best interests of the Indian approval will be withheld unless the grantor agrees, in writing, for the deposit of the proceeds derived from the sale of the land, to be expended subject to the approval of the county court.

Rule 11. Guardians shall not expend for or on account of their wards any sum unless first authorized by the court, except in case of sickness of the ward or other emergency, in which event notice must be given immediately to the court.

Rule 12. The national attorney or any of the probate attorneys for the Five Civilized Tribes or the representative of the Department of the Interior—or Department of Justice in the Seminole Nation—will be recognized in any matter involving the person or property of a citizen of such nation.

Rule 13. Trust funds must be deposited by the guardian as trustee and not to his personal account, and where an individual is guardian for several persons or estates the accounts shall be deposited and kept separate and apart.

Rule 14. In the settlement of a guardian's account, where the guardian is the parent of the ward, no allowance will be made from the ward's estate for board and keep, except it is made to appear a positive injustice would result from the enforcement of such rule and unless said parent is unable to support said ward.

Rule 15. All guardians shall be required to secure loans for funds in their hands belonging to their wards with real estate first-mortgage security, not to exceed 50 per cent valuation of the land, approved by the county court, for such length of time as will insure the collection of the principal and interest before the arriving at majority of the wards.

Rule 16. No will or other instrument purporting to be a will covering the lands of a restricted Indian of the Five Civilized Tribes, whether such land be his individual allotment or inherited land, when submitted by the allottee or other person to the proper probate court, as required under existing law, shall receive the acknowledgment of nor be admitted to probate by such probate court until after notice shall have been given to the local probate or tribal attorneys for the tribes or for the Department of the Interior, or a representative thereof.

Rule 17. These rules shall also apply to executorships and administrations in so far as they are applicable, especially inasmuch as sales of property and accountings are concerned.

Rule 18. All advertisements not required by law may be waived with the consent of the county court, upon the approval of the probate attorney or tribal attorney.

JANUARY 9, 1914.

The above and foregoing rules were recently promulgated by the county judges of the counties of the Creek, Cherokee, Seminole, Choctaw, and Chickasaw Nations, constituting the Five Civilized Tribes in Oklahoma, and meet with my hearty approval.

N. M. WILLIAMS,
County Judge, Grady County,
President County Judges' Association of Oklahoma.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I now yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS].

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, I am not now a member of the Indian Committee, and I shall not attempt to debate the bill in any sense. I do not believe the criticisms hurled at our State and courts by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] are well founded, and I am sorry that he felt called upon to make them. There has been just criticism directed against me personally, though I think the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] did not mention my name—I now mention it myself—with reference to the RECORD, and this House shall not, with my permission, go without knowing the facts. The facts are that at the time this matter came up I was the ranking member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS], the chairman; he and myself were making speeches pro and con, a dozen or more a day, for a series of days. The remarks to which the gentleman referred consisted of a colloquy back and forth that had everything on earth in it. I withheld those remarks for the time being, clearly within the House practice, waiting until our governor could make an investigation regarding the true conditions down there, and after that, covering considerable time, they were inadvertently kept out of the RECORD. If any gentleman thinks there is anything wrong about that, he can scold me or criticize me for it as much as he desires. I submit willingly that the gentleman from Illinois made a very just criticism. It was my full intention to put them into the RECORD, and, if the gentleman desires, I will be very glad to state the contents now or at any other time.

Mr. MANN. Oh, the gentleman surely did not understand me to criticize him?

Mr. FERRIS. I think perhaps the gentleman should have done so.

Mr. MANN. Oh, quite the contrary. I complimented the gentleman on keeping them out of the RECORD. [Laughter.]

Mr. FERRIS. I do not want the gentleman to do that. I was not in the Chamber when the reference was made or I would have spoken at the time.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman was right.

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Chairman, one word more. The facts are these. This controversy about Oklahoma is not a new one. It occurs annually. Every year there are those present who elect to adopt in toto the contentions of the 508 Federal Government employees at Muskogee, and the 300 scattered Federal employees on my side of the State. There are those of us here who believe they are partially right and partially wrong, and who believe that the State courts are partially right and partially wrong, or, at least, careless. This court controversy was here last year, the year before, and it is here this year and will be here next year, and it will be with us so long as concurrent jurisdiction is vested in the Federal Government and in the State government, walking hand in hand to handle these questions.

There are 117,000 Indian allotments in our State. There are 330,000 Indians in the United States. We have more than a third of the Indians in the United States in our one State. That necessitates a complication on questions that arose last year, the year before, and this year, and will arise next year and will be present with us as long as the Indian problem is there. I have no doubt that the gentleman from Kansas does what he does for a good purpose, although I think the gentleman from Kansas is almost cruelly severe. It is a very serious thing for the gentleman from Kansas, or any other well-meaning gentleman in this House, to castigate the entire population of a State having almost half the Indians in the United States within its borders, because of irregularities that must of necessity spring up. More than 48 per cent of the total area of our State is not subject to any taxation, but is held by Indian allotments in one way or another. Questions spring up that are troublesome; that are hard to deal with. Mistakes occur which we all regret, and while I have differed with the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] on many things, while I have differed with the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] on many things, there are more mistakes and there was more trouble in my State with regard to probate procedure than I thought there were at the time the gentleman from South Dakota delivered his remarks.

There is but one sole regret that I have about his remarks, and that is that our Committee on Indian Affairs that year, in preparing the Indian appropriation bill, had gone into everything so fully, so openly, and so completely, and that not one word was said about this matter until we came on the floor of the House. Like every other Member from every other State, I have pride in my people, pride in my State, and I doubt the propriety of wholesale charges by any Member. Your State sent the people that comprise our State. To assault us and to assault our State is to assault your own people. The people that pressed out and opened up Oklahoma, the people who converted those cow camps into prosperous and happy homes, ought not to be assaulted without thought and in wholesale fashion. My good friend from Kansas is a trustworthy and honest Member of this House, and he knows the conditions that are present in the opening up of a new State. He knows the conditions and how difficult Indian problems are to solve. I am wondering if the gentleman, on second thought, will not care to temper his own remarks in the castigation of a State less than 7 years old, with all of those problems to deal with?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, how much time is remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has 36 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Kansas 50 minutes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I desire to ask the gentleman from Kansas if he intends to have more than one speech on his side?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes; there will be two or three to consume the remainder of the time.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will ask the gentleman to use some of his time now.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Very well. I will ask the Chair to call my attention when I have consumed seven or eight minutes.

The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] referred to the testimony of Mr. Yarborough as though that testimony was largely the result of the witness's imagination. Here is what he testified to:

Chickie-Chockie, an Indian, owned a tract of land within the jurisdiction of the Bryan County court that was renting for $300 a year. There was a total of 325 acres. The land sold for $400, and the court approved the sale.

The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] heard that testimony some three years ago. He also heard the testimony given as to the Bryan County court, and I will put the whole of this in the RECORD, but to save time I will read:

Ike Poole was the guardian of Summie Poole. Now, Summie had considerable property. She was an Indian child 8 years old. The guardian sold her property. The aggregate of the sale was $2,830.75. Ike Poole, the guardian of this little child, appointed by the court, brought in a bill of expenses for $4,967.70. The court, after seriously considering the matter, reduced the amount of that claim $75, leaving a balance due the guardian of $2,136.55. The child owed its guardian $2,136.55. A petition was filed to have the homestead of the child sold to pay the amount of this $2,136.55. The court approved the report of the guardian.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. I believe I stated those were the two cases I knew of.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman from Kansas now tell us what happened to this judge at the next election? It is in the testimony right there.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I understand that he was not nominated.

Mr. CARTER. He was defeated, and Mr. Yarborough's statement set forth in that same testimony that he was defeated on account of this transaction.

Mr. MANN. Was Yarborough's statement right? You said a while ago he never told the truth.

Mr. CARTER. I said he sometimes handled the queen's English carelessly. He may have gotten it straight this time.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I never saw the witness Yarborough until he testified about these matters. I brought this out and made some comment on it at the time; some such comment as I have made here.

I might, if I were disposed to add to the criticism I have already given, say that no step was taken here to correct those abuses except the steps that were taken on this side of the aisle, and every step that was taken was bitterly resisted by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] and his colleagues.

Mr. CARTER. When did this testimony come into the RECORD, if the gentleman will yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. It was taken in August, 1910.

Mr. CARTER. When did the gentleman first present those cases to the House?

Mr. CAMPBELL. At the time of the consideration of the very next appropriation bill.

Mr. CARTER. I think the gentleman will find that he presented them during the consideration of the appropriation bill at the first session of the Sixty-second Congress, in 1912, two years thereafter.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I am very sure it was during the consideration of the next bill. Now, these are simply samples, as the testimony showed, of what was done throughout Oklahoma by probate courts. If this is a reflection upon the people of Oklahoma or the State of Oklahoma, they are responsible, and not I. I have presented the matters here because I have deemed it a duty to present every matter here that would arouse the conscience of this Congress and of the people to the outrages that have been perpetrated down there against helpless Indians and were not being righted within that jurisdiction.

Mr. Chairman, how much time have I used?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has occupied eight minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Has the gentleman from Kansas more than one more speech on that side?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I have three on this side.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I have two more on this side.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I do not think anyone doubts the ability or the integrity of the gentlemen from Oklahoma who were in the last House and who took part in the debate on this subject when it was up a year ago. Mr. Mott made an investigation of the probate proceedings as related to minor Indian estates, especially in the various probate courts of Oklahoma, and, although he was assailed a year ago with vituperation on the floor of the House, which is again repeated this morning, not by one of the gentlemen who took part a year ago, but by one who rushes fresh into the fray, his report is now conceded, apparently by everyone who has investigated the matter, to have been substantially correct and of great value.

When it was submitted last December, a copy was furnished to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STEPHENS] by messenger and a copy was mailed to the gentlemen from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS and Mr. CARTER].

Mr. CARTER. Mine, I think, came up by special messenger.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] yield?

Mr. MANN. I yield, but I think the gentleman is incorrect. I am referring to a statement made by the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] a year ago.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield right there? Does the gentleman have the record straight as to date? I am not contentious or am not asserting that this or that may be true. I do not see everything that comes on my desk, printed circulars or things of that kind. Of what date is it?

Mr. MANN. I did not mention the date. I said in December. Mr. BURKE made his first speech in the House on December 13, 1912. The Indian bill was under consideration at that time, and had been reported a few days before. I am not criticizing the gentlemen because they did not read this report prior to its consideration by the House. When the report came to Mr. BURKE, I say, he happened to look at it. I venture to say it is a "happenstance" if we look at any report promptly that comes to our desk, or, perhaps, look at it at all. Mr. BURKE consulted with me in regard to it before he made his speech in the House.

He said he had received this report and had examined it, and if the statements made in it were true it was something that required exploitation in the House, and properly. The truth is that the statements in the Mott report were so remarkable that he had some hesitancy even in making use of them in debate, and he arranged with me that when he commenced his speech I should ask him some kind of a question which would justify him in proceeding; and this took place in the House.

Mr. BURKE, after quoting the law, which applies only to Oklahoma, that the persons and property of minor allottees of the Five Civilized Tribes shall, except as otherwise specifically provided by law, be subject to the jurisdiction of the probate courts of the State of Oklahoma, proceeded and made this statement:

Mr. Chairman, on former occasions I and others on this side of the House have questioned the integrity and the honesty of the probate courts of Oklahoma, and I want to say right now at the outset that, in my opinion, in the probate courts in that portion of Oklahoma where the Five Civilized Tribes reside some of the judges are corrupt and dishonest and a large number of them are indifferent in the discharge of the duties of their office, so far as the affairs of Indian minors and Indians generally are concerned, and particularly in guardianship matters.

I asked the gentleman to yield to me, and I made this statement:

The statement made by the gentleman, or the charge made by the gentleman, of course, is a very serious one—that the probate courts and probate judges in such portions of Oklahoma are either indifferent to the care of the wards of the court or are dishonest and desirous, practically, of depriving the wards of their property. I hope the gentleman will not make such a statement in the House unless he has some proof to submit to the House on that matter.

Thereupon Mr. BURKE proceeded with his proof. The only answer that was made at the time was the answer that might naturally be made by surprised and astounded counsel. Having no way of rebutting the statement, the gentlemen from Oklahoma proceeded to abuse the witness, as I suppose the other gentleman [Mr. FERRIS] will proceed to do this morning, as he has already done.

Mr. Mott was denounced in every way that was parliamentary, particularly by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT]. My recollection is that the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] rather sidestepped the proposition, not having knowledge, and being always—I will say this—especially interested in the Indians and in the protection of Indians. And I do not say it with any reflection upon the other gentlemen from Oklahoma, because I believe that to be true of them also.

The gentlemen from Oklahoma after that debate wired the governor of Oklahoma; they wrote letters to the governor of Oklahoma. And on April 22, after having stated in the House that they had not believed these Mott statements as made, the entire Democratic and Republican delegation from Oklahoma wrote a letter to the governor in which they made this statement——

Mr. CARTER. It was a telegram.

Mr. MANN. If it was, I suppose it was sent at Government expense. It is a very long telegram. I should call it a long letter. It was probably not paid for by any of the gentlemen. Otherwise it would not have been telegraphed.

Mr. CARTER. It was right to be sent at Government expense.

Mr. MANN. Certainly it had a right to be sent at Government expense. I read:

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 22, 1913.

LEE CRUCE,
Governor of Oklahoma, Oklahoma City, Okla.:

Your delegation in Congress desires to respectfully call your attention to the necessity for amending and improving our probate laws for the better protection of minor estates and full-blood heirs. The numerous investigations of these matters made by Federal employees report appalling conditions. These reports have been exploited in both Chambers of Congress. An investigation by our State authorities confirms such reports and finds the derogatory accusations of the Mott report "substantially correct." * * *

Although my friend from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS] signed this telegram a year ago, he said this morning that he thought the statements in the Mott report were substantially incorrect, as I understood him.

Mr. FERRIS. I do not think the gentleman is quoting me quite right there.

Mr. MANN. That is the reason I am stopping and pausing—for the gentleman to correct me if I am not.

Mr. FERRIS. I have not my remarks before me, but I mean as I recollect them.

Mr. MANN. I am speaking of this morning.

Mr. FERRIS. That is what I refer to. My present view—whatever that may be worth here or elsewhere—is that the Mott report was more nearly correct than I thought it was at the time I made my speech. That is what I think I said. That is what I believe, anyway.

Mr. MANN. I do not want to put the gentleman in an improper light at all. I am not seeking to criticize the gentleman. I have been sometimes a little surprised that the gentlemen did not know better what was going on in their districts; and yet I think that is quite natural, and I do not believe, and I never have believed, that the people of Oklahoma or the people of any other State in the Union desired as a body to condone fraud or dishonesty on the part of any of their officials.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. FERRIS. I hope the gentleman will yield to me for a moment. I want to ask him a question.

Mr. MANN. I want to make a little more speech before I yield to a question.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes more to the gentleman from Illinois.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. FERRIS. Did the gentleman say he did not desire to yield?

Mr. MANN. Not at this time. I think it is proper to say that although the entire delegation last April urged the governor to have this telegram read before both houses of the Oklahoma Legislature, which I assume was done, asking for remedial legislation, and making the statement which I think the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] read, that the Oklahoma delegation could not expect to get the legislation desired here unless the Oklahoma Legislature would grant remedial legislation as to probate courts; as a matter of fact, nothing as yet has been done in the way of legislation. And this House, Mr. Chairman, owes a great deal to the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE], who called to the attention of Congress this Mott report, which otherwise, along with many other documents, might have lain unnoticed and unheralded until the end of time. Mr. BURKE called it to the attention of this House. The propositions contained in it were denied in the main on the other side of the House, but afterwards honestly and fairly investigated by the gentlemen who at first were disinclined to believe them.

Some gentlemen now say that the Mott report—and the gentleman from Oklahoma this morning said that Mr. Mott's statements would not be believed in Oklahoma. Mr. Mott's statements, in my judgment, are believed in Oklahoma by the honest people there. I have no doubt they will endeavor to remedy the conditions set forth. But whether his statements are believed or not, I want to call to the attention of the House the statements of another person who, I suppose, will receive credit on the Democratic side of the House—the statements of the present Commissioner of Indian Affairs, a Democrat, appointed by this administration. He subjected himself to an interview in December, in Denver, which was taken down by a stenographer, and among other things in his statement, which appears in the Denver Times of December 31, 1913, occurs this language:

The commissioner then touched on a convention to be held in Muskogee, Okla., to which he goes from here, and which is to take up the matter of guardianship of Indian minors on the reservations and the administration of their estates.

Then the commissioner said:

The Indian children of Oklahoma are the richest average children in the United States. However, it is a lamentable fact that they have less statutory protection there than in any other State. In the 40 counties in eastern Oklahoma there are now pending from 800 to 1,500 probate estates, about 85 per cent of which are Indian children's estates.

I have recently discovered that it costs about 3 per cent to settle a white child's estate and that it costs more than 20 per cent to settle the estate of an Indian boy or girl. This is the result of guardians having been appointed without regard to their equipment and the acceptance of bondsmen many times wholly insolvent.

Enormous fees have been charged by attorneys and unconscionable fees by guardians, together with indefensible expenditures of their funds, which has frequently resulted in the dissipation of their entire property.

It is not an uncommon thing when an Indian child reaches his majority to find that his guardian has absconded and that his bondsmen are wholly financially irresponsible. It is my determined intention to reform this indefensible condition, and to this end I have recently appointed a number of probate attorneys who will give their whole time, under my direction, to this work.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield right there?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Illinois has expired.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I yield to the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I noticed in the reading of the purported statement of the Indian Commissioner that he is quoted as stating that there are from 800 to 1,500 guardianship cases in the 40 counties in eastern Oklahoma. I just want to correct that statement, so that the House will not get a wrong impression. There are from 800 to 1,500 of these cases in each of some of those counties.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. In Muskogee County alone there are over 6,000.

Mr. FERRIS. I think he must have meant to say that there were 600,000 cases in all.

Mr. MANN. The statements made by the commissioner are very largely included in his annual report.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman has been so fair in his statements of the history of this matter that I want to ask him a question of parliamentary etiquette. Does not the gentleman think it would have been a little better and that it would have had a little more wholesome effect if the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] had asked the chairman of the committee to call the committee together and let them take some action in the committee, rather than to have a great blowing of trumpets on the floor here.

Mr. MANN. If the action now suggested by the gentleman from Oklahoma had been taken, no one outside of the Committee on Indian Affairs would ever have heard of the Mott report.

Mr. FERRIS. I do not think the gentleman ought to say that.

Mr. MANN. The Committee on Indian Affairs had this report before it. The gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. BURKE] could not require the committee to get together.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will correct the gentleman on that——

Mr. FERRIS. We never had it at all during the consideration of the bill.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. The Indian bill was reported and on the calendar before that report ever reached this city.

Mr. MANN. I have stated that already, but the report was in the hands of the gentleman from Texas and on the table of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. FERRIS], and the gentleman admitted it a year ago.

Mr. FERRIS. Not I?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. FERRIS. Where?

Mr. MANN. In the unpublished speech.

Mr. FERRIS. No.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMPSON].

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to say anything on this question, because I am not a member of the Committee on Indian Affairs, and should not have said anything if the people of Oklahoma had not been attacked here and called scoundrels, thieves, robbers, murderers, and accessories before the fact to murder by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] and by other gentlemen on that side.

Mr. Chairman, I want to say that we are very fortunate in this Congress in having a MANN in this House. If we did not have a man who spelled his own name M-A-N-N, we might not have a single man in the House, according to the gentleman from Illinois. I now yield to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] to ask me the question that he asked my colleague [Mr. CARTER] awhile ago, if he desires to do so.

Mr. MILLER. I prefer that the gentleman make his own statement, and then I can determine whether it is possible that he can furnish me any information or not. I have my doubts about it.

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma. I do not know whether it is possible to furnish the gentleman any information. I can tell better after I hear his statement than I can now. During the time that I have, I want to put in the RECORD a statement of the probate laws of the State of Illinois and of the probate laws of the State of Oklahoma, in order that the people of the country may understand what the people of Oklahoma have enacted for the protection of minors in that State as compared with what the people of Illinois have enacted upon the same subject.

I desire to say, in addition, that the probate laws of the State of Oklahoma that we have in force in that State at this time are principally the probate laws enacted during the Republican Territorial days when my friends from Oklahoma, my colleagues, Mr. McGUIRE and Mr. MORGAN, and their party had control of the State. I will submit to my colleagues, Mr. McGUIRE and Mr. MORGAN, if the probate laws of the State of Oklahoma have been changed since the Democrats have had control of the State—except they have not been changed for the better? I will yield any part of my time for them to make any statement indicating that the probate laws have been made worse since the Democrats have been in power in the State of Oklahoma.

Mr. Chairman, I was a member of the State Senate in Oklahoma in 1912. I favored an amendment to the probate laws of Oklahoma that made it more stringent and more strict to sell the Indian lands. I do not want to say, and I am not going to say, that there has been no violation of the laws there. I am not going to say that nothing wrong has been done in Oklahoma, but I am going to say, as I said in my question to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] that where you find a show you find a lot of shell-game men, and where there is a great number of probate proceedings you are going to find a number of men who want to shell game the minors of the State, and we have it in Oklahoma. I do not attempt to defend everything that has been done in Oklahoma. I want to say that the amount of wrongdoing in that State has been just as little as there has been in the State of the gentleman from Illinois or the gentleman from Kansas or the gentleman from Minnesota in proportion to the amount of probate business done in that State. Now, I think my colleague from Oklahoma, Mr. CARTER, put in the RECORD the report of Mr. Sells.

Mr. CARTER. No; I did not put the report of Mr. Sells in the RECORD.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. We put in the rules adopted at the convention at Muscogee of the judges of the various Five Civilized Tribes.

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma. I would like to have that in the RECORD to show that there was complete harmony between the Indian Commissioner's office and the probate judges in Oklahoma. I want to say, in conclusion, that Mr. Sells told me personally that he found no body of men in this country who were more willing to cooperate with him in straightening out the probate business and doing justice to the minors than he found among the probate judges of Oklahoma.

We have some people in Oklahoma who would not be entitled to be called angels, but the percentage is as small as in any of the States where our critics reside.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, how does the time stand?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas has 30 minutes remaining and the gentleman from Kansas 25 minutes.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMPSON], who has just taken his seat after addressing the House on this subject without throwing any light upon it, made the charge, in a moment of wildness, that the probate courts of Illinois had been as corrupt and dishonest, practically, as the probate courts in Oklahoma in these Indian affairs. The charge is absolutely baseless. The gentleman had no information on which to make a charge. I do not suppose he has ever investigated the subject, and I defy him to produce any evidence to that effect.

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MANN. Yes.

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma. I did not make that charge. I said that I wanted to put in the RECORD the probate laws of Oklahoma and the probate laws of Illinois, and I said there was no greater percentage of violation in Oklahoma than there was in Illinois.

Mr. MANN. That statement is incorrect.

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma. That is the gentleman's statement about it; I deny it.

Mr. MANN. I do not care whether the gentleman denies it or not. I dare the gentleman to produce any evidence on the subject.

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma. I say it is true.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman is talking wildly, as usual.

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma. The gentleman is talking inaccurately, as usual.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER].

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I was not in the least unaware of the gracious offer on the part of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMPSON] to furnish information if I would propound a question; but I was sincere in my response that I preferred to wait until he had spoken, that I might see whether he had any information to offer.

I was really a little bit surprised that the gentleman saw fit to inject himself into a controversy now some years old. I have heard of the child sticking its hands in the cart wheel, boys sliding down the back cellar when there were nails in the door, with disastrous results. I have known the buzz saw to whirl in the House when wise men looked on and, unlike the gentleman from Oklahoma, side-stepped. It remains for the gentleman from Oklahoma who has just spoken to jump into the buzz saw, throw the monkey wrench into the cylinders, and say, "Hip, hurrah; let the thing go on!"

The gentleman stated that the difficulty, if any, existing in Oklahoma was due to the kind of probate courts and probate laws established in that State when the Territory was under Republican administration. Mr. Chairman, that statement goes to the extent of his knowledge and information. The fraud that reeked Oklahoma's fair land from administration of Indian minors' estates is not due to the system of probate courts, it is not due to the system of laws that they have there, but to the profligate, conscienceless men who administer the law and fill the court positions; and if the gentleman from Oklahoma was frank with the House he would stand up and admit it.

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Yes.

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma. I would like to have the gentleman name one of those officers.

Mr. MILLER. I can name them. One has been named, but I do not care to put them in the RECORD.

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma. Name one county judge or county officer.

Mr. MILLER. I say I do not care to do it now.

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma. The gentleman can not do it.

Mr. MILLER. The gentleman from Oklahoma in his speech spoke of his services to the State. I was reminded of an instance that occurred in the Philippine Islands when Mr. Taft was governor of those islands. After considerable time he concluded he would make a trip into the mountain provinces. To do so it was necessary to ride on a pony. A pony is a very small beast of burden. Eventually he did, however. He rode about 150 miles up into the mountain provinces, and was so extremely satisfied with the result that he wired to a friend in America and said, "I have just made a trip up into the mountain provinces, riding a pony, and I am feeling fine." The friend cabled back, "That is all right for you, but how about the pony?" Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMPSON] stated that he had bestrode the Senate of the State of Oklahoma for a time. I have no doubt he did, and I have no doubt that his appearance now justifies the good effect it had upon him, but how about the State of Oklahoma and the senate of that State?

If there was need for the delegation from Oklahoma one year ago to unite in a memorial to the senate and house of that State and say, "For God's sake, pass some kind of law or do something to suppress those frauds," then what was the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMPSON] who has just spoken doing during all those years he was in the senate, with these frauds transpiring directly under his notice?

Mr. Chairman, I did not, however, seek the time of the House to discuss at any length this phase of the question. As has been intimated this is an old subject of controversy. This present moment is something like fighting a battle after it is all over, and now that it is over I really feel in my heart that I would like to say a word or two somewhat generally and possibly not in point. This is the third consecutive year that we have fought out this question. Generally the gentlemen on that side of the aisle, many of them from Oklahoma, have taken issue with some of the statements made upon this side. I want to say, with the utmost earnestness I can command, that no man who has represented the State of Oklahoma, so far as I know, in the years past, when these controversies have been under consideration, has acted except as he viewed his duty and his conscience. I believe they did not become aware of these peculiar conditions existing in some parts of that State, and I do not wonder that they tried to protect the name of their State by demanding the proof from this side. It took us some time to produce all of the proof. It has not all yet been produced, but enough has been produced so that they have been convinced of the rightfulness of the position we took, and I think it is to their eternal credit that during the past year, as a whole, they have so righteously upheld the right and honor of the Indians and of their State by advocating a remedy of the conditions existing. But it must be admitted that the accusations we have made in this regard have been entirely true and that they have been substantiated by ample facts. If any doubter still exists, I refer him to the reports of the Democratic Commissioner of Indian Affairs, just submitted, on the question of court frauds in the State of Oklahoma.

Referring more specifically, Mr. Chairman, to the statement of my good friend from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER], wherein he claimed that the district agents heretofore existing in the State of Oklahoma were a lot of gangsters and political partisan workers, I do not believe after he reads that in print he will be proud of that portion of his remarks. I am quite confident he will regret that he put it exactly in that manner. I know he would not want to be unfair or unjust, and I do not believe he would want to make a statement like that in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD and let it stand for all time to come.

Mr. CARTER rose.

Mr. MILLER. Just let me finish, and then I will be very glad to yield to the gentleman. I do not mean to say that one or two, and perhaps three or four, of these men did not engage in some party activity. They never ought to have done it. Not a man on this side would uphold them in anything they did, whether for or against the gentleman from Oklahoma. Their business was of a different kind. Politics was outside of the pale of their activities, and I am perfectly aware that the gentleman from Oklahoma has a right to be a little bit restive if the things he said in respect to one man are true, and I know they are true, or he would not say them; but he should recognize that there is a great difference between an institution and an individual, just as there is a great difference between a probate court as such and the character of the man who fills the office of probate judge for the time being. That these district agents were needed has been borne out by an abundance of proof that would overwhelm any investigator. That their need has existed all of these days is borne out by recent investigation and the report of the honorable Commissioner of Indian Affairs, recently made public and referred to by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN].

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Yes; I will yield if it is a short question.

Mr. CARTER. I just want to ask the gentleman where all of these district agents were when all of this fraud was being perpetrated? If the gentleman will permit me, just one moment, my contention has always been not that there was no necessity to have Indians supervised in Oklahoma the same as in other places, but that the district agents as the personnel was then constituted did not give the Indians the protection that this Federal Government was paying them to give.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Oklahoma knows very well that this system of district agents is of recent origin; that the condition of which we have been talking existed long prior to the appointment of these agents; and that they came at a time when the conditions existed; and that they have set themselves to the task of correcting such evils as exist.

Mr. CARTER. Just one short statement I want to make. I know the gentleman does not want to misrepresent these things to the House. I call his attention to the fact that restrictions were first removed from the lands by the very act that created the office of district agent.

Mr. MILLER. But minor estates and probate matters existed long before that.

Mr. CARTER. But they were in the hands of the Federal courts at that time. They were not in the probate courts of the State of Oklahoma.

Mr. MILLER. As to that I am not informed.

Mr. CARTER. The same act that created the district agents gave the Oklahoma State courts jurisdiction over probate matters.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I have in my hands the report summarized of the activities of district agents in the State of Oklahoma for one year, and I am pleased to give it to the House, and especially to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] for his information. I find that the district agents during that one year, which is the year of 1912, made reports under section 6 of the act of May 27, 1908, totaling 671. They reported specifically to the general superintendent on miscellaneous matters 582. They filed a total of 1,696 complaints against the methods being used in probating certain estates.

They disposed of complaints thus filed, by their activities in the probate courts, numbering 1,482. They examined into probate cases then pending in the probate courts, in the counties in which the Five Civilized Tribes were existing, over 20,000 in that one year. The charges of departmental leases which they investigated and referred the recommendations to the general superintendent totaled 2,199. The amount of money actually saved to Indian allottees by these investigations which they carried on in these courts totaled $549,498.91.

That is from the report of the Secretary of the Interior. If other words are lacking, here are those of the department in which they say these men were working, that they were active, that they were energetic in looking after the interests of the Indian minors and those whose restrictions had been removed, and that they performed a most marked and valuable service. But those days are largely past. I am sorry, however, Mr. Chairman, to note the degree of hostility on the part of several Members from Oklahoma to the gentleman whose report created somewhat of a sensation last year. I refer to Mr. Mott. Now, Mr. Mott is no friend of mine. So far as I know, Mr. Mott has hardly ever been north of the Mason and Dixon line in his life. I believe he went to Oklahoma from North Carolina.

Mr. FERRIS. The gentleman does not limit the scope of his friends to that line? Of course, I say that in good humor.

Mr. MILLER. No; I do not. When I was with a committee that went to Oklahoma to investigate I met Mr. Mott, and, at his request, I made a personal investigation into the conduct of his office, for the reason that he then told me that some charges had been recently preferred against him. Of course, we were investigating all Indian-contract attorneys. I have no way of knowing how good a lawyer Mr. Mott is. I do not know whether he can draw a complaint or not; I do not know whether he can try a case in court or not; I do not know whether he could carry a case through the various Federal courts or not. But I do know this, that he is an honest man, and what is needed among the Indians of the eastern part of Oklahoma more than anything else is an honest man. [Applause.] I know this, that during the months following my trip to Oklahoma I made a special and personal investigation into the so-called Creek town-site matter, and it seemed to me that that was the most colossal fraud that had ever been perpetrated on the Indians in the history of this Government. I tried to get the actual facts from many men. Finally I wrote to Mr. Mott, the attorney for the Creeks, and he probably spent three months in getting information, and finally sent it to me in concrete and usable form, and it was absolutely complete.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has expired.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have two or three minutes more.

Mr. CAMPBELL. I yield four minutes more to the gentleman.

Mr. MILLER. He handles much of the important litigation in which the Creek Nation is interested. He has had associated with him a Mr. Sturdevant, of St. Louis, an eminent lawyer, and I know their cases have been handled successfully, and that there never has been any scandal associated with the legal work performed for that tribe. I do know that this man rendered a great service to the people of Oklahoma and of the United States when he submitted that report a year ago; and looking back, as I have, on the work that he has done there the last four or five years, it seems to me he has been one of the few men who has actually earned his money in working for the Indians.

Now, no man can make me believe but that the good people in Oklahoma predominate over the bad. I know they do. No man can make me believe that the people of Oklahoma, as a majority or a whole, desire the Indian people to be defrauded. They do not. And so I believe that the people of Oklahoma, the greater part of the people that compose that great community there, indorse the work of Mr. Mott. I believe firmly that any attempt to put a reflection or a curb upon the activities of that man will not meet with the good favor of the thinking people there or elsewhere. Now, I am not saying that he ought to be continued as an attorney or not. But I am saying that the work he has been doing should be continued by some one as he has done it.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman said what was needed in eastern Oklahoma was an honest man. He does not want to convey the impression, I am sure, that there are no honest men in eastern Oklahoma?

Mr. MILLER. No; if I said that, I misspoke myself. What I wanted to say is that what the people of Oklahoma want is a man to handle the affairs of Indians in that State who is an honest man.

Mr. MANN. Diogenes could not find one.

Mr. MILLER. In eastern Oklahoma?

Mr. MANN. Nowhere.

Mr. MILLER. I hope it will never be thought that I sought to cast any reflection upon the people of Oklahoma any more than on people elsewhere in the country. Wherever Indians actually exist, either in Oklahoma or in any other place in the country, you are going to find a laxity of morals on the part of the whites in respect to their property treatment of the Indians. It is wrong, it is accursed, and it ought to be wiped out. The reason that more of it exists in Oklahoma than elsewhere is because of the fact that there exists more opportunity for it. There is more property, and the whites have been permitted to enter and mix with the Indians owning the land, helter-skelter, in the Indian country.

Mr. FERRIS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER. Certainly.

Mr. FERRIS. I know the gentleman knows a great deal about Indian affairs and Indians in his own State. Does the gentleman think that while there is always a great deal of trouble about the charges and the graft that spring up, there is also a good deal of inflammable matter which creeps in, too?

Mr. MILLER. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. FERRIS. I have in mind the gentleman's White Earth country, as well as my own State.

Mr. CARTER. Fifty per cent of it has no foundation, but there is some foundation for it.

Mr. FERRIS. Of course there is.

Mr. MILLER. And there has been some foundation for the charges as to the White Earth Reservation, and the gentleman knows it. I have been for wiping them out.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota has again expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of varying the entertainment to some degree, I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCCOY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCCOY] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. MCCOY. Mr. Chairman, in reading yesterday's RECORD, I noticed that the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] inserted a news item from the New York Times in regard to the conditions of unemployment alleged to prevail in Newark, N. J., a part of which city I have the honor to represent. The item stated—and it is in the RECORD here—that about 400 men were unable to get employment and sought employment from the municipal employment bureau, but that there was no work that could be given out by the bureau.

Now, the fact that 400 men are seeking employment in the middle of winter in a city having some 400,000 inhabitants is not an astonishing statement to have to listen to. It could be made every year at this time of the year. But I think that it is just as well, as long as newspapers are to be relied upon for information of that kind, to read a statement from the Newark Evening Star of February 9 in regard to this incident. The statement is as follows:

ONLY 50 OF 118 WHO DEMANDED WORK ACCEPT IT—WORK AT PEDDIE STREET IS HAMPERED WHEN 68 FAIL TO REPORT—EDWARD REDLER, LEADER OF ARMY, AMONG MISSING—CIVIL SERVICE COMMISSION TO NOTIFY OTHERS ON LIST TO REPORT IMMEDIATELY.

Although 118 men were notified to report for work this morning on the Peddie Street grading job, only about 50 appeared. The civil service commission sent communications to 118 men, notifying them of the work to be started to-day. They were told to report at 7.30.

The entire number of men that reported were placed to work. More notices will be issued by the civil service commission to-day. The city can use about 100 men on the job. Chief Engineer Morris Sherrerd says:

"The laborers will be somewhat hampered for a time because of the inability to find a means of crossing the Jersey Central Railroad tracks with vehicles. As soon as a temporary crossing can be made a larger number of men can be employed."

The members of the army of unemployed, whose representatives called on Mayor Haussling last week, were all notified to place their names on the civil-service list if they desired employment. A number of them did so, and the list of eligibles now has swollen to upward of 300.

Edward Redler, of Fairmount Avenue, who led the delegation which called on the mayor, did not appear for work to-day. He also appeared before the board of works seeking employment for himself and his 500 followers.

I simply want to repeat that, in a city of 400,000, to find 400 men out of employment in the middle of winter is no unusual thing. And I can supplement that statement by saying that such a thing has occurred in a lesser degree in the past in my own immediate community. The so-called Oranges are a smaller community, taken together, than Newark, because they have only about 80,000 inhabitants. I have had some experience in active work in connection with charity organizations up there. We were bothered some years ago with tramps to such an extent that we established a wood yard, to be operated as part of the activities of the bureau of charities. All that we required of men when they came there seeking assistance was that they should be willing to take a bath when the proper time came for that, and to chop up two or three barrels of kindling wood; and for that they got a good supper, a good night's lodging, and a good breakfast. But we no longer operate the wood yard, for the simple reason that the great majority of those men do not go there really looking for work——

Mr. ELDER. How about the bathtub? [Laughter.]

Mr. McCOY. They were looking for a bath even less than they were looking for work. [Laughter.] The fact is that most of them did not want work. What they wanted was something for nothing. All that is stated to be true here of a large number of the so-called army of unemployed in the city of Newark. They do not want to work. They wanted——

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Soup? [Laughter.]

Mr. McCOY. Yes; soup. The last thing they, many of them, wanted was work. The deserving wanted to work, and did so when the opportunity offered.

I was talking this morning with a man who a year ago last fall ran on the Republican ticket in the city of Newark for the office of mayor in that city. He is a manufacturer in Newark, one of the largest in his line in the United States. He told me that in the month of January of this year he took on 50 additional men, so as to be able to meet the demands of his business. He said that they are still on now, and that he is now employing a larger number of men than he has ever employed before, and he has been in business for many years. I can not say that the same is true with respect to all the industries in Newark, but I think it true to a large extent.

However, if the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] wants to get real information, let him write to the secretary of the Board of Trade of Newark, and I am not afraid of having anything that he will there find out published in the RECORD. [Applause.]

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I will yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT] 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. DAVENPORT] is recognized for 10 minutes.

Mr. DAVENPORT. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I was indeed gratified to hear my distinguished friend from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] take the side of the Indian as a general proposition, but I was wondering whether he had not referred to my speech made on the 8th of April, 1912, when I took up the question as to the way in which the Indians had been treated by our Government from the date of the first treaty that was ever made with any tribe of Indians by the United States Government, that tribe being the Delaware Tribe of Indians, in the State of New York at that time, and was entered into during the Revolution.

But those questions as to what the Government has done for the Indian are not questions embraced within this Indian appropriation bill. I am willing to agree with the gentleman that up to the present time the Indians have been shifted from pillar to post and treated according to the whims of the white man, and sent from place to place in order that the white man might acquire the land which the Indian was then occupying. But it does not seem to me that all of the sins committed in shifting Indians from place to place should be debited against the white people of Oklahoma. While the gentleman's own State has had the honor of having some of the grandest tribes of Indians that ever existed reside in his State, he says nothing about the valuable lands that were taken from the Wyandottes and the Shawnees in Kansas—lands that are now a part of the cities of Wyandotte and Kansas City, Kans. Nor does the gentleman say a word about the price they received at that time for their land. It is true it has enhanced very greatly since that time; and yet the same underlying principle prevailed at that time, and so, to get rid of the Indians and make way for the white man, they removed them and required that the Shawnees must come and treat with the Cherokees in order to have a home down there.

And so on down the line; and all of that condition exists now in Oklahoma, notwithstanding the fact that we there have only about one-third of the Indian population that is in the United States.

Now, as to what took place in the previous discussions upon the Indian appropriation bill, the arguments that were made at that time and the discussions and insinuations that we had then were made because there were some provisions in the Indian appropriation bill that were being questioned. But, I ask you, why is this argument injected into this discussion at this time? Is it for the purpose of clearing the mind of some Member as to how he shall vote upon this bill, or is it for the purpose of trying to cast a reflection upon the citizenship of Oklahoma? It answers itself.

We know that we are all human. We know, further, that we are all sensitive and have a pride in our States; and nobody knows it better than the Members who are here now, because when my colleague from Oklahoma [Mr. THOMPSON] a moment ago said something about what the probate court had done or had not done in Illinois, my good friend Mr. MANN resented it at once, because it was the other fellow being pinched that time. I know nothing about the courts of Illinois and have no desire to say a word about that, because I say that if the probate courts in Illinois have handled large estates in administration and guardianship matters and there has not been injustice done along the line, it is the first State in the Union that I have ever known where it did not exist.

On the 8th of April, 1912, I stood upon the floor of this House and said that we had some dishonest people in Oklahoma, but that the percentage of them according to the population was no greater than it is in any other State in the Union, and I repeat that statement.

Now, as to the courts, I am not going to discuss the Mott report, except to say that I ask some man to rise in his seat and point to the case of a single man who has ever been convicted or has ever turned a dollar into the Treasury or into the estate of a minor as the result of that report. It was a great advertising proposition, it is true. Gentlemen, I want to call your attention to what was existing at the time the Mott report was made, and I want you to answer for yourselves, if you want to go into this question, why was it made at that time? The act of May 27, 1908, provided for district Indian agents to look after certain matters in that country under the supervision of the Department of the Interior, that was then operating in Oklahoma. The act went into effect July 27 of that year. Immediately thereafter these agencies were organized and went to work. The gentlemen who defend that report have not read a single report of those district agents, and they did not say a word about any report being made, and, in fact, no report was made until the fall of 1912, four years thereafter. And note this: Mr. Mott was attorney for the Creek Tribe of Indians, embracing Wagoner and Muskogee Counties. Wagoner County is one of the counties that this report especially relates to. Mr. Mott had been attorney for that tribe for several years at that time, yet not one word of report had been made by Mr. Mott, specially employed and drawing a salary of $5,000 a year and expenses, about the conditions down there. Not one word was reported to this House or to the Indian Committee of this House about the conditions existing in Wagoner County or Muskogee County until the election of November, 1912, made it manifest that the administration was going to change, and that it would become necessary for him to hie himself back to North Carolina, or to some other country, if they would receive him back, and seek another job. Then he got busy and made his report, and the Indian agents began to make reports, but not until 1912 did they do it.

Let me ask this question: For the sake of argument, let us admit that certain conditions were existing there. If so, had they not existed under the very nose of Mr. Mott, the attorney for the Creek Nation. Had they not existed under the very noses of these district Indian agents who were operating in that country, and had they not existed under the direct supervision of an Indian agency and an Indian superintendent located in the city of Muskogee, within 15 miles of the town of Wagoner, where the Indian allotments of the Creek Nation were handled, in which more than 400 people were employed? Yet not one of them made a report here of anything of that kind, so far as we know, until after the presidential election in 1912. I dismiss that subject with that statement. That is the situation as you find it.

Now, as to the courts in Oklahoma, they need no defense. They may make a mistake once in a while. Why, we impeached a Pennsylvania Federal judge here in the United States Senate a short time ago; but, I ask you, are you going to throw reflections upon all of the Federal judges of the great State of Pennsylvania or upon her citizenship because one man does wrong? There may have been one county judge that went wrong. My colleague [Mr. CARTER] said that one judge did go wrong and was defeated. There was one county judge, in Adair County, Okla., who has gone wrong since the 1912 election, and he has gone to jail by reason of it, too; and the Mott report and the district agency did not convict him, either, but Mr. Hastings, the national attorney for the Cherokee Nation, tried him in the State court and convicted him, and he has paid his fine and will serve his sentence. That is the way they do in our Oklahoma courts. In Oklahoma, every time anyone goes wrong they mete out justice to him.

It is unwritten history, but it is a fact, that in three of the cases in which Mr. Mott secured indictments in Wagoner County—the only three that have been tried have been released and exonerated—Mr. Mott himself, in open court, asked the court to direct a verdict of acquittal in one case, in another case the court directed a verdict of acquittal, and in the third case the man was acquitted. With the number of cases that are handled there, there may have been some crime, and I have contended that all the time; but to single out Oklahoma as a target to shoot at every time you commence on an Indian appropriation bill must certainly be boresome to the average man on the floor of this House. [Laughter.] Every time they want to talk about Oklahoma. They should be fair with Oklahoma citizens. I do not care what they say about Oklahoma. If they would go down there and mingle with the people of Oklahoma, we will show them that we have a citizenship that is not excelled by their citizenship at home. My good friend, Mr. CAMPBELL, lives right up there near the line, and he knows that a great many of the good citizens of Kansas are leaving there and going to Oklahoma. He does not mean to cast a reflection upon those gentlemen, but he does want, if possible, to cast reflection upon the Oklahoma Members of this House, or it would seem so from his remarks. I do not believe he intends it that way excepting for the RECORD. Well, he has not many Indians in his district, and it will not aid him very greatly in a political way. And you can say what you please about the defenseless Indian, he knows as well as any other man living when you are trying to bunco him, and he is not going to take your medicine unless he believes it is the proper remedy for the disease from which he is suffering. [Applause.]

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Will the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] consume some of his time? We have only one other speech on this side.

Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Chairman, I would not use the remaining time if it had not been for the speech of the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. MCCOY], who replied to a statement made on yesterday as to the unemployed in his State.

When we make a statement here about people being out of employment we are charged with using Republican campaign material and quoting from Republican newspapers. Now, Mayor CURLEY, of Boston, was never accused of being a Republican while he served in the House, and I think he would resent it if he was charged with being a Republican now. I have here a clipping from the Boston Post, an independent Democratic newspaper, published on February 12, 1914. It is as follows:

WORK FOR MEN OUT OF JOBS RAZING HILL—ROURKE SUGGESTS A SOLUTION TO MAYOR.

Mayor CURLEY announced last night that he had made arrangements with Commissioner of Public Works Rourke to use Boston's army of unemployed to level a hill in East Boston, and to fill in and grade a city playground there just as soon as the money is raised to pay these men for their work.

FUND FOR UNEMPLOYED.

Morrison I. Swift called upon the mayor yesterday and informed the latter that the chamber of commerce might raise a fund for the unemployed of Boston. The mayor immediately got in touch with Commissioner of Public Works Rourke and directed the latter to report to him as to how the unemployed men could be used to the best advantage.

Commissioner Rourke suggested the leveling of the old reservoir property in East Boston and the grading of the playground. It was stated by the mayor that the city now only awaits the raising of the money to pay these men to have the work of leveling the playground started. He said that the city's finances will not permit of this work being done at present, but that if citizens will provide the money to have this work done he will gladly put the unemployed of the city to work on the hill.

20,000 OUT OF WORK.

At least 20,000 persons are out of work in Boston and must be given employment immediately, according to Mr. Swift, in a statement yesterday. The remedy he suggests is not charity, but public work of a useful nature, to be paid for by private subscription and arranged for by the city. His statement, in part, follows:

"Many who have been able to exist in some manner until now are at the end of their resources. If something is not done for them, we shall be in the midst of a great calamity. Conditions might begin slowly to mend without appreciably relieving this element for a long time. Charity is not the thing, for self-respecting people never fully recover from its effects.

"The thing needed in this crisis is public relief work of a useful nature. A living can then be earned and the sense of pauperism be avoided. Full-time work is unnecessary; in fact, many would be unable to work a whole day at hard, outdoor labor without injury, owing to recent underfeeding or to the indoor nature of their work.

PLANS FOR RELIEF.

"Four or five half days' work a week, paid for at the trade-union rates, would meet the emergency. The least vigorous could be paid by the hour in order to give them a chance to build up their strength. It is wiser to pay the union wage rate and to give less work than to adopt the other course.

"City relief work could be given at once if the city possessed the funds. Since these are lacking, they must be contributed by the citizens, if work is supplied. It should be useful work, such as road building or marshland draining, so that new values for the city would be created.

"But complete cure and future prevention of unemployment require the existence of permanent municipal works of various kinds for the absorption of a greater or less number of unemployed, as the labor market fluctuates. These factories should be located upon a municipal farm, where expert farming would be one of the pursuits."

I suggest that the best remedy is to return to a policy that will keep other countries from furnishing the people in Boston with products that they buy in the stores and shops of Boston, and give employment to the people who are wandering about the streets to the number of 20,000 out of work, rather than to establish a municipal employment bureau to give work to the unemployed and make it a permanent institution.

Mr. NORTON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL. Certainly.

Mr. NORTON. Is it to be inferred that the unemployed in Boston will have work as long as the hills hold out?

Mr. CAMPBELL. That is the impression; if they can raise the money, there will be plenty of work while there are hills to cut down. As I say, the better way would be to go back to the policy which this Democratic administration abolished and which has thrown men out of employment not only in Boston but New York, Buffalo, and every other section of the country, until to-day there are literally hundreds and thousands of men suffering for want of work and for want of food and clothing.

Mr. BARNHART. Does the gentleman from Kansas really believe what he has been saying?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do, every word of it; and I might say much more.

Mr. BROCKSON. How many of those unemployed in Boston were heretofore employed in factories?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I can not say; that is not stated in the article. The article gives it as an unusual condition. But, when factories close, the carpenter, the stonemason, the plasterer, the paper hanger, and the blacksmith are affected by it, and clerks in the stores and mechanics are affected by it.

Mr. BROCKSON. I am not inquiring about that, but does the gentleman know how many of the 20,000 unemployed that he speaks of were formerly employed in factories or shops?

Mr. CAMPBELL. I do not know how many worked in factories; I do not pretend to. It is an army of unemployed and so referred to, and the Democratic mayor of Boston is trying to find some way to give them employment. He voted for the Democratic tariff bill in the House and threw them out of employment, and I assume that he feels some responsibility for their present condition.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I desire to leave the soup-house question and yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MURRAY].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I can not imagine the virtue in this discussion other than that it will prick the conscience of the honest people of Oklahoma, who are in an overwhelming majority in the State.

I regret to say, alas, that too much of what the gentleman from Kansas has stated is true. I believe out of this discussion will grow an activity in our State in the interest of the State and the Indians of the State. I am not going to say anything here that I would not say at home. I said at home that we have as many grafters to the area as in any other State in the Union. That is true because we have more to graft. [Laughter.]

The fraud in probate matters is not due to any one thing; it is partially due to the inadequacy of the law—to an old statute enacted in the old Territorial days, which had never been changed since its extension over the Indian Territory portion of the State by the enabling act—and it is also partly due to the burdensome docket in probate matters.

There is hardly a county in the 40 but what has at least 500 cases. Muskogee County has upward of 6,000. It is partly due to the employment by the Indians of crooked lawyers, who agreed with the attorney on the other side to a statement of facts that would cause an honest judge to approve the order, thinking it was correct because both attorneys agreed to it. Many of the Indians employ shysters for attorneys. That, in my opinion, is the greatest element in all these cases of fraud. Hence, the selection of the probate attorneys will remedy that. It was partly due, also, to the Indian Department of this Government. Graft is not confined to race, to government, to officers, or to party in our State.

In 1903 or 1904 Congress turned the probate Indian matters over to the United States court, and until statehood they administered affairs, and I will state candidly I know but one Federal judge who was very careful in the management of these estates. I do not mind saying, even if he be a Republican politician, that his name was Judge J. T. Dickinson, of Chickasha, and he was square in all these dealings. After statehood the State courts took them over and frauds have been perpetrated there, but ever since statehood the county judges, as a rule, have been honest, but they have been overburdened. There are the exceptions to that rule, but exceptions prove the rule. I believe to-day that there are a greater number of good judges than there were in the beginning of statehood. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] referred to men who were murdered. In my section of the country I remember now of an Indian who was poisoned by mixing it in Peruna, and the grafter had another Indian carry the poison to the victim in order to buy the dead claim, which could be done under the law. But, my friends, the overwhelming body of the people of Oklahoma does not approve this dishonesty, this corruption. [Applause.] I shall not excuse a single grafter. I have met the grafter before, having had to deal with every phase of State government since the constitutional convention. I know them when I see them and I have never hesitated to call names on the stump of my State. I said a while ago there was no exception as to government. I know of a particular district agent, and I have differed with my colleague [Mr. CARTER] on that—I believe the agents are necessary now and have been since their creation—I know of one of them that a county judge drove out of the county for aiding and abetting in the graft of minors' estates, and I am pleased to state that that county judge has been appointed by Mr. Sells one of the probate attorneys. Yes, we are hunting for honest men, but above all we are hunting for brave men. There is enough honesty, but the only man who makes a good officer is an honest, wise, and brave man.

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Yes; for a short question.

Mr. THOMPSON of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I desire to ask the gentleman if I did not agree with my colleague from Oklahoma in sustaining the agency system under a Republican administration?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Yes. I know of one of those agents whose opposition always has been from Republicans, because there are more Republican grafters than there are Democratic grafters in that district. I am sure that some of these agents are crooked. Nor has the department done its duty. I will say to you that the Creek-lot frauds, over which there were prosecutions when Mr. Roosevelt was President, could not have been practiced if the Federal officers had not known and connived at it at the time. But, my friends, this fraud is not limited alone to Oklahoma. If you will read Worcester, the case of a Cherokee Indian against the State of Georgia, you will find there something to think about, when Gov. Troupe of that State dared the United States Supreme Court to enforce the order of the court against the Indian, by calling out the State militia, and you will understand that it existed there and everywhere, and you will be astonished if you look at the records of the State of Mississippi. I am sometimes persuaded to believe that Mississippi once had more grafters than we have, even in Oklahoma, particularly when I consider a bill pending in this House that has for its fundamental result, not object, the appeasing of the greed of the grafters of Mississippi, and I am not sure but that those long, lean, lanky, hungry grafters from the State of Mississippi are searching to get a portion of the Chickasaw and Choctaw funds.

Mr. HARRISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. Does the gentleman refer to a bill that I introduced to reopen the rolls?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Yes.

Mr. HARRISON. Is it not a fact that the gentleman has also introduced a bill wanting to give to those in Mississippi whom he believed had the right under the treaty——

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I will answer the question.

Mr. HARRISON. But wait one moment. I have not finished the question.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. But I have not the time.

Mr. HARRISON. The gentleman should allow me to ask the question.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Very well; hurry and get through.

Mr. HARRISON. Is it not a fact that the only difference between the gentleman's bill and mine is that he would have the money come out of the Treasury of the United States and I would have it come out of the tribal funds?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. The distinction between the gentleman's bill and mine is this, that whatever is due Mississippi Choctaws is from this Government, and the further distinction is I propose to buy them homes and throw restrictions around them so that the grafters can not get hold of them, and the gentleman's bill is to get the money out of our Indians' funds so that the grafter can get it.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. No; I have not the time.

Mr. CARTER. I just want to ask the gentleman a question.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. No; I can not yield now. I want to get through. If you give those Mississippi Choctaws money, it will mean that in 12 months they will not have a cent, and it would be folly to give them money, whether you do it from the Indians of our country or from this Government. The only thing to do is to give them homes and throw restrictions around them so that no grafter can touch them. I want to say here that I do not say that the purpose of the gentleman's bill is that, but I contend that that would be the result. I acquit the gentleman from Mississippi, of course, of any intention of doing wrong. He is honorable and bold. I rather admire his persistent, vigorous effort for a deserving people.

I want to read now something from a book written by Reuben Davis, the greatest criminal lawyer in the State of Mississippi, who for more than 50 years was a member of the bar of that State. It is a book entitled "Recollections of Mississippi and Mississippians" and was published in 1889. Davis is speaking now of a time just after the treaty was made and this Government was about to move the Indians west, but before their tribal government had ceased and when they had a right still to control their affairs. He says:

Pushmattahah, a Choctaw chief, had killed one of his subjects. In doing this he acted under his tribal authority, and was so far justifiable. But under our law, which had been extended over all the territory conveyed by the Indians to the General Government, the execution became murder. Pushmattahah exercised great control and influence over his tribe.

He had in some way incurred the hatred of the land companies organized to purchase reservations. It was important to them that he should be got out of the way, and to this end they employed a number of able attorneys to aid me in the prosecution. To avoid censure it was determined that there should be only one speaker.

I pass now over the description of the trial. The book again continues:

After short deliberation a verdict of guilty was rendered. The defendant was informed of the result, and that he would be hung. He was shocked at the mode of death and made pathetic appeals against such an indignity, claiming his right to die like a warrior. The court had no power to interfere, and sentence was pronounced according to the prescribed forms of our law. When this was done, Pushmattahah rose to his full height and gave vent to a wild war whoop so full of rage and despair that it was terrible to hear. As there were many Indians present, there was for a time danger of attempted rescue.

Application for pardon was made to the governor, and the chief had strong hope that it would be granted. A few days before that appointed for the execution he was informed that the governor had refused the pardon and that he must die what he considered the death of a dog. This communication was made to the unhappy chief in cold-blooded and inhuman malice, and the result came near proving fatal. Pushmattahah broke a bottle which chanced to be in his cell and with a piece of the glass severed an artery in his left arm. He would have died in a short time from loss of blood if the sheriff had not made an accidental visit to the prisoner. A pardon was granted and sent to the sheriff by an express in time to save the life of the Choctaw chief.

If I could have controlled this matter, this chief should never have been prosecuted nor so much as indicted.

Because it was the work of grafters.

That was a prosecution of the greatest red man by the State at the instance of a bunch of grafters. So you find it is not confined to my State, to party, to official authority, or control of court. But the duty of Congress is to do what it can to wipe out this "century of crime." I believe that this discussion will aid the good, honest people of Oklahoma. You know that grafters are always organized, but the honest people never do so until they become excited. And I am sure that even the Mott report—which may be true or may not, I do not know; I never met him but once—will bring about an effort on the part of the people of our State to correct the probate laws.

And for that purpose I make this speech, hoping and believing that with the aid of the gentlemen on that side—and I think they are sincere—we will bring about what ought to have been brought about years ago.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the following sums be, and they are hereby, appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the purpose of paying the current and contingent expenses of the Bureau of Indian Affairs, for fulfilling treaty stipulations with various Indian tribes, and in full compensation for all offices the salaries for which are provided for herein for the service of the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, namely:

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last word. I do this, Mr. Chairman, for the purpose of answering briefly an impression that might have been created by the gentleman who has just taken his seat, the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MURRAY]. I care nothing about the grafting out there in Oklahoma. It does not concern me, except as a citizen of this country I dislike to see grafting going on anywhere. But I refute the charge, if the implication applies at all, that there has been in recent years any grafting in Indian affairs in Mississippi. I am inclined to believe as to the grafting my friend refers to, and about which he quoted from the book written by Reuben Davis, that after hearing the discussion between the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] and the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] and the gentleman from Oklahoma about grafting in Oklahoma that all the grafters that ever infested Mississippi must have gone to Oklahoma.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Only a part of that is true.

Mr. HARRISON. I asked the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MURRAY], when he discussed the question that the grafters were trying to get into the tribal funds of the Choctaw and Chickasaw Indians, if he was alluding to the bill I had introduced in this House for the reopening of the rolls. He said, "Yes." The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MURRAY] has also introduced a bill on the same subject, and I want to now state briefly the object of the bill that I introduced and the restrictions that are thrown around grafting in that bill.

If I thought for a moment that those grafting attorneys that the gentleman speaks of, and which the other gentlemen on the floor have spoken of, would ever get any part of the funds that these Indians might get if the rolls were reopened, except for legitimate services that they might render, I would not advocate the reopening of the rolls. I believe any attorney who performs good services for a client is entitled to reasonable pay, but the bill that I have introduced carries with it the condition that the attorney's fee shall be fixed within a reasonable amount by the Secretary of the Interior for the services that they render. I would not have any bill coupled with my name presented to this House and passed into law unless that restriction were placed in it.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I want to say to the gentleman, if he even inferred that I thought other than I stated, that I now say I think the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] had the best motives in the world when he introduced the bill.

Mr. HARRISON. I am sure the gentleman thinks that.

Mr. CARTER. I do not question the gentleman's motives at all, but the gentleman in one speech complained about a fee that was paid to Mansfield, McMurray & Cornish.

Mr. HARRISON. I did make that complaint.

Mr. CARTER. I want to know if he knows that it is a fact that the McMurray fee had about the same protection thrown around it as is proposed in his bill?

Mr. HARRISON. Whether that is true or not I do not know. But I say this: I have a very high regard for the integrity and ability of the Committee on Indian Affairs of this House, and I am sure with the gentleman's [Mr. CARTER] experience, together with the experience of other members on the committee, you certainly would not report a bill unless the bill was so safeguarded in that respect, and I will trust to you if I should make a mistake about that. In connection with this bill, the gentleman evidently thinks that the Mississippi Choctaws have been treated badly. I believe the gentleman from Oklahoma believes there are Mississippi Choctaws who ought to be enrolled and their rights ought to be adjusted by the reopening of the rolls to a certain extent.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. You are right in this. I think the Mississippi Choctaws have been mistreated, and I think this Government ought to right the wrong that it did to them.

Mr. HARRISON. That is exactly where we differ. You and your colleagues from Oklahoma would go into the Treasury of this country and take out the money to give to the Mississippi Choctaws, while I would give it to them out of the funds of the tribe. I make that statement for this reason, in part, because in 1881, I think it was, the Oklahoma Choctaw Indians sued the United States for moneys due the tribe they left back in Mississippi about 1831.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. HARRISON. I ask unanimous consent for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. HARRISON. They based their suit on injuries done to the Mississippi Choctaws in Mississippi, and not to the Choctaws that had moved out into Oklahoma. The suit went to the Supreme Court of the United States and an $8,000,000 verdict was rendered in favor of the Choctaws in Oklahoma. That went into the funds of the tribe. It is there now, less the expense incurred in that piece of litigation. And, gentlemen, is it right to saddle on the Government of the United States and upon the Treasury the payment of this money, when the Oklahoma Choctaws got that money in that way and it is now in the funds of the tribe?

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. You are talking about the compensation for the scrip, are you not?

Mr. HARRISON. Well, you can put it that way. It was based on the injuries committed to the Mississippi Choctaws.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Do you know that the Indians of Mississippi got a portion of it, and that that class that did not immediately move, but now live in Oklahoma, got the other, and the other Indians in Oklahoma who first moved did not get a cent of it?

Mr. HARRISON. The gentleman is altogether mistaken.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. Well, that is correct.

Mr. HARRISON. The Mississippi Choctaws that I have pleaded for in the bill that I have introduced have never received one cent of that money that is now in the coffers of the funds of the Choctaw Nation. And I want to say it will be a living compliment to the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. RUSSELL] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. MILLER] and the gentleman from New York [Mr. SMITH], who were on the Indian Affairs Committee in this House in the Sixty-second Congress, that they went into exhaustive hearings on this question in considering my bill, and they reported unanimously in favor of reopening the rolls and giving to the Mississippi Choctaws some of these rights for which I plead.

Mr. Chairman, I sincerely hope that some committee, either a subcommittee of the Indian Affairs Committee of this House at this time or the full committee, will take this enrollment question up and pass on it.

I am not in favor of your bill. You admit by it, though, that the Mississippi Choctaws are at least entitled to something and have been treated badly. The distinguished gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] has introduced in the past similar bills, and thereby admits it. I would not go into the Treasury and get the money, but I would get it from the Indian funds, and I would have them prove their claims and prove their right to be enrolled, and if they can prove it I would put them on the rolls and let them share in the funds in the same respect with all the Indians that are now on the roll.

And I want to say in this connection, too, that there are over 1,200 of these Mississippi Choctaws living in Mississippi now who have been identified by the Dawes Commission that ought to be enrolled who are not now on the rolls. They have been left off for I know not what reasons, but one reason is because Mr. McMurray and his law firm got paid $5,000 a year to represent the tribe, and——

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Mississippi yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma?

Mr. HARRISON. I will yield after I have finished my statement.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman from Mississippi has often stood on the floor of this House and charged the responsibility to Mansfield, McMurray & Cornish for the fact that the Mississippi Choctaws are not on the roll. I want to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that the Mississippi Choctaws case was settled prior to the making of the agreement in which he charges Mr. McMurray had such a conspicuous part, and it was settled by the courts of this Nation.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman——

Mr. CARTER. I will get the gentleman more time if he desires it.

Mr. HARRISON. Go ahead. The gentleman's statement is interesting.

Mr. CARTER. The case of the Mississippi Choctaws was submitted, by an act of Congress, to the Dawes Commission for settlement. The Dawes Commission passed upon it adversely to Mississippi Choctaws, and decided that they had no right in the property of the Oklahoma Indians unless they removed to Oklahoma. A subsequent act of Congress was passed giving an appeal to the Federal courts in Oklahoma. An appeal was taken to the central district of the United States Federal court in Oklahoma.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] has expired.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have five minutes more. I want a minute of it myself.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER] asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] be allowed to proceed for five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. I will have to give notice, Mr. Chairman, that I shall object to any further extension.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oklahoma?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CARTER. As I stated before this interruption, an appeal was taken from the decision of the Dawes Commission, by a subsequent act, to the Federal court in Oklahoma. The Federal court took it up and tried it de novo, and affirmed the decision of the Dawes Commission. An appeal was afterwards taken to the Supreme Court of the United States, and there the case was dismissed upon the motion of the attorney for the Mississippi Choctaws.

Mr. HARRISON. Has the gentleman finished his statement?

Mr. CARTER. I just wanted to say this: Subsequently a supplemental agreement was negotiated by the Choctaws and Chickasaws. The gentleman has denominated that the McMurray Act. I desire to state just briefly the history of that transaction.

Mr. HARRISON. I hope the gentleman's statement will be short.

Mr. CARTER. I asked for one minute, and I do not think I have consumed it. I was a member of that commission for the Chickasaws. We were called together at Muskogee. At that first meeting neither Mr. McMurray nor any other attorney was present representing anyone. None of the firm of Mansfield, McMurray & Cornish was present. In that agreement the Mississippi Choctaws were given privileges which they had been denied by the courts. Mr. McMurray got no money for putting the Mississippi Choctaws off the roll. They were never on our rolls.

Mr. HARRISON. I am glad the gentleman has made such an eloquent defense of McMurray.

Mr. CARTER. No defense of anyone at all; just a plain statement of facts.

Mr. HARRISON. The gentleman should know that Mr. McMurray practically boasted that he wrote the act of 1902, and the gentleman knows that while the firm of Mansfield, McMurray & Cornish was getting $5,000 a year to represent the tribe they were getting in addition to that a certain percentage for every Mississippi Choctaw who could be kept from the roll or taken from the roll.

Mr. CARTER. I know that the gentleman does not make a misstatement to the House.

Mr. HARRISON. I do not.

Mr. CARTER. The gentleman is mistaken. The contract of Mansfield, McMurray & Cornish gave them a percentage for taking people off the roll that were already on the roll. They got not a cent for keeping off the roll anybody who was not already on the roll.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Chairman, I do not care to take up the time of the House with a further discussion of this matter, but I merely wanted to answer the distinguished gentleman [Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma] for his tirade against Mississippi. In this connection, I would say, a provision is carried in this bill to make a per capita payment to the Indians now on the rolls. I shall object to it when the time comes on the theory that at least two or three thousand Mississippi Choctaws are entitled to be on the rolls and share in the distribution of this fund just as much as any person now on the roll is entitled to share in it.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the last two words.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McGUIRE] moves to strike out the last two words.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I thought I would take no part in this debate, by reason of the state of my health, but some things have been said with respect to the frauds and graft in my State that are far removed from the facts.

I regret that any politics has crept into the question of legislating for the protection of the Indians in Oklahoma. I want to make this statement and lay down this proposition: That there never was a State, there never has been a section of country anywhere where the Indians have owned real estate and where they have been given any leeway, or where restrictions have been removed and they have been permitted to take care of their own affairs, where inducements have not been offered and graft has not occurred. I have never represented a district in Oklahoma which comprised any part of the Five Civilized Tribes, but there are several thousand Indians in my district. When you speak of the citizenship of my State it is as good, on the average, as that of most of the States of the Union, and when you come to speak of the citizenship of my own district I can say what few gentlemen on this floor can say, and that is that there is less than one-half of 1 per cent of illiteracy in the first district of Oklahoma. [Applause.]

I am not as familiar with conditions in the east end of the State as are my colleagues, Mr. CARTER, Mr. DAVENPORT, Mr. MURRAY, and others representing that part of the State, but to a limited extent the same conditions exist there that existed in an earlier day in my district.

Some of you gentlemen were not here, and some of you who were here perhaps do not remember that there was a little agitation in the department about 10 years ago because they said there was graft in that portion of Oklahoma known as Oklahoma proper. I then represented the Territory of Oklahoma. The statement was made that the probate judges were in collusion with the grafters, and that they were getting the lands of the Indians. The law then provided that where restrictions were removed from an Indian who, in the judgment of the department, was capable of managing his own affairs, that Indian might dispose of his land. At that time, too, we had the estates of minor Indians to deal with, as they have in the east end of the State. I have in mind one probate judge in a certain county in Oklahoma who was, in my judgment, as competent as the average probate judge of any State of this Union, but he had much to contend with. Guardians were required to be appointed and the bondsmen to be selected. I have in mind the cashier of one of the supposedly best banks in the city. He was given the guardianship of about 40 minor Indians. In my judgment there never was a straighter man than the one to whom I refer. The young man met with misfortune; he became penniless. This probate judge had a large number of cases and was behind with his work, for the reason that the law did not provide for him a sufficient number of clerks. After they had not made their annual settlements probably for four or five years, they began looking up the bondsmen. It was a new country. We were in a formative state. The population was rapidly shifting, and not more than half the bondsmen could be found.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Oklahoma asks unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. There was a heavy loss to a number of minor Indians of this particular tribe of whom I now speak. It was not because the probate judge was dishonest, but it was because of an unfortunate condition that existed there which exists in all new countries. Now, I regret the statement of my colleague [Mr. CARTER], when he stated in effect that the district agents were in collusion with the grafters.

Mr. CARTER. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman evidently misunderstood me. I said there were a few of them who were, but I said that all except a few were a gang of political gangsters.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. Very well, then; "a gang of political gangsters." Now, I want to tell you how those agents were appointed. We passed a law in this House providing for them, because we felt the necessity for such a law. I was like most other Members of Congress. I do not think there are many exceptions on this side, and I doubt if there are many on that side. There was no provision that these appointments should be within the rules of the civil service. I requested the privilege of naming some of those parties. I think I named one or two. There was no person whom I named who has ever had his name associated with any graft. Now, notice this fact: One-half of the district agents provided for at that time were named by the head of the Dawes Commission, and their appointments were made irrespective of their political convictions. I know that some of them were not identified with politics, and I know that some of them did identify themselves with politics after that, and I have no defense to make for them. We are now providing for attorneys to consult with the probate judges and assist them to take care of these 75,000 cases of minors. Does any gentleman think for a moment that my good friends from Oklahoma are paying no attention to those appointments? I was no different from them. I would take care of every respectable and responsible friend I could, and that has been my policy in politics since I entered the game. [Applause.] Now the simple fact that the gentlemen who are now appointed and who have been appointed under this administration are all Democrats is no reason why I should assail their integrity, because there are some good men in the Democratic Party.

Mr. CARTER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I will.

Mr. CARTER. There were four of the district Indian agents who were convicted of graft.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I was coming to that.

Mr. CARTER. They were convicted of graft by the Secretary of the Interior and removed, but the evidence was not furnished to the grand jury when it was called.

Mr. McGUIRE of Oklahoma. I was coming to that. Now, of the district agents whom I named, not one of them ever had his name associated with graft, but there were 2 or 3 or 4—I thought the number was about 6, but perhaps I am mistaken—whose conduct was questionable, and some of them were convicted. But it is not fair to say that the policy of their appointment was wrong, or that the others were dishonest, because some of them were convicted. I might say the same thing about the probate judges of the east end of the State, most of whom were Democrats. Some of them were proven to be dishonest, but, as has been said by one of the gentlemen from Oklahoma, they are a fair average of the probate courts of the country. There was great temptation. There were millions of dollars in their hands, and in a few cases, a limited number of cases, they were found to be dishonest; but you might find that condition in any State of the Union.

But this ought not to be a political question. It is one in which every Member of Congress is interested, regardless of politics.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph be now closed.

Mr. SISSON. I desire recognition, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Then I ask unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph be closed in five minutes.

Mr. SISSON. I do not want to be put under that restraint if I do not finish my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that debate on this paragraph be closed in five minutes. Is there objection?

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, I had not intended to have anything to say on this bill, but I am interested in the Mississippi Choctaws; not because any number of them live in my district, for only a few of them live there, but the district which I represent was formerly practically the center of the Choctaw Nation. I do know something about the conditions which prevailed there, and I think the statement made by the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. MURRAY] was unwarranted. I do not believe the gentleman means to say that there is any disposition on the part of anybody who is interested in this bill that the Indians shall be grafted upon, and I want to call the attention of the House to the situation.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. I said I did not believe that. I said I thought they had absolutely good motives.

Mr. SISSON. When the Dancing Rabbitt treaty was in process of being negotiated, Greenwood Leflore, the Choctaw chief, refused to sign the treaty unless the Choctaw Indians who desired to do so could remain in the State of Mississippi; and my recollection is that shortly after the treaty was signed about 5,000 of them took advantage of that provision of the treaty and elected to remain in the State of Mississippi.

Now, they say a solemn contract was made between the Choctaw Nation and the Government of the United States, and the Choctaws are there now by virtue of that solemn contract. These people were wards of the Federal Government; they lived back on the creeks in the rural districts. Without going into the history of it, a few years ago there was an effort made to ascertain the number who could properly go on the roll. About 1,800 of them were found to have the right to enroll as Mississippi Choctaws and participate in the tribal funds. On account of the fact that the money appropriated was either misused or was insufficient to take these Choctaws to the Indian Territory; the money that was used carried only three or four hundred to Oklahoma and their names were placed on the roll. But these 1,200 Choctaw Indians who were subject to have their names placed on the rolls did not have the notice, the excuse being that the money gave out and the time given was too short. Agents came to the Indians and promised to come for them, but the Indians will state, and state the truth, that they waited expecting the Government agents to come back and get them, as they promised to do, but they did not come, and they were left in that condition.

Under the Dancing Rabbitt treaty, which this Congress will not repeal, the Mississippi Choctaws living in Mississippi have rights that they can expect this great Government, who is their guardian, to guarantee to them. As stated by my colleague, Mr. HARRISON, by reason of the $8,000,000 suit they got the money of the Mississippi Choctaws, and the Mississippi Choctaws did not get any of it, but it went into the Choctaw treasury in Oklahoma. Now, they have the right, and the Government should see to it that they get their rights out of the Choctaw funds.

Mr. MURRAY of Oklahoma. The gentleman refers to the eight million scrip paper?

Mr. SISSON. Yes. Now I want to call the attention of the House to the history of the Choctaw. It is the only Indian tribe that has never raised its hand against the white man. Pushmattahah, the great chief, was a great personal friend of Andrew Jackson. He was with him at Horseshoe Bend and the Battle of New Orleans, and you all recollect that in that battle the British were slipping around back of the American line next to the lake, and it was the Mississippi Choctaws that rose up in the gray dawn, and the crack of the Choctaw's rifle was heard in defense, and the Stars and Stripes were enabled to float over that land, and the victory won added an empire to our Union. That battle settled for all time the status of the Louisiana Purchase. The fact that the Mississippi Choctaw has ever been a peaceable Indian and made no war against the white man is the reason he was permitted to remain at his old place in Mississippi. He was permitted to remain there because he was our friend. If he had been warlike, burning and stealing property, he would not have been permitted to remain there, but would have been living in Oklahoma, and he would have had his rights.

Speaking of graft, is it right—I care not about the decision of the courts in reference to some of these matters—but is it right to deprive these Mississippi Choctaws of their treaty rights? If that is not graft, if depriving the Mississippi Choctaws of their rights in Oklahoma is not graft, what is it? Graft is to take Government funds which do not belong to you.

The Oklahoma Choctaw has taken something that did not rightfully belong to him.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Mississippi has expired.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the time be extended three minutes, and that that time be yielded to the gentleman from Mississippi.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the time be extended three minutes, and at the end of that time debate be closed on this paragraph. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SISSON. Mr. Chairman, one of two things must be true. If the Choctaw Indian in Mississippi be the ward of this Government, having the right under the Dancing Rabbitt treaty to remain in Mississippi, having elected to remain there, then surely this Congress ought to pass an act conferring on the Choctaw in Mississippi property and funds belonging to him. He has never gotten any of the property belonging to him in the State of Oklahoma. He had the right to look to Congress to protect him. Congress has so far failed. It is our duty now to act and give these unfortunate Indians what is their own. No technical or legal or legislative jugglery should be permitted to rob these unfortunate wards of the Government.

The Choctaw chief was in the city not long since, and he himself said, as several young Indians said—and they had some education—stated that they would have gone to Oklahoma if they had had an opportunity. One said, "My mother and I and the members of the family were waiting over the line in Louisiana until the agents came back to get us, because they said we are going to go." The agent said, "The Government is going to take you out there and give you your property." There they waited, and the result is that 1,200 are waiting in penury and want for Uncle Sam to come. It is the duty of Uncle Sam to go. He is their guardian. He should go to them at once. [Applause.]

Mr. STEPHENS of Texas. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. BYRNS of Tennessee, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee had had under consideration the bill H. R. 12579, the Indian appropriation bill, and had instructed him to report that they had come to no resolution thereon.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bill and joint resolution of the following titles:

S. 1294. An act to regulate the hours of employment and safeguard the health of females employed in the District of Columbia; and

S. J. Res. 110. Joint resolution authorizing the President to accept an invitation to participate in an International Commission of Phytopathology.

SENATE BILL REFERRED.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, Senate bill of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee as indicated below:

S. 2904. An act for the relief of certain persons, their heirs or assigns, who heretofore conveyed lands inside national forests to the United States; to the Committee on the Public Lands.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Tulley, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed the following resolution (S. Res. 273):

Resolved, That the Senate has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. AUGUSTUS O. BACON, late a Senator from the State of Georgia.

Resolved, That a committee of 12 Senators be appointed by the Vice President to take order for superintending the funeral of Mr. BACON.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate a copy of these resolutions to the House of Representatives.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased Senator the Senate do now adjourn.

DEATH OF SENATOR BACON.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, it is my painful duty to announce the death of the senior Senator from Georgia, Senator BACON. At some future time I shall ask the House to set aside a day that we may pay tribute to his memory. At present I offer the following resolutions.

The Clerk read as follows:

House resolution 416.

Resolved, That the House has heard with profound sorrow of the death of Hon. AUGUSTUS O. BACON, late a Senator from the State of Georgia.

Resolved, That a committee of 20 Members of the House be appointed to join such committee of the Senate as may be appointed to attend the funeral.

Resolved, That the Clerk communicate these resolutions to the Senate and transmit a copy thereof to the family of the deceased.

The resolutions were agreed to.

The SPEAKER announced the following committee on the part of the House: Mr. BARTLETT, Mr. ADAMSON, Mr. HARDWICK, Mr. BELL of Georgia, Mr. LEE of Georgia, Mr. EDWARDS, Mr. HUGHES of Georgia, Mr. TRIBBLE, Mr. HOWARD, Mr. CRISP, Mr. WALKER, Mr. PARK, Mr. FERRIS, Mr. MANN, Mr. PAYNE, Mr. GARDNER, Mr. ANTHONY, Mr. WILLIS, Mr. DYER, and Mr. PROUTY.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. BARTLETT. I offer the further resolution, Mr. Speaker.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect this House do now adjourn.

The resolution was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 55 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, February 16, 1914, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATION.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, a letter from the Acting Secretary of the Treasury, transmitting a report showing the number of documents received and distributed by the Treasury Department during the calendar year ended December 31, 1913, together with the number remaining on hand January 1, 1914 (H. Doc. No. 739), was taken from the Speaker's table, referred to the Committee on Expenditures in the Treasury Department, and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. CHURCH, from the Committee on the Public Lands, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 11751) granting land to the county of San Diego, State of California, for public watering purposes, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 251), which said bill and report were referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII, private bills and resolutions were severally reported from committees, delivered to the Clerk, and referred to the Committee of the Whole House, as follows:

Mr. LOBECK, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 8808) for the relief of Baley W. Hamilton, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 255), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

He also, from the same committee, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 932) for the relief of John W. Canary, reported the same with amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 252), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

Mr. GREGG, from the Committee on War Claims, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 10201) for the relief of the heirs of Theodore Dehon, reported the same without amendment, accompanied by a report (No. 253), which said bill and report were referred to the Private Calendar.

SENATE.

MONDAY, February 16, 1914.

The Chaplain, Rev. Forrest J. Prettyman, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Almighty God, we come into Thy presence this morning in the midst of a great sorrow that has fallen upon our hearts and upon this great Nation. Thou hast called to his reward one who has stood for the best in our national life, whom Thou didst permit to represent a great State, and whom Thou didst call into a place of leadership among the people.

We remember Thy goodness in giving to us this great man whose life was dedicated to the cause of human brotherhood, whose spirit was lifted in reverence to the Deity, the great Father. We bless Thee for his influence upon us as a Nation, and that to-day we feel in the midst of our loss that God Himself stands so near to us, holding us in the hollow of His hand, that He will still guide us and give to us leaders who are men after His own heart.

We pray that the loss which has come to us with its sorrow may chasten and refine our spirits that we may be better prepared for all the duties of life, and prepared at last when all the fleeting shadow of this life has passed from us, to enter into the presence of our God and stand the test of the eternal world. For Christ's sake. Amen.

The Secretary proceeded to read the Journal of the proceedings of Saturday last when, on request of Mr. GALLINGER and by unanimous consent, the further reading was dispensed with and the Journal was approved.

ARRANGEMENTS FOR FUNERAL OF SENATOR BACON.

The VICE PRESIDENT. In compliance with the resolution adopted on Saturday, the Chair appoints as the committee to take order for superintending the funeral of Senator BACON: Mr. SMITH of Georgia, Mr. TILLMAN, Mr. OVERMAN, Mr. CHILTON, Mr. FLETCHER, Mr. POMERENE, Mr. THOMAS, Mr. O'GORMAN, Mr. VARDAMAN, Mr. GALLINGER, Mr. ROOT, Mr. NELSON, Mr. BRANDEGEE, and Mr. PAGE.

Mr. OVERMAN submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 275), which was read and referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Senate be, and he hereby is, authorized and directed to pay from the miscellaneous items of the contingent fund of the Senate the actual and necessary expenses incurred by the committee appointed by the President of the Senate in arranging for and attending the funeral of the late Senator AUGUSTUS O. BACON, from the State of Georgia, vouchers for the same to be approved by the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, after polling the members of the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, I now make a favorable report upon the resolution and ask for its adoption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The resolution was agreed to.

Mr. KERN. I move that when the Senate adjourns to-day it be to meet to-morrow at 12 o'clock and 45 minutes post meridian.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KERN submitted the following resolutions (S. Res. 274), which were read, considered by unanimous consent, and unanimously agreed to:

Resolved, That the committee of 14 Senators appointed by the Vice President under the resolution of the Senate of February 14, 1914, shall take order for superintending the funeral of Mr. BACON in the Senate Chamber at 1 o'clock p. m. on Tuesday, February 17, instant, and that the Senate will attend the same.

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect the remains of Mr. BACON be removed from Washington to Macon, Ga., in charge of the Sergeant at Arms, attended by the committee, who shall have full power to carry these resolutions into effect.

Resolved, That the Secretary communicate these proceedings to the House of Representatives and invite the House of Representatives to attend the funeral in the Senate Chamber and to appoint a committee to act with the committee of the Senate.

Resolved, That invitations be extended to the President of the United States and the members of his Cabinet, the Chief Justice and Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States, the Diplomatic Corps (through the Secretary of State), the Admiral of the Navy, the Chief of Staff of the Army, and the Regents and Secretary of the Smithsonian Institution to attend the funeral in the Senate Chamber.

Mr. KERN. Mr. President, I offer a resolution and ask for its adoption.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The resolution will be read.

The resolution was read and unanimously agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That as a further mark of respect to the memory of the deceased the Senate do now adjourn.

The Senate thereupon (at 12 o'clock and 10 minutes p. m.) adjourned until to-morrow, Tuesday, February 17, 1914, at 12.45 p. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, February 16, 1914.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Clerk read the following communication:

THE SPEAKER'S ROOM, HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D. C., February 16, 1914.

Hon. SOUTH TRIMBLE,
Clerk, House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: I hereby designate Hon. JOHN J. FITZGERALD Speaker pro tempore for to-day.

CHAMP CLARK,
Speaker House of Representatives.

Mr. FITZGERALD assumed the chair as Speaker pro tempore.

The Chaplain, Rev. Henry N. Couden, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Eternal Spirit, our heavenly Father, the All in All, a light has gone out of the world, a soul has been translated, a great statesman has been taken from us. Where shall we go; to whom shall we turn in our bereavement for succor and comfort but to Thee? Thou art infinite in all Thine attributes, Thou hast planned, Thou canst make no mistakes; Thy will is supreme and Thy will is good will. Therefore we trust, therefore we hope; we shall not be disappointed.

Comfort our hearts, be light to our darkness. Especially come near to the bereaved family who leaned upon him for strength and guidance that they may look forward without fear but with hope for a brighter day in some one of the many mansions which Thou hast prepared for Thy children. Every storm is followed by a calm, every night is followed by a day, so every grief will be turned into joy.

And, O God, we most fervently pray for the Member of this body, who in his declining years has been bereft of the companion who has walked side by side with him for many years, sharing his joys and sorrows, an helpmeet indeed. May he look forward with trust and confidence in the infinite love of a heavenly Father. Thus be with him; thus comfort and sustain him, the bereaved children, and grandchildren. In the name of Him who revealed the life and immortality of the soul. Amen.

ARMY APPROPRIATION BILL.

By direction of the Committee on Military Affairs Mr. HAY reported the bill (H. R. 13453) making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1915, and for other purposes, which was read the first and second time and, with the accompanying report (H. Rept. 257), referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered to be printed.

Mr. KAHN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California reserves all points of order.

WITHDRAWAL OF PAPERS.

By unanimous consent Mr. UNDERHILL was granted leave to withdraw from the files of the House, without leaving copies, papers in the case of Johannah O'Keefe, H. R. 28457, Sixty-second Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

Also the papers in the case of Daniel Updike, H. R. 22135, Sixty-second Congress, no adverse report having been made thereon.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. CLARK of Florida, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. SHACKLEFORD, indefinitely, on account of serious illness.

To Mr. TAYLOR of Arkansas, indefinitely, on account of having been appointed to go to Michigan to serve on the subcommittee of the Committee on Mines and Mining in the investigation of the miners' strike in Michigan under House resolution 387.

CALENDAR FOR UNANIMOUS CONSENT.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. To-day is set apart for the consideration of business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent, and the Clerk will report the first bill.

PATENTS TO TRANSFEREES OF TOWN LOTS.

The first business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 4938) providing for the issuance of patents to transferees of town lots purchased from the United States at public sale in certain cases.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in all cases where town lots were sold by the United States at public sale, and the purchaser at such sale has transferred his interest in any such lot prior to the 11th day of October,

1911, and patent has not been issued in the name of the original purchaser, the Commissioner of the General Land Office may issue a patent in the name of the transferee where full payment of the purchase price has been made and satisfactory evidence of the transfer has been furnished: Provided, That it be shown that the original purchaser is dead, or that after due inquiry his whereabouts can not be ascertained, and that the instrument of transfer given by the original purchaser has been lost or destroyed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to have the chairman of the Committee on Public Lands make some explanation of the bill. As I understand it, it relates only to town lots.

Mr. FERRIS. It is true it relates only to town lots. I think I can make a statement that will explain it fully, and such a one as will satisfy the gentleman. This bill was first reported by the Public Lands Committee some time ago, and the first report on the bill was not very complete. After consultation with some of the Members of the House I took up the matter with the department, and they have written a supplementary letter which I think will make the object of the bill very plain to the House. It was a bill drawn by the department and introduced by myself as the chairman of the committee at their suggestion. I hold in my hand a letter from the Secretary of the Interior, Mr. Lane, under date of February 2, 1914, in response to a request from me for an additional report. If the gentleman desires, I will read the letter.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I think a brief statement from the gentleman will be satisfactory. As I understand, this is a departmental bill?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes. The substance of the letter is this: That in 1908 in Oklahoma, and also in South Dakota, certain town lots were sold on the installment plan, one-fifth down and one-fifth each year for the succeeding years. The first payment was made, and the Commissioner of the General Land Office issued a letter under date of December 28, 1908, authorizing the purchasers to transfer their purchase certificates, and the letter went so far as to set out just how the transfer should be made, and it sets it out in this letter:

I hereby assign to ——— my interest in the within-named lot.

The letter went on and said that upon presentation of the certificate of transfer they should issue a certificate to the transferee of the lot. This is what happened with the land. The department later decided that they ought to issue the patent to the original purchaser, irrespective of transfers even though made in strict conformity with former instructions. That leaves the Land Office in this position: They first hold one thing and then reverse themselves, which leaves the lot transferee in the attitude of paying first a bonus to the original purchaser; second, having made all of these payments to the Government for the lot, and still he has no title. If the transferees had taken a warranty deed instead of doing precisely what the department asked them to do in the way of transfer, this legislation would not be necessary. The concluding clause of the Secretary's letter is:

It appears that those coming within the provisions of the bill will be without remedy should the proposed legislation fail of enactment. I therefore renew my former recommendation that the proposed legislation be enacted.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, with that explanation I have no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FERRIS. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. The bill as read said something about these papers being lost.

Mr. FERRIS. No; it says where the original purchaser has moved away and can not be found, or where he is dead, and that renders it impossible for the transferee to get a new deed from the original purchaser.

Mr. JOHNSON of South Carolina. But the transferee is in the possession of the original transfer?

Mr. FERRIS. That is right; but he has no warranty deed, and his chain of title is not complete.

Mr. MILLER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. FERRIS. I do.

Mr. MILLER. I am not opposed to the gentleman's bill—I think it ought to pass—but I would like to know if the gentleman can advise me about what proportion of the lands that have been sold by the Government will be affected under the provision of this act?

Mr. FERRIS. Well, a very small per cent. A good many of them have already made their payments in full and gone back and secured new deeds. This proposition of the Land Office reversing themselves has caused a good deal of confusion. This will straighten the whole matter out. The whereabouts of some of the original purchasers are unknown and some are dead, but this comprises a very few cases—no large number.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That in all cases where town lots were sold by the United States at public sale, and the purchaser at such sale has transferred his interest in any such lot prior to the 11th day of October, 1911, and patent has not been issued in the name of the original purchaser, the Commissioner of the General Land Office may issue a patent in the name of the transferee where full payment of the purchase price has been made and satisfactory evidence of the transfer has been furnished: Provided, That it be shown that the original purchaser is dead, or that after due inquiry his whereabouts can not be ascertained, and that the instrument of transfer given by the original purchaser has been lost or destroyed.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman intend to insert that letter in the RECORD?

Mr. FERRIS. I was going to ask that be done. I will ask now, Mr. Speaker, that the letter which I have just referred to, the contents of which I stated to the gentleman from Wisconsin, be printed at length.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the letter will be printed.

The letter is as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
Washington, February 2, 1914.

Hon. SCOTT FERRIS,
Chairman Committee on the Public Lands,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. FERRIS: I am in receipt of your recent request for further report on H. R. 4938, a bill for the issuance of patents to transferees of town lots purchased from the United States at public sale in certain cases, and in response thereto, in addition to my report upon said bill of August 29, 1913, I have the honor to advise you that on January 2, 1909, the register and receiver at Lawton, Okla., were instructed by the General Land Office as follows:

"In reply to Receiver Maxwell's letter of December 28, addressed to J. W. Witten, of this office, you were instructed to recognize persons who have received assignments from purchasers of lots in the north addition to Lawton, and permit them to make final payment and receive certificates of purchase in all cases where they present to you the receipt held by the purchaser for the payment of the deposit made at the date of the sale.

"The assignment should be made on the back of the receipt already issued in substantially the following form:

"'I hereby assign to (here name the assignee) my interest in the within-named lot.'

"When an assignment of this character has been made, you will make proper notation thereof on the records of your office and report the same to this office with your returns."

Similar instructions were given the local officers at Timberlake, S. Dak., relative to transferees of lots in the town sites of Dupree and Timberlake, S. Dak.

It appears that those coming within the provisions of the bill will be without remedy should the proposed legislation fail of enactment. I therefore renew my former recommendation that the proposed legislation of this bill be enacted.

Respectfully,

FRANKLIN K. LANE.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. I do not like to question the grammar of the department, but it seems to me that it would be a little better, in line 4, if we should substitute the word "had" instead of the word "has."

Mr. FERRIS. It would be better, and I have no objection.

Mr. MANN. It is grammatically imperfect as it now stands.

Mr. FERRIS. If the gentleman will offer that amendment, I will be glad to accept it.

Mr. MANN. I trust the gentleman will offer it.

Mr. FERRIS. What is the amendment suggested?

Mr. MANN. In line 4 strike out "has" and insert "had."

Mr. FERRIS. Mr. Speaker, in line 4, on the suggestion of the gentleman from Illinois, I move to strike out the word "has" and insert "had."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois withdraws his pro forma amendment, and the gentleman from Oklahoma offers an amendment which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amend, page 1, line 4, by striking out the word "has" and inserting the word "had."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FERRIS, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION PASSED OVER.

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER pro tempore. For what purpose does the gentleman rise?

Mr. BARTLETT. Mr. Speaker, I rise for the purpose of asking that House joint resolution 100, No. 35 on the calendar, be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent that House joint resolution 100, No. 35 upon the Unanimous Consent Calendar, be passed for the day without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6143) relating to the maintenance of action for title on the high seas and other navigable waters.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 6143) relating to the maintenance of action for title on the high seas and other navigable waters.

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. Speaker, at the request of Mr. McCOY, of New Jersey, who is interested in this bill, I ask that it be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Virginia asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed without prejudice.

Mr. FINLEY. For what length of time?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. Mr. McCOY is engaged in a committee at this time.

Mr. FINLEY. For what length of time?

Mr. FLOOD of Virginia. I can not tell what length of time.

Mr. FINLEY. I do not think the bill ought to pass by unanimous consent.

Mr. BRYAN. Mr. Speaker, I have heretofore stated to Mr. McCOY that when this bill came up I was going to object. The only reason I will not object now is out of courtesy to Mr. McCOY, but I am certainly going to object when the bill comes up and he is present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to passing this bill without prejudice? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. BRYAN. I will object when the time comes to take up the bill for consideration.

LIEU LANDS, IMPERIAL COUNTY, CAL.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 122) authorizing the State of California to select public lands in lieu of certain lands granted to it in Imperial County, Cal., and for other purposes.

The Clerk reported the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the State of California or its grantees may, with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior, reconvey to the United States any of the lands heretofore granted to said State in the townships authorized to be resurveyed by the act of July 1, 1902 (32 Stat. L., p. 728), and select in lieu thereof an equal amount of vacant, unappropriated, surveyed, unreserved, nonmineral public lands within said State: Provided, That any application to select land under this act must be presented within three years from the date of its passage: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to issue a patent conveying to Victor E. Shaw, of Los Angeles, Cal., the south half of section 26, in township 11 south, range 13 east, San Bernardino base and meridian, containing 320 acres, in Imperial County, Cal., upon the express and prior condition that said Victor E. Shaw shall execute and deliver to the Secretary of the Interior a grant and deed satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior relinquishing and conveying to the Government of the United States all his right, title, and interest in and to the north half of section 36, in township 16 south, range 13 east, San Bernardino base and meridian, Imperial County, Cal., according to the original survey, containing 320 acres, now known as part of tract 37, in township 16 south, ranges 13 and 14 east, San Bernardino base and meridian, according to the resurvey.

SEC. 2. That the Secretary of the Interior may make proper rules and regulations for carrying this act into effect.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have not before me part 1 of the report. The bill seems to be a mixed affair.

Mr. RAKER. Not at all.

Mr. STAFFORD. A part provides remedies to some certain individuals who, I believe, are squatters, and the other extends certain privileges to the State of California.

Mr. RAKER. That is not the condition of the bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. That is the impression I gained from reading it.

Mr. RAKER. If you have part 1 of the report, on page 5 you will find this statement of the department:

From the above it is clear that the bill in all probability will not affect more than 1,280 acres under section 1.

And in section 2 the proviso is 320 acres. That relating to part 1 of the bill is by virtue of a resurvey of that territory occasioned by reason of the old survey being obliterated, and Congress passed a bill authorizing the new survey. That land is now occupied both by the homesteaders and desert-land claimants and the school-section people, who have their title in patent and are occupying other land now in the valley.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman explain the necessity for special legislation giving the squatter some rights as provided in the proviso?

Mr. RAKER. It is not the squatter under the proviso at all.

Mr. STAFFORD. I gained that impression by reading the report of the Assistant Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. RAKER. That is for the very purpose of preventing an infringement of the law in relation to reserves. The committee wanted to know whether or not any other parties had any valid claims to this land. They took it up with the Secretary of the Interior and with the Reclamation Service, and these letters were obtained to show that the departments have never authorized anybody to go upon this land, because it was withdrawn. And the proviso relating to Mr. Shaw is that he had his title in patent for 320 acres of school land, and under the resurvey, which is marked in the bill here as Lot 35, is the same land. By virtue of the survey he was put off of that land, and therefore the Government has asked the reintroduction of this bill, which was introduced in the Sixty-second Congress, passed the Senate, and reported favorably to the House, and because of the lateness of the session, did not go through.

Mr. STAFFORD. And this is a bill recommended by the department?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; and I read on page 2:

The above measures were introduced at the request of this department.

Mr. STAFFORD. As I stated, I did not have the first part of the report. I had only the second part before me, which I have examined.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my objection to the bill.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, may I ask the gentleman if I have a correct understanding of the bill? The school sections having been granted to California that are involved in this bill, the survey landmarks were all lost or buried or destroyed, the survey having been made many years ago?

Mr. RAKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. Then Congress passed a law providing for the resurvey.

Mr. RAKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. And the resurvey was had recently?

Mr. RAKER. Some five years ago.

Mr. MANN. Yes. And in the resurvey the Government did not survey it as a section or a quarter section, and so forth, but resurveyed it and described the section by lot numbers?

Mr. RAKER. Yes, sir.

Mr. MANN. The people, without knowing that it was a school section, following the lot numbers, made entries upon the land under the general land law?

Mr. RAKER. They were already located upon this land, claiming it under the original survey as near as they could, and still maintained possession when the resurvey was on. All of the resurveys have been adjusted with the exception of about five claims involved in this particular school section, which, according to the department, is 1,128 acres.

Mr. MANN. Those have been adjusted because people who bought from the State obtained the land, but some of the people who are involved here on the one side bought land from the State supposing they would get a portion of the school section, and on the other side the people settled on the land, supposing it was Government land. Is that correct?

Mr. RAKER. That is about it. But by the resurvey of section 16 it, when the resurvey was made, was made tract 37. Therefore there was no land marked in that township and range as section 16. And a homesteader in one instance and a desert-land claimant in the other were actually on the land. And the department now says the matter can be adjusted by leaving these claimants to hold the land and issue a patent to them, as they have lived there for five or six years, and then give to the man who had the actual patent from the State to this land another tract of land lying in the valley. This particular tract is now covered by the Salton Sea, which sea may be evaporated in years to come.

Mr. MANN. Take the case of Mr. Shaw, who is specifically named in this bill; he bought land from the State as part of the school section. Somebody had taken possession of it, supposing it was Government land. Mr. Shaw brought suit against the man, and, according to the report, he was defeated in his litigation.

Mr. RAKER. Because of the fact——

Mr. MANN. Whatever may have been the cause, this bill now proposes to let him select through the State other land in place of the land that he does not get?

Mr. RAKER. No; it allows him to select under this bill, provided that he redeed to the Government the claims he originally filed on, which are in the original township and range and section as described in the original survey.

Mr. MANN. He bought the land as a school section. If he gives that up to the man now in possession, and whom he can not dispossess, because he has tried and failed, he has to get other land. May I ask the gentleman what is this land worth?

Mr. RAKER. I am advised by Mr. Shaw and those who know that it will be worth from $20 to $40 an acre, and that at the present time this land, practically all of it, is covered by the Salton Sea, and the only use he can make of it is when the Salton Sea recedes and evaporates. Part of the land is open and above water at the present time.

Mr. MANN. Well, if you grant this land, which the gentleman says is in the Salton Sea——

Mr. RAKER. Only a part of it——

Mr. MANN. How much will we be asked to spend to redeem the land from the Salton Sea?

Mr. RAKER. Oh, nothing.

Mr. MANN. How much have we already been asked to expend on it?

Mr. RAKER. Nothing. If the gentleman will yield, I will say that is where the Colorado River broke over and ran down into the Imperial Valley and covered a part of the country from 60 miles long to 30 miles wide. A good many people owned that land, and that is now covered by the Salton Sea.

Mr. MANN. We are asked to redeem it and to drain it, and we are asked to pay a million and a half dollars to the Southern Pacific Railroad.

Mr. RAKER. No; the Southern Pacific's claim is that Government officials and others went to them and asked them to help stop up the gap, and they expended this money to prevent the Colorado River from continuing to run into the Salton Sea and filling up the entire valley.

Mr. MANN. They want us not only to redeem the land from the Salton Sea, but also to pay the Southern Pacific a very large sum of money which President Roosevelt asked them to expend, as he stated at the time, without authority, and which they did expend. Now, if we grant the land in the Salton Sea, which the gentleman says is worth from $20 to $40 an acre, will they take it the way it stands or will they ask us to redeem it?

Mr. RAKER. They will take it as it stands, absolutely. They ask nothing from the Government but the title to that land with all the conditions on it you please.

Mr. MANN. How much is this land Mr. Shaw gets worth?

Mr. RAKER. I think it worth from $20 to $40 an acre.

Mr. MANN. My recollection is—I am not sure it is correct, but the statement is made by Mr. Shaw in some place—that it is worth $150 an acre.

Mr. RAKER. Somewhere near that. That is the land he must surrender.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Shaw never himself intended to settle on the land?

Mr. RAKER. He had part of it improved.

Mr. MANN. He is not a farmer?

Mr. RAKER. He is a farmer in that way, like a good many Members of Congress are farmers.

Mr. MANN. That is not a very successful way to get property—like the Members of the House are farmers. [Laughter.]

Mr. RAKER. I mean he is not on the farm all the time.

Mr. MANN. He had no right to take this land up from the Government, had he?

Mr. RAKER. Oh, yes.

Mr. MANN. Not in his position. He had the right to get it from the State if the State owned it.

Mr. RAKER. Most of this land was taken up as desert claims, and a man did not have to live on it. Two-thirds of the Imperial Valley was taken up as desert claims. The man never lived there, but he sent his men out there and removed the sand dunes and improved it and planted it with alfalfa and other products.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The bill is on the Union Calendar.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] asks unanimous consent that the bill be considered in the House as in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will read.

The bill was again read.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. RAKER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGES ACROSS THE MUSKINGUM RIVER IN OHIO.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the next bill.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11331) to repeal an act regulating the construction of bridges across the Muskingum River in Ohio.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill to repeal an act regulating the construction of bridges across the Muskingum River in Ohio.

Be it enacted, etc., That the act of Congress entitled "An act regulating the construction of bridges over the Muskingum River in Ohio," approved April 2, 1888, be, and the same is hereby, repealed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. ANTHONY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to inquire what is the necessity for the repeal of the act? I would like to hear from the author of the bill as to the necessity for the repeal of the act.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, prior to the enactment of the general bridge act and the river and harbor act of 1899 there were several local acts enacted, covering various rivers, and among them was an act providing for all bridges that might be proposed over the Muskingum River, in the State of Ohio. Afterwards, when the situation was clarified by the general bridge act and the river and harbor act of 1899, for some reason these local acts were not expressly repealed. Whether they were repealed by implication or not I will not discuss, or whether we thought they should be. At any rate, the old act stands, providing various complicated, diverse, and tedious demands, requirements, and conditions for the War Department to observe, and they find it quite difficult to administer. It is not nearly so simple or nearly so satisfactory as compliance with the general bridge act or the river and harbor act of 1899, and the situation has become acute since the last year's freshet, which washed away nearly all the bridges on the Muskingum River and brought to the attention of the War Department the advisability of repealing this act and leaving the entire subject under the general bridge act and the act of 1899. Is that satisfactory to the gentleman from Kansas?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Georgia if the question of navigability is involved here at all, or if it is one of flood prevention?

Mr. ADAMSON. Of course it is supposed to be a navigable stream.

Mr. MOORE. Was it navigability or flood prevention that induced the preparation of this bill?

Mr. ADAMSON. Ill would it become me, Mr. Speaker, to advise the gentleman from Pennsylvania on geography. There is nothing about flood prevention in this bill. The only reference made to floods was that the acuteness of the situation was brought about by the fact that all the bridges were swept away at once and all had to be rebuilt.

In providing for their rebuilding, the War Department realized more pointedly than ever the difficulty of administering that local act.

Mr. MOORE. Is it not a fact that the War Department found that bridges constructed under that act hindered the flow of the water——

Mr. ADAMSON. That may be true.

Mr. MOORE. To such an extent that the floods became more dangerous than they were before the bridges were constructed?

Mr. ADAMSON. That is possibly true.

Mr. MOORE. Is it true, then, that the general bridge act would be more advantageous in its terms with regard to the Muskingum River, in respect to navigability and in respect to flood prevention, than this special act which you seek to repeal?

Mr. ADAMSON. The War Department so regards it. I agree with the gentleman and with the War Department that the general bridge act and the before-mentioned act of 1899 are much simpler and much more easily enforced, and will enable the department to reach proper conclusions more satisfactorily than the special act which it is sought to repeal.

Mr. MOORE. And while it is a more general act, it is also more liberal in respect to navigation.

Mr. ADAMSON. Yes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

Mr. COOPER. Will the gentleman permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. ADAMSON. Certainly.

Mr. COOPER. I notice in the letter of the Second Assistant Secretary of War he says that the act which it proposed to repeal sets forth many requirements as to details, and so forth, which, instead of being fixed by statute, should be left to Executive discretion. Can the gentleman tell us what some of those details are which the Assistant Secretary thinks ought to be left to Executive discretion instead of being fixed by statute?

Mr. ADAMSON. I would not undertake to state them from memory, but they are matters which are negligible, so far as the interests of navigation are concerned, and can be left safely to administration instead of being fixed by statute. I will get the statute and put it in the RECORD, if the gentleman from Wisconsin desires it.

Mr. COOPER. If the gentleman will pardon me, I notice the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. WHITE] who introduced the bill is sitting beside the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. ADAMSON]. Can the gentleman from Ohio tell us what some of these details are?

Mr. ADAMSON. I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WHITE. I will say to the gentleman that there were 18 bridges swept away in the flood of last spring, and the engineers have undertaken to meet the situation under this special act. The first difficulty they had to meet was the financial distress in the counties where these bridges were located.

As to the height of the bridges, you can understand that, theoretically, under strict interpretation of the law, the height of a bridge should be a certain number of feet; but that would involve a large expense in approaches and in the condemnation of the property—an expense not commensurate with the value of the structure as an aid to navigation—and many details and technical requirements of the special bridge act covering the Muskingum River are of such a character as to lead to the introduction of this bill for the purpose of securing the repeal of that law.

Mr. COOPER. Then, the gentleman thinks the passage of this bill will permit them to build bridges closer to the average water level than they could under the special act?

Mr. WHITE. That would be my judgment. Then draws can be put in where necessary.

Mr. COOPER. The reason I ask the question is that I have in mind bridges built some years ago over navigable streams—not in Ohio, and which I have seen—that are a positive obstruction to navigation; indeed, which have very seriously hindered navigation upon the streams over which they have been built. And while I shall make no opposition to the passage of this bill, yet I think we ought to exercise the utmost care in enacting legislation here which by any possibility can permit anything like indifference in the War Department as to the building of bridges across navigable streams.

Mr. WHITE. I am in accord with the gentleman.

Mr. COOPER. The height which a bridge shall be above the water is of the utmost importance; and if streams are to be canalized more and more in this country, as they are being canalized year by year in Germany, France, and other continental European countries, it is of paramount importance that we do not permit these bridges to be built in such a manner or in such places that canalization and general improvement shall be rendered worthless.

Mr. WHITE. I will say to the gentleman that of the 16 bridges, the plans for which the Secretary of War has withdrawn objection, every one of the plans provide for higher bridges than the ones which were swept away. The Secretary of War has insisted upon a general raising of the height of the bridges. But the flood of last spring was some 12 feet higher than the maximum high water ever known in that valley before, and I have contended at the War Department that in the light of the financial distress of the counties it is not necessary to require the counties to put bridges up to the height of the flood of last spring, which was a calamity rather than a flood.

Mr. ANTHONY. I should like to ask the gentleman from Ohio a question.

Mr. ADAMSON. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. ANTHONY. Has the Engineer Department been asked to make any recommendations in regard to these bridges?

Mr. WHITE. Yes; in every case.

Mr. ANTHONY. Are those the bridges that occasioned the profanity on the part of some Army officer who went up there to look at them?

Mr. WHITE. One of the bridges.

Mr. ANTHONY. What was that circumstance? Was there any difference between the department and the committee as to how those bridges should be constructed or as to how this legislation should be framed?

Mr. WHITE. There has been. Of course, as a Member of Congress, representing the counties through which that river flows and in which the bridges are needed, I have found this situation: On the one side was the desire of the engineers to have the bridges at a maximum height, both with respect to navigation and with respect to the prevention of floods. Theoretically, you might want a bridge as high as the highest water ever recorded, but, practically, there are problems of finance, and there is the necessity for people to cross the river. After this flood not a bridge remained between Zanesville and Marietta, a distance of 75 miles. I have tried to bring about a compromise—and I have been successful in the majority of cases—in securing an agreement as to a height that will to a certain extent promote both flood prevention and navigation and yet be adapted to the existing circumstances and enable the bridges to be built at once.

Of course there have been a great many differences arise on account of the counties not wanting to raise the bridges and the War Department insisting on the elevation.

Mr. MANN. If the gentleman will permit, I see that the original act for the construction of bridges over the Muskingum River among other things contains this provision:

> They shall also submit to the Secretary of War, for his examination and approval, a design and drawing of the bridge and piers and a map of the locality on the scale of 1 inch to 100 feet, giving for the space of one-quarter of a mile above and one-quarter of a mile below the site of the proposed bridge the topography of the banks of the river, the line of low and highest navigable water, an accurate representation of the bed of the river by contour lines 2 feet apart determined by accurate soundings, and shall also show over the whole width of this part of the river the force and direction of the currents at low water and at high navigable stages by triangulated observations on suitable floats.

I take it that that really is the trouble at present. This information they are required to show is supposed to be in the possession of the Government engineers, but not very accurate, and probably not obtained accurately without expense.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I listened intently to what the gentleman from Illinois has just read, and it is my judgment that those requirements ought to continue to be observed. I can not see anything in them that involves great expense. Those requirements provide for measurements and other data that ought to be in the possession of the War Department, and if the data already are in possession of the War Department there would be no survey. If there be no such data in possession of the department, then the measures and survey and triangulation ought to be made.

Mr. ADAMSON. Mr. Speaker, the purpose of the general bridge act was to systematize the supervision and construction of bridges and charge the War Department with the responsibility of carrying out the details. It was a mistake or an omission when we passed the general bridge act that we did not expressly repeal the local acts. Mr. Speaker, I ask permission to print as a part of my remarks the report of the War Department on this subject.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Georgia asks unanimous consent to print as a part of his remarks the report of the War Department. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The report is as follows:

WAR DEPARTMENT,
Washington, January 30, 1914.

Hon. W. C. ADAMSON,
Chairman Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce,
House of Representatives.

SIR: I have the honor to acknowledge your reference to this department of House bill 11331, Sixty-third Congress, second session, "To repeal an act regulating the construction of bridges across the Muskingum River in Ohio."

The existing law governing the construction of bridges across the Muskingum River was enacted many years ago, and is objectionable for the reason that it contains a multiplicity of details with respect to the preparation of plans, and calls for rigid adherence to various requirements in considering such plans, many of which are wholly unnecessary for a stream of this character. Experience in the administration of the law has shown that literal compliance with its provisions is difficult, involving the expenditure of considerable time and money on details, which, instead of being fixed by statute, should be left to executive discretion.

This was brought to the attention of the department with peculiar emphasis when a great number of bridges across this stream were prostrated or destroyed by the recent violent floods. The immediate reconstruction of these bridges, necessary for the convenience and comfort of the local public, was hindered and delayed, and much embarrassment and inconvenience was experienced on account of the existence of the statute and its cumbersome and complicated requirements.

The repeal of the statute as proposed by the bill under consideration would place the Muskingum River in the same category as other navigable waters of the United States and leave the matter of bridge construction subject to the general legislation contained in section 9 of the river and harbor act of March 3, 1899, and the general bridge act of March 23, 1906. In my judgment this is a desirable consummation from the standpoint of good administration, and I therefore recommend favorable consideration of the bill by Congress.

Very respectfully,

HENRY BRECKINRIDGE,
Assistant Secretary of War.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

BRIDGE OVER THE PENOBSCOT RIVER, ME.

The next business on the Unanimous Consent Calendar was the bill (S. 1346) to authorize the Eastern Maine Railroad to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge without a draw across the Penobscot River between the cities of Bangor and Brewer, in the State of Maine.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Eastern Maine Railroad, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Maine, and its successors in interest, is hereby authorized to construct, upon plans to be approved by the Chief of Engineers and by the Secretary of War before construction is commenced, and to maintain and operate a bridge and the necessary and convenient approaches thereto and abutments and piers therefor across the Penobscot River without having or constructing any draw or other means therein for the passage of navigation or shipping other than what may pass between the approaches and piers and under the spans of such bridge as the same may be constructed, said bridge to be located between some point on the easterly bank of the Penobscot River in the city of Brewer and a point on the westerly bank of said river in the city of Bangor and to be between the present highway bridge connecting said cities and the Bangor waterworks dam and at a point which will not interfere with the driving, rafting, and booming of logs.

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

"That the Eastern Maine Railroad, a corporation organized under the laws of the State of Maine, and its assigns be, and are hereby, authorized to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Penobscot River at a point suitable to the interests of navigation from some point on the easterly bank of the Penobscot River in the city of Brewer to a point on the westerly bank of said river in the city of Bangor between the present highway bridge connecting said cities and the Bangor waterworks dam, in the county of Penobscot, in the State of Maine, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters,' approved March 23, 1906.

"SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask somebody why this bridge is to be constructed without a draw?

Mr. ADAMSON. It is not. This amendment does not provide that it shall be without a draw. We struck that out and, by amendment, left it in conformity with the general bridge act.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, as I recollect, Congress has passed a law providing for the construction of a bridge by somebody else at this point without a draw.

Mr. ADAMSON. We have to confess that by inadvertence we did pass such a bill, but we do not want to repeat it.

Mr. MANN. When this bill was introduced a report upon it was made by the engineer department. I asked them why they approved a bill in that form and did not make it comply with the provisions of the general bridge act. They informed me that Congress had already passed a law recently, I think in the last Congress, on account of exceptional circumstances, providing for the construction of a bridge at this point or close to it without a draw, and hence there was no reason why a draw should be provided in this bridge as nothing could go through the draw and go beyond.

Mr. ADAMSON. I am free to state—and I will yield to the gentleman from Minnesota in a moment—that the gentleman from Illinois was right at that time and I think we were wrong. We were persuaded that the river did not amount to much at that point and that no navigation would be destroyed on it, but it was a mistake. The committee is not willing to say positively and absolutely that navigation shall be destroyed on any stream if we can help it. We wish to pass this bill in the usual form, and then if the War Department in administering the law approves plans or deems it proper to approve subject to revocation a plan of a bridge without a draw, the responsibility will be on the War Department, where it belongs.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Mr. Speaker, the law which the gentlemen from Illinois and Georgia refer to was passed in the last Congress, at the wish of the local delegation from Maine. They reported that the municipalities affected greatly desired that the municipal bridge between Bangor and Brewer should be constructed without a draw, because there was no navigation at that point, and none was probable, or even possible, in the future, since there is a dam without a lock only a short distance above the bridge, while the channel above the bridge is rocky and shoal and the water moves rapidly, so navigation is not possible on it. I am personally familiar with that locality, and I know that is true. Upon the presentation of those facts the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce did favorably report and the House did pass a bill authorizing a municipal bridge without a draw.

Now, this bridge will be constructed above the municipal bridge, between that and the dam. As the gentleman from Georgia states, the whole matter concerning form of the bridge is left with the War Department, but under the report of the War Department the officials probably would approve plans of a bridge without a draw, because the draw would be unnecessary under these circumstances. It could not be used, and it would involve a large and an unnecessary expense to build and operate it. For that reason there was no necessity for the committee to depart from the usual form of bridge bills, and it ought not to depart, because the form of the bridge bill has been tested by time.

Mr. MANN. The War Department has authority now to approve plans for a bridge at this point without a draw?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. MANN. I say without enacting any legislation now.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. MANN. They had authority before to provide for a local highway bridge with a draw.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Or without a draw.

Mr. MANN. But they would not take the responsibility of approving plans without a draw. Then Congress, in 1912, passed a law for a bridge without a draw below this point. I do not know what position the War Department may take. It may be that they will follow the opinion of Congress, but, if so, they do not need any legislation.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Yes.

Mr. COOPER. Can the gentleman cite a precedent where Congress had enacted a law authorizing the construction of a bridge without a draw across a navigable stream?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Oh, yes. This very case is one.

Mr. COOPER. Other than this?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. I think we have.

Mr. MANN. It is very unusual.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. It is very unusual; but I know there is a case on the Minnesota River in our State, but the committee has adopted this general rule, that wherever the municipalities themselves, the people acting through their duly constituted officials, notify us that such a bridge is desired and necessary for the public interests, then in the very few cases where we have allowed a bridge to be constructed without a draw legislation has been passed, where there is no possibility, so far as we can foresee, that there ever will be navigation; but wherever a railroad company or other private interest requires legislation we always provide for a draw. We are unwilling that any private interest, under any pretext, shall be allowed to obstruct a navigable stream, but in those isolated cases where the municipalities and the people themselves state that the fact is that there never can be any navigation and desire to be saved from the expense we have allowed this sort of legislation.

Mr. COOPER. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the gentleman that no private corporation should be permitted to construct a bridge without a draw across a navigable stream, and it strikes me as of somewhat doubtful advisability to permit a majority of a board of aldermen on behalf of a city to say that they do not want a draw in a bridge across such a stream.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. We do not even allow that.

Mr. COOPER. But the cities do not vote upon it?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. No; of course not.

Mr. COOPER. And the aldermen are the ones who represent them and who send their petitions or resolutions to Congress.

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. But the War Department renders its report, and the representatives of that district come before the committee and state the situation. As I say, I am personally familiar with this situation in this bill. I know that a draw is not required there and never can be used, because I am familiar with it. I formerly lived there and am well acquainted with the situation. In cases like that we require exact information by Government officials, local officials, and by the State representatives before we allow any of this legislation.

Mr. COOPER. I have in mind simply that it makes this a question to be decided by the presenting of evidence here in Washington, perhaps 1,000 miles or 2,000 miles away from the point where the bridge is to be constructed, and if it does this in one case, it will do it in a great many other cases, and in some cases Congress might be imposed upon. Therefore it seems to me that we ought to be very careful about recommending legislation of this character.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MOORE. Mr. Speaker, I think the amendment is to be preferred over the original bill, and I am very glad the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce has adopted that course; but I would like to ask the gentleman with reference to this paragraph of the old bill, that the bridge "shall be built at a point which will not interfere with the driving, rafting, and booming of logs." Is there not a decision of the Supreme Court which holds that the rafting of logs presumes the navigability of the stream on which they are rafted?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Oh, yes; the Supreme Court has held that the rafting of logs is navigation, but the War Department, of course, would not require a draw for the rafting of logs.

Mr. MOORE. How large a stream is this at the point where the bridge would be constructed?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. The channel is only a few hundred yards wide, and it is very shallow and rocky.

Mr. MOORE. But some business is done there in the way of rafting logs?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Yes; considerable.

Mr. MOORE. And that would be taken care of?

Mr. STEVENS of Minnesota. Yes; under the general provisions of the law.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question now is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended to read as follows: "An act to authorize the Eastern Maine Railroad to construct a bridge across the Penobscot River between the cities of Bangor and Brewer, in the State of Maine."

On motion of Mr. ADAMSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PATENTS TO NONCOAL LANDS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 1651) to authorize the issuance of absolute and unqualified patents to public lands in certain cases.

The Clerk read the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would ask who has charge of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. TAYLOR], as the gentleman knows, is out of the city.

Mr. MANN. I understand; but my recollection is—I am quite sure of it—that the Senate has passed a similar bill, and if we are to act on this matter at all we ought to act on the Senate bill. I do not know whether the Senate bill is on the Speaker's table or not.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. There is no such bill on the Speaker's table.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

NATIONAL STAR-SPANGLED BANNER CENTENNIAL CELEBRATION.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was House joint resolution 209.

The Clerk read as follows:

Joint resolution (H. J. Res. 209) authorizing the President to extend invitations to foreign Governments to participate, through their accredited diplomatic agents to the United States, in the National Star-Spangled Banner Centennial Celebration.

Resolved, etc., That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to extend invitations to foreign Governments to be represented by their accredited diplomatic agents to the United States at the National Star-Spangled Banner Centennial Celebration, to be held at the city of Baltimore, Md., in September of the year 1914: Provided, That no appropriation shall be granted by the United States for expenses of delegates or for other expenses incurred in connection with said invitation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Does the gentleman wish to ask a question, or would he like to have an explanation of the resolution?

Mr. MANN. I want to give the gentleman a chance to make a plea for his white alley and then to bowl it over.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, this is a resolution introduced by reason of the fact that the President is prohibited from extending invitations to participate in centennials of this kind, or of any kind, by virtue of a provision in the deficiency appropriation act approved March 4, 1913. Now, the city of Baltimore, State of Maryland, proposes to hold a centennial in commemoration of the successful defense of Baltimore at North Point and Fort McHenry; the birth of the Star-Spangled Banner; the achievement of national independence, and a century of peace and progress. We are not asking for any appropriation. We are merely asking that the President be authorized to extend invitations to the diplomats representing the various nations of the globe. We propose to pay all the expenses of their entertainment and everything connected with their invitation, and we are not asking the National Government for any money in this connection.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Is there anything in the law anywhere which forbids the city of Baltimore, or whoever has charge of this celebration, from inviting the diplomatic representatives here?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I take it there is not anything in the law prohibiting the city of Baltimore from inviting anybody it might wish to invite, but there is another provision, or rather another matter, that might be considered, and that is that an invitation from the President to participate in a matter of this kind comes with greater dignity and is more apt to be accepted by those gentlemen than if any city should merely invite them.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will remember that not a great while ago a good many Members of Congress went over to Philadelphia to take part in the celebration at Independence Hall, at which the President himself was present, at which a large number of diplomatic representatives were present, all on the invitation of Philadelphia, not on the invitation of the United States. Now, why can not Baltimore do as well?

Mr. LINTHICUM. Baltimore can do as well and, no doubt, will do the same thing.

Mr. MANN. I think likely it will.

Mr. LINTHICUM. But we should certainly like to have an invitation extended by the President, as it is more apt to be accepted by the diplomats.

Mr. MANN. What would the gentleman think if the diplomatic representatives were to receive this kind of an invitation from the President or the Secretary of State, stating that Congress has authorized him to invite them to attend this celebration at Baltimore, but not at the expense of the Government?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I do not take it that the President or the Secretary of State would do a thing of that kind. I think that many gentlemen in this House have been invited by Baltimore and have gone there, and I do not think there has been any question on that point, nor do I think it has been intimated there would be any expense; but when the diplomats are invited by the President to attend, there is no doubt that Baltimore and the State of Maryland will do the rest, and very handsomely, too.

Mr. MANN. But here is an invitation by authority of an act of Congress, stating, "Gentlemen, we invite you to a great occasion over in Baltimore, but we will not even give you a luncheon."

A MEMBER. Nor a cigar.

Mr. MANN. But I am not in favor of extending an invitation of that kind. Baltimore ought to feel proud to extend her own invitations to the diplomatic representatives of foreign countries directly. They ought not to have invitations from the President of the United States, and especially we should not say, "We send you this invitation to come here at your own expense."

Mr. LINTHICUM. I do not think the gentleman has any idea the President would invite them and say that they were to come at their own expense.

Mr. MANN. We say so.

Mr. LINTHICUM. The foreign diplomats will be taken care of by the city of Baltimore, by the centennial commissioners themselves.

Mr. MANN. I have no doubt that the city of Baltimore will invite these gentlemen and that many of them will be delighted at the opportunity to go. That is the proper way to do, and Baltimore is entitled to the honor of having given the invitation.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. I will have to object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] objects.

Mr. LINTHICUM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a résumé of what this centennial is to be, excluding the pictures which are contained therein.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the request?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by printing a statement in connection with the celebration, without the pictures. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to ask the gentleman if the article is the same one that has been sent around broadcast to Members of Congress?

Mr. LINTHICUM. I do not know what article has been sent around to the Members of Congress. It might be that this article has been sent around, but I am sure I have not sent it.

Mr. STAFFORD. How many pages of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD will it occupy?

Mr. LINTHICUM. About three pages. And it gives a succinct report of the battles of Fort McHenry and North Point. It might be useful to the gentleman some day if he wants to refer to data on this subject.

Mr. STAFFORD. If I wanted to get authoritative data, I would not go to some newspaper article, but would go to the original sources. But I will say that a great number of the readers of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD might get some information from the article, and therefore I will not object; but if I desired some of those records, I would not go to some cheap newspaper article.

Mr. LINTHICUM. I will say to the gentleman, it is not a cheap newspaper article.

Mr. STAFFORD. It has the appearance of such.

Mr. LINTHICUM. It is written by Mrs. A. Barneveld Bibbins, Ph. M., and she is one of the best historians in this country.

Mr. STAFFORD. And I regret to say that I am not acquainted with this illustrious woman.

Mr. LINTHICUM. That is the reason I want to put it in the RECORD and have you get acquainted with her.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to printing the article in the RECORD?

There was no objection.

The following is the article:

NATIONAL STAR-SPANGLED BANNER CENTENNIAL.

[Mrs. A. Barneveld Bibbins, Ph. M., chairman historical committee.]

Baltimore will celebrate in September, 1914, the greatest events in her history—events not only of special local significance, but of far-reaching national and international importance.

SIGNIFICANCE OF THE TWO CENTENNIALS—1876 AND 1914.

While the centennial at Philadelphia in 1876 marked the centenary of the Declaration of Independence, the National Star-Spangled Banner Centennial, to be held in Baltimore, September 6 to 14, 1914, will commemorate an even more potential event—the centenary of the achievement of national independence—which had been declared, but not accomplished, 38 years before. In this final outcome, the attainment of national freedom, Baltimore and Maryland played a distinguished and strategic part.

The Declaration of Independence had announced in ringing sentences our political freedom from Great Britain, but it was but a brief period after the Revolution before we discovered we were anything but a free people. Commercially, and upon the high seas, we were still in bondage. Franklin, that shrewd philosopher, declared with his customary astuteness, "The war which closed with the surrender of Cornwallis was but the war of rebellion; we must fight once again to make good our claims to independence."

WHY BALTIMORE THE PLACE?

Why is Baltimore the place and 1914 the time for the celebration of this great epoch-making achievement—the attainment of full and undisputed national freedom? Because—

BALTIMORE VESSELS WERE FIRST IN NATIONAL DEFENSE.

Scarcely had the "war of rebellion" come to an end, when the French Revolution broke out. France and England were soon at war. Our neutral vessels were seized by France, because we refused to become involved in her bloody strife, and our sailors impressed on every sea by the English, incensed by our growing trade rivalry.

President Washington urged the creation of a Navy to protect our commerce. By the authority of Congress he ordered three frigates (the United States, launched July 10, 1797; the Constellation, September 7; and the Constitution, September 20) constructed, of which the famous Constellation (it is expected that this oldest vessel of the Navy, now at Newport, R. I., which made the first captures of importance of the American Nation, and the greatest since the famous Revolutionary capture of the Serapis by Paul Jones in the Bon Homme Richard, and which thus made our flag respected on the high seas, will be restored by Congress and brought back on September 7 to the waters of the Patapsco, where she was launched 117 years before, to participate in the Star-Spangled Banner Centennial), built and manned in Baltimore in 1797, by her splendid victories over the French Insurgente (1799) and La Vengeance (1800) brought peace with France, won respect for the flag, and long remained the most popular vessel of the Navy.

When war again broke out between France and England, the latter's offenses became worse than before, and soon this overweening sea power had seized 1,000 of our vessels and 6,000 of our sailors. Under such harassing conditions, our boasted "independence" became a by-word and reproach. Where was freedom when our ships and seamen were seized and enslaved in our own waters, and sometimes in our very ports?

CHESAPEAKE SHIPS AND SEAMEN FIRST ATTACKED.

The first of the series of most flagrant outrages on the American flag had occurred when the merchant ship Baltimore, built in Baltimore—as was the sloop of war Maryland, presented to the United States Navy by Baltimore merchants at a cost of $70,000—was surrounded by a British squadron and 55 of her seamen taken off as English "deserters," though all but five were afterwards returned to her. This was followed by the no less outrageous

"AFFAIR OF THE CHESAPEAKE."

This affront occurred in 1806, when a Chesapeake-built frigate leaving Hampton Roads was followed by the British ship Leopard and held up by a search for "deserters." When Commodore Barron, of Virginia, refused to let his crew be mustered for inspection, the Leopard poured a broadside into the Chesapeake, which was followed by three additional broadsides within 15 minutes. Three American seamen were killed and 18 wounded, including the commodore. As the Chesapeake was unprepared, it being in time of peace, Barron ordered his flag hauled down. The captain of the Leopard refused to receive the Chesapeake as a prize, but carried off four men whom he claimed as "deserters" and subjected to a severe lashing. Three of these men, through the resolute intervention of the noted Baltimorean, William Pinkney, then minister to England, were restored to the Chesapeake in Boston Harbor in 1812, in time to avenge this gross abuse in the war against Great Britain.

A BALTIMORE MAN WROTE THE DECLARATION OF WAR.

Minister Pinkney's ardent patriotism, which had been repeatedly incensed by his long experience with England's duplicity and the impossibility of redress of grievances, would stand no more. He demanded his recall by President Madison, and promptly took "inamicable leave" of England. On his return to America, Madison made him Attorney General of the United States, and it was his hand which wrote the declaration of war, which consisted of the single direct and explicit statement: "That war be, and the same is hereby, declared to exist between the United States and Great Britain."

OUR MERCHANT MARINE OUR STRONGEST RESERVE FORCE.

The lack of preparation was painfully apparent. The Federal Treasury was nearly empty from the loss of customs revenues by nonintercourse, and the Army and Navy were pitifully inadequate. With a newly improvised Navy of 16 vessels and 3,000 seamen America was to contend against an imperial sea force of 144,000 seasoned men and nearly 1,000 vessels, 200 of which were larger than any American craft.

The Navy had, however, in reserve a large number of the best-built craft and most expert seamen in the world in her merchant marine and fishing fleets, and these were to furnish the backbone of the war and the relentless force with which England was to meet her reckoning.

THE WAR OF 1812 WAS WON ON SEA, NOT LAND.

The war was marked by brilliant sea victories and disastrous land defeats. In the Revolution, 22,000 prisoners were taken on land, 6,000 at sea. In the War of 1812, the order was reversed—6,000 were taken on land and 30,000 at sea. In the Revolution, 800 British prizes were captured by Government vessels and privateers, valued at $23,800,000. In the War of 1812, about 1,650 prizes were captured, valued at $45,600,000. Of these, Baltimore-manned Government vessels and privateers captured 575 prizes, over one-third of the whole, valued at $20,000,000, or nearly one-half the value of all prizes taken.

MARYLAND GAVE TO THE WAR MORE OFFICERS, SHIPS, AND SEAMEN THAN ANY OTHER STATE.

More officers: Maryland, chiefly Baltimore, supplied 46 officers, or nearly one-fifth of all the 240 officers of the American Navy. Maryland and Virginia, which furnished respectively 46 and 42 officers to the Navy, supplied more than all New England's 42 (Massachusetts, 20. New Hampshire, 5; Rhode Island, 11; Connecticut, 6) with New York (17), New Jersey (22), and Delaware (6), combined. The Chesapeake region thus furnished 88 officers, or over one-third of all in the Navy in the War of 1812. (Roosevelt, Naval War of 1812.)

BALTIMORE SUPPLIED MOST SHIPS AND SEAMEN.

While New York equipped 51 privateers, Salem 40, Boston 32, and Philadelphia 14, Baltimore sent out 61 privateers, more than from any other seaport. The State of Maryland equipped over 100 privateers. The number of seamen was also greater than from elsewhere and in proportion to the vessels.

BALTIMORE CAPTURED MOST PRIZES AT GREATEST LOSS TO THE ENEMY.

These 61 Baltimore privateers captured 525, or twice as many prizes as all the Government vessels combined, and, in fact, nearly one-third of all the captures made. Out of a total of 1,650 British prizes, Baltimore men, on both privateers and Government vessels, captured 575 prizes, or over one-third of all taken.

ENGLAND'S COMMERCE BUILT ON CHESAPEAKE TRADE.

The money loss to England of these 61 Baltimore privateer captures alone was over $16,000,000. In these seizures Great Britain was struck in her most vital possession—her commerce—a possession which had been originally built up and expanded by no factor so much as by the tobacco trade of the Chesapeake.

MARYLAND MEN COMMANDED THE AMERICAN NAVY.

In this final conflict for freedom, won upon the seas, Commodore John Rodgers, of Baltimore, commanded the North Atlantic Squadron of the Navy, and Commodore Stephen Decatur, jr., a native of Berlin, on the Eastern Shore, commanded the South Atlantic Squadron, both of them Chesapeake-bred men.

MARYLAND MEN FIRST INTO ACTION.

Maryland ships and seamen were first to sea and first into action, both upon Government vessels and privateers.

On June 20, 1812, a half hour after he received word that war had been declared by Congress on the 18th, Commodore John Rodgers, a native of Havre de Grace, and later a resident of Baltimore, put to sea in charge of the American squadron in pursuit of the British fleet, with Capt. David Porter, of Baltimore, a close second, in command of the frigate Essex.

A MARYLAND MAN FIRED THE FIRST SHOT OF THE WAR.

Commodore Rodgers, on board his flagship, the President, when two days out encountered the British ship Belvidera. He sighted and with his own hand fired the first gun of the war (the first shot on land was fired a month later at Sacketts Harbor), hulling the enemy. The third shot, also fired by the commodore, crashed into the stern chaser, killing two men and wounding several. American gun foundries were yet in their infancy, and the fourth gun, fired by Lieut. Gamble, burst, shattering the forecastle deck, throwing Rodgers into the air and then heavily upon the deck, fracturing his leg, while in the confusion the Belvidera threw over her boats and escaped, to give positive notice of the war to the British at Halifax.

BALTIMORE MEN MADE THE FIRST CAPTURES ON GOVERNMENT VESSELS AND PRIVATEERS.

Capt. David Porter, of the Essex, took several prizes, one a shipload of British soldiers, which was equivalent to a victory on a battlefield. She was later fired upon by the British ship Alert. As her cannonades were not suited to long-distance firing, she waited till the enemy approached, then suddenly opened her broadsides, and eight minutes later the Alert struck her colors. The first capture by a privateer was probably made by the Dash, of Baltimore, which captured the British Government schooner Whiting in Hampton Roads, with dispatches from Great Britain to the United States, its captain being unaware up to that time of the declaration of war. About the same day, seven privateers sailed from Baltimore, including the Rossie, commanded by the intrepid Commodore Barney.

COMMODORE BARNEY CAPTURES 15 RICH PRIZES; CAPT. BOYLE OVER 80.

After a cruise of 45 days, ending August 30, Barney had captured 15 vessels, valued at $1,289,000, which, with additional prizes up to November 10, when he returned to Baltimore, gave him 217 prisoners, with 3,689 tons of shipping, valued at $1,500,000.

The Rolla captured eight vessels—the rich Cork fleet—worth considerably over $2,000,000, with 150 prisoners. The brilliant captures and hairbreadth escapes of the Comet and Chasseur, under Capt. Boyle—who, in the latter, the "Pride of Baltimore," is said to have taken 80 prizes—of the Dolphin, Globe, High Flyer, Nonsuch, Liberty, Wasp, Revenge, and many other Baltimore vessels, read like a chapter from the Arabian Nights.

A CHESAPEAKE CREW CAPTURES THE FIRST BRITISH FRIGATE.

On July 12 the Constitution, better known as Old Ironsides, after receiving a new Chesapeake crew of 450 men at Annapolis, sailed under Capt. Isaac Hull, of Boston. After three days' chase by a British squadron of five vessels, by the most skillful seamanship in naval history, she eluded her pursuers. Shortly afterwards she completely destroyed in 30 minutes the famous frigate Guerriere, captured from Napoleon by Lord Nelson at the Battle of the Nile, in 1798. The Constitution lost 7 killed and 7 wounded, the Guerriere 15 killed and 64 wounded, and the rest of her 300 men were taken prisoners.

A CHESAPEAKE CAPTAIN CAPTURES SECOND BRITISH FRIGATE.

Commodore Stephen Decatur, jr., in command of the United States, after a two hours' conflict, compelled the captain of the frigate Macedonian to haul down his colors to the "Stars and Stripes." Thirty-six of her officers and crew of 300 were killed and 68 wounded. The United States lost 5 killed and 6 wounded.

A CHESAPEAKE CREW CAPTURES THIRD BRITISH FRIGATE.

The Constitution, after changing captains, to afford Capt. William Bainbridge a chance for laurels—but with the same Chesapeake crew that captured the Guerriere—on December 29, after a fierce fight, blew up the rich prize, the frigate Java, taking 500 prisoners (48 killed, 105 wounded), with the outgoing governor of Bombay and all his staff. The Chesapeake crew lost 9 killed and 20 wounded. The first year closed with the loss of three of the finest British warships and a host of smaller vessels.

ENGLAND'S STERN RESOLVE IN 1813: "BLOCKADE THE CHESAPEAKE AND ENTIRE SEACOAST; CONQUER AMERICA BY INVASION."

After her bitter losses during the first six months of the war, England resolved to blockade the whole American coast, beginning with the Chesapeake, the key to the interior. She planned to impoverish the seaport towns, and thus strike a blow at the center of our commercial strength. Then, by uniting her forces from Lake Champlain and the Chesapeake in the heart of the country, she would cut off and neutralize New England, already strongly opposed to the war, and thus coerce and once again subjugate America.

BALTIMORE'S BLOCKADE LOSSES ENORMOUS.

Baltimore's commerce, unsuppressed by England, had since the Revolution rapidly sprung into being, and she had become the third port in the Union, though founded a century after New York and Boston and a half century after Philadelphia. Had Baltimore been disposed to take a narrow view of the war, the loss to her commerce would have justified her in the most hostile opposition. Maryland's export trade, of which Baltimore furnished the most part, had fallen from $14,580,000 in 1805 to $4,500,000 in 1811, and to $238,000 in 1814, after the blockade of the Chesapeake the year previous. Yet, in spite of her losses and privation, her ships, as noted, were first into action and her captures most fatal to the enemy. England was well aware that the "nest of pirates" at the head of the Chesapeake was the conspicuous source of her humiliation and losses; hence her determination to destroy this city.

BALTIMORE THE TARGET FOR BRITISH VENGEANCE.

That Baltimore, because of her zeal and loyalty, was to be singled out for immediate attack is shown in a London paper of June 17: "The grand expedition preparing at Bordeaux for America is destined for the Chesapeake direct. Our little army in Canada will at the same instant be directed to make a movement in the direction of the Susquehanna, and both armies will therefore in all probability meet at Washington, Philadelphia, or Baltimore. The seat of the American Government, but more particularly Baltimore, is to be the immediate object of attack. * * * Our naval and military commanders have no power to conclude any armistice or suspension of arms. They carry with them certain terms, which will be offered to the American Government at the point of the bayonet."

On August 16 Cockburn's squadron was reenforced by a fleet of 21 vessels under Admiral Cochrane, and soon joined by another under Commodore Malcolm. Before their arrival gallant Commodore Barney, with the schooner Scorpion and a flotilla of 13 armed barges and 500 men from Baltimore, had seriously damaged the enemy at the mouth of the Patuxent. Threatened by the 74-gun ship Dragon, he moved the flotilla up the river to St. Leonards Bay, and here fiercely chastised the foe, who lost several boats and many killed. The British pursued the flotilla up above Benedict, only to find it already in flames, at Barney's order, when he and the brave flotilla men hastened through Upper Marlboro to the defense of Washington, where, on the rout of the militia, amid the totally inadequate preparations of the Government for the battle at Bladensburg, they held the British in check for an hour, with a loss to them of 500 killed and wounded, and "gave us," as Gen. Ross told Cochrane in Barney's presence, "the only fighting we have had." After the humiliating sack of Washington the British turned with renewed ardor to the attack on Baltimore, to which the helpless Government offered no assistance, despite her previous generosity and aid.

BALTIMORE LOANED GOVERNMENT $3,000,000.

At the outbreak of the war Baltimore merchants had loaned the bankrupt General Government $3,000,000, and this, later assumed by the municipal government, became the foundation of the city's first municipal debt. Finding none of this was available for her own local defense, Baltimore raised another $600,000, and with this and added loans fortified stalwart Fort McHenry, sunk hulks across the harbor from the fort to the Lazaretto, where Commodore Rodgers, in command of the naval defenses, planted an effective battery, as also a six-gun battery at Fort Babcock (now Riverside Park) and Fort Covington (now Port Covington), in the rear of Fort McHenry. (History of Baltimore, War of 1812, Vol. I. "The Story of the Star-Spangled Banner" will later be published in book form by the Centennial Commission.)

BALTIMORE'S DEFENSES TERRIFY ENEMY.

Scientifically built fortifications over a mile in length, planned by that brave Revolutionary hero, Gen. Samuel Smith, commander in chief of the forces, were thrown up from the harbor, along Hampstead Hill (now Patterson Park) and northward around the site of the present Hopkins Hospital. Behind these were mounted over a hundred cannon, with 10,000 troops. All through the week after the British burned Washington and retreated down the bay to "deceive the Baltimoreans and throw them off their guard," the citizens rallied as one man to the defense under resolute Gen. Smith. They toiled day after day, young and old alike, with pick, shovel, and wheelbarrow, until such an appalling armament greeted the British when, after the Battle of North Point, they arrived within sight of it that they retreated to their ships, affrighted and undone, and without a single shot.

BALTIMORE MILITIA EAGER FOR ENCOUNTER.

The Americans were too eager for the encounter to await their coming, however, and as soon as news reached Gen. Smith of the anchorage at North Point of the British fleet of 50 vessels—probably the most formidable fleet ever in American waters—Gen. Stricker begged to be allowed to advance with a brigade of 3,000 men and draw them on.

THE FOE PICKED VETERANS OF EUROPE.

The men who landed from the ships on September 12, 1814, were the picked soldiers of Europe, the Duke of Wellington's "Invincibles," Lord Nelson's victorious marines, fresh from the conquest over Napoleon, the greatest conqueror since Alexander. Napoleon's recent abdication and retirement to the island of Elba left England free to turn her united powers upon what seemed the doomed city upon the Patapsco, guarded by militiamen, most of whom had never seen a foe before.

Yet these fearless defenders of their firesides waited not for the foe behind protected earthworks, but sturdily went forth to meet the conquerors of Napoleon, advancing in relentless phalanx up the ancient North Point Road.

After an hour's march Gen. Ross halted his army, about 7,000 strong, and with seven other officers drew aside to Gorsuch's farmhouse to take their ease and order breakfast.

Gen. Stricker, learning of the "insolence of the enemy," sent a little volunteer skirmish party of 300 to draw them forth.

Ross could not believe the Americans would dare act on the offensive. "He rode forward to satisfy himself, when an American rifleman singled him out; he fired, and the ball, true to its mark, pierced his side." Col. Brooke, on whom the command suddenly devolved, became extremely cautious and met the little band of 1,700 as if opposed to a great disciplined army.

For one hour and a half this little force of raw militiamen held in check a skilled veteran army four times their number, and at the close of the battle the British had lost over 500 veterans to the 150 militiamen they so affected to despise, only 20 of whom were killed, the rest being wounded and taken prisoners.

Baltimore, by her matchless defense, had saved the Nation, and the prospective attack on Philadelphia and New York was abandoned. While the British retreated to their ships, the attack on Fort McHenry, as if in hopeless vengeance, was fiercely renewed.

THE FORT WILL NOT SURRENDER.

Sixteen bomb and rocket vessels had bombarded the fort from 6 until 3 o'clock on the 13th, throwing a constant shower of rockets and bombs, the latter weighing 220 pounds, while Col. Armistead, unable from the enemy's distance to return the fire, except once when they came nearer, could only conjecture their fate should a bomb reach the powder magazine, which he knew was not bombproof. As the army was retreating a fiercer bombardment than before was executed, and under the cover of darkness, as a last resort, several rocket vessels and barges, with 1,250 picked men, passed south of Fort McHenry and attempted to land and assail the town from the Ferry Branch. After passing the fort they threw up rockets of rejoicing and to light a landing place. This discovered their whereabouts to Commodore Rodgers's invincible crew at Fort Covington, under Lieut. Newcombe, and Barney's flotilla men, under brave Lieut. John Webster, at Fort Babcock. These forts rained a pitiless hail on the intruders; one barge was sunk, with all on board, and the rest compelled to retire.

Foiled in this last strategy to obtain a landing, the enemy precipitately retired, battered and crippled, under the fire from Fort McHenry and the Lazaretto. At a safe distance they continued the bombardment till near morning—in all, about 25 hours, during which there were thrown between 1,500 and 1,800 great bombs, 400 of which are said to have fallen within Fort McHenry.

FRANCIS SCOTT KEY'S INSPIRED SONG OF DELIVERANCE.

In the midst of this fierce cannonade, which might at any moment mean ruin and destruction to the beloved city which contained his loved ones, and with its fall endanger the fate of the whole seacoast, there stood upon the deck of the Minden a devoted patriot who, true to the behest of friendship, had risked peril and exposure to secure the release of his friend, Dr. William Beanes. Dr. Beanes's spacious house at Upper Marlboro had been used by Ross and the British officers as their headquarters in the march to and from Washington. The good doctor was so incensed by the burning of Washington on August 25 that after the British left his home for their ships he indignantly seized some marauders who lingered to carry off booty and was himself carried off to the fleet in return.

Key and his friends had paced the deck all the night of September 13, knowing that while the bombardment continued the beleaguered fort had not surrendered. It ceased before day, and for a time they were left in most anxious suspense. Finally the dawn broke, and eagerly peering through the mist they saw, to their joy, that "the flag was still there."

A FREE FLAG AND A FREE PEOPLE.

As they beheld the enemy's wounded carried to their ships and the fleet hoist sail, preparing to depart, baffled and defeated, the great folds of the mammoth flag floated triumphantly on the breeze, the prophetic emblem of a free people.

Key's pent-up emotions, stirred to the depths by patriotic fervor and devotion, burst forth in an anthem of joy, and his song of rejoicing, The Star-Spangled Banner, has become the Te Deum of the Nation.

While they lingered on the deck of the vessel Key wrote down a few lines on the back of a letter and completed it in the rowboat on the way to the shore. The next morning he took the song to his brother-in-law, Judge Nicholson, who had just returned from the defense of Fort McHenry. He suggested the air "Anacreon in Heaven," then a popular melody. It was taken to the printing office near by, and within an hour or two handbills containing the stirring poem were all over town, and as a spontaneous expression of the people's feelings it took its place as a national song.

The British fleet moved sullenly out of the Patapsco, chastised and vanquished. "Admiral Cochrane, on the Royal Tonnant, the 80-gun flagship captured from Napoleon by Nelson, in 1798, at the Battle of the Nile, conveyed Gen. Ross's body to Halifax, where it was buried with great pomp on September 29 in St. Paul's graveyard. "No one talked of a future enterprise," says Officer Gleig, "nor was the slightest rumor circulated as to the next point of attack."

(Parliament voted Ross a public monument in St. Paul's Cathedral, London, and later a marble sarcophagus was erected at Halifax bearing the remarkable statement that Gen. Ross was killed "at the commencement of an action which terminated in the defeat and rout of the troops of the United States near Baltimore, Sept. 12, 1814.")

THE REPULSE AT BALTIMORE INSURED PEACE.

While Gen. Ross's remains were carried to Halifax and "the fleet and army rested idle, like a watch without its mainspring," on the broad bosom of the Chesapeake, which had witnessed their repulse, swift messengers bore the news of the defeat of the great expedition (and that at Lake Champlain on September 11) to London and to the city of Ghent. With the arrival of these fateful tidings the American commissioners were for the first time in long weeks able to secure favorable terms of peace which the Nation could accept.

A BALTIMORE MAN BROUGHT THE FIRST NEWS OF PEACE.

The treaty of peace was signed at Ghent December 24, 1814, and the official messengers arrived in New York with the good news February 11, 1815. Before they could reach Washington Christopher Hughes, jr., of Baltimore, secretary of the commission and our former brilliant "diplomat without a rival" at Stockholm, sailed direct for the Chesapeake in the schooner Transit, and, landing at Annapolis, bore the glad news of peace to Washington and the Nation before the ratified copy of the treaty arrived there.

(The remains of Christopher Hughes, jr., who brought the first news of peace to America at the close of the War of 1812, rest in the same tomb with his brother-in-law, Col. Armistead, the defender of Fort McHenry, in Old St. Paul's graveyard, Baltimore, but a few feet from the resting place of the Paul Revere of Maryland, Col. Tench Tilghman, Washington's aid-de-camp, who carried the first news of peace and Cornwallis's surrender from Yorktown to Congress at Philadelphia at the close of the Revolution.)

Since the above sequence of events marked the final achievement of independence, Baltimore is the place and 1914 the time, not only for their commemoration but for the erection of adequate and permanent memorials to the men who "preserved us a Nation."

ILLITERACY IN THE UNITED STATES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 2494) to investigate illiteracy among the adult population of the United States and the means of eliminating or reducing the same.

The bill was read in full.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. I reserve the right to object. I desire to be heard.

Mr. TOWNER. Mr. Speaker, this bill does not carry any appropriation. The law giving the Bureau of Education and the commissioner authority to act is very limited. The authority under the statute which is given to him is limited in fact to the collection of statistics showing the condition and progress of education in the various States and Territories, and diffusing such information. This authority is not sufficient to enable the Commissioner of Education or the bureau to do anything toward furthering and encouraging the work that has been undertaken in the United States to wipe out adult illiteracy. It is not expected that this bill will do anything except to enable the Bureau of Education to take its part in so far as it ought to do so in the direction, encouragement, and assistance in this line of work.

Mr. COX. Will the gentleman yield for a query?

Mr. TOWNER. Yes, sir; I will be glad to do so.

Mr. COX. Was not the direct foundation of this bill for the sole object of getting Congress to make appropriation for this purpose?
